

John Adams.

A.27.1.1.

H I S T O R Y

OFTHE

DECLINE AND FALL

OF THE

Ode 10 33 3

ROMANEMPIRE.

By EDWARD GIBBON, Efg;

VOLUME THE FIRST.

Jam provideo animo, velut qui, proximis littori vadis inducti, mare pedibus ingrediuntur, quicquid progredior, in vactiorem me altitudinem, ac velut profundum invehi; et crefcere pene opus, quod prima quæque perficiendo minui videbatur.

THE THIRD EDITION.

LONDON:

PRINTED FOR W. STRAHAN; AND T. CADELL, IN THE STRAND.

MDCCLXXVII.

ACAMS 33.3 U.

P R E F A C E.

T is not my intention to detain the reader by expatiating on the variety, or the importance of the subject, which I have undertaken to treat: since the merit of the choice would serve to render the weakness of the execution still more apparent, and still less excusable. But as I have presumed to lay before the Public a sirst volume only of the History of the Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire, it will perhaps be expected that I should explain, in a few words, the nature and limits of my general plan.

The memorable feries of revolutions, which, in the course of about thirteen centuries, gradually undermined, and at length destroyed, the solid sabric of Roman greatness, may, with some propriety, be divided into the three sollowing periods.

A 2 I. The

I. The first of these periods may be traced from the age of Trajan and the Antonines, when the Roman monarchy having attained its full strength and maturity, began to verge towards its decline; and will extend to the subversion of the western empire, by the barbarians of Germany and Scythia, the rude ancestors of the most polished nations of modern Europe. This extraordinary revolution, which subjected Rome to the power of a Gothic conqueror, was completed about the beginning of the fixth century.

II. The fecond period of the Decline and Fall of Rome, may be supposed to commence with the reign of Justinian, who by his laws, as well as by his victories, restored a transfent splendour to the Eastern Empire. It will comprehend the invasion of Italy by the Lombards; the conquest of the Asiatic and African provinces by the Arabs, who embraced the religion of Mahemet; the revolt of the Roman people against the feeble princes of Constantinople; and the elevation of Charlemagne, who, in the year eight hundred, dred, established the second, or German Empire of the west.

III. The last and longest of these periods includes about feven centuries and a half; from the revival of the Western Empire, till the taking of Constantinople by the Turks, and the extinction of a degenerate race of princes, who continued to assume the titles of Cæfar and Augustus, after their dominions were contracted to the limits of a fingle city; in which the language, as well as manners, of the ancient Romans, had been long fince forgotten. The writer who should undertake to relate the events of this period, would find himself obliged to enter into the general history of the Crusades, as far as they contributed to the ruin of the Greek Empire; and he would fearcely be able to restrain his curiosity from making some inquiry into the state of the city of Rome, during the darkness and confusion of the middle ages.

As I have ventured perhaps too haftily to commit to the prefs, a work, which, in every fense of the word, word, deserves the epithet of imperfect, I confider myself as contracting an engagement to finish, most probably in a second volume, the first of these memorable periods; and to deliver to the Public, the complete history of the Decline and Fall of Rome, from the age of the Antonines, to the subversion of the Western Empire. With regard to the subsequent periods, though I may entertain some hopes, I dare not presume to give any affurances. The execution of such an extensive plan, as I have traced out, and which might perhaps be comprehended in about four volumes, would fill up the long interval between ancient and modern history; but it would require many years of health, of leisure, and of perseverance.

Bentinck-Street, May 1, 1777.

P. S. Before I difmiss this Third Edition from the Press, I think it incumbent on me to declare, that the indulgence of the candid Public encourages me to prosecute a laborious Work, which has been judged not wholly unworthy of their attention.

ADVERTISEMENT.

ILIGENCE and accuracy are the only merits which an historical writer may ascribe to himself; if any merit indeed can be assumed from the performance of an indispensable duty. I may therefore be allowed to say, that I have carefully examined all the original materials that could illustrate the subject which I had undertaken to treat. Should I ever complete the extensive design which has been sketched out in the Presace, I might perhaps conclude it with a critical account of the authors consulted during the progress of the whole work; and however such an attempt might incur the censure of oftentation, I am persuaded, that it would be susceptible of entertainment as well as information.

At present I shall content myself with a single observation. The Biographers, who, under the reigns of Diocletian and Constantine, composed, or rather compiled, the lives of the emperors, from Hadrian to the sons of Carus, are usually mentioned under the names of Ælius Spartianus, Julius Capitolinus, Ælius Lampridius, Vulcatius Gallicanus, Trebellius Pollio, and Flavius Vopiscus. But there is so much perplexity in the titles of the MSS.; and so many disputes have arisen among the critics (see Fabricius Biblioth. Latin. I. iii. c. 6) concerning their number, their names, and their respective property, that for the most part I have quoted them without distinction, under the general and well known title of the Augustan History.

TABLE OF CONTENTS

OF THE

FIRST VOLUME.

С Н А Р. 1.	A.D. Pa	ıge
	Auxiliaries	18
The Extent and Military Force of the Em-	Artillery	19
pire, in the Age of the Antonines.		b.
pire, in the rige of the Antonines.	March	20
A. D. Page	Number and Disposition of the Legions i	b.
-NEED OF HOMEON	Navy	22
	Amount of the whole Establishment	23
	View of the Provinces of the Roman Em-	J
	pire i	ь.
Conquest of Britain was the first Excep-	Spain i	b.
Conquest of Dacia, the second Excep-	Gaul	24
tion to it 6	Britain	25
		ь.
Conquests of Trajan in the East - 7 Refigned by his Successor Adrian 8	The Danube and Illyrian Frontier	26
	Rhætia	27
Contrast of Hadrian and Antoninus Pius 9 Pacific System of Hadrian and the two		b.
	Dalmatia	28
Antonines 10 Defensive Wars of Marcus Antoninus ib.	Mæsia and Dacia i	ь.
Military Effablishment of the Roman Em-	Thrace, Macedonia, and Greece i	Ь.
perors 11		zg
Difcipline 12		30
Exercises 13		31
The Legions under the Emperors - 15		b.
Arms ib.	The Mediterranean, with its Islands	3.2
Cavalry 17		33
Vol. J.	*a C H A

C O N T E N T S.

	A	Page
C H A P. II.		Introduction of Fruits, &e ib.
	7	The Vine 64
Of the Union and internal Prosperity of th	he	The Olive ib.
Roman Empire in the Age of the Ante	0-	Artificial Grafs ib.
nines.		General Plenty 65
mnest		Arts of Luxury ib.
	age	Foreign Trade - 66
Principles of Government -	34	Gold and Silver 67
Universal Spirit of Toleration - i	b.	General Felicity 68
Of the People	35	Decline of Courage - 69
Of Philosophers	36	of Genius ib.
	38	Degeneracy 70
In the Provinces i	ib.
	39
Freedom of Rome	40	C H A P. III.
	41	Of the Constitution of the Roman Empire,
The Provinces	42
Colonies, and Municipal Towns -	43	in the Age of the Antonines.
Division of the Latin and the Greek Pro-		A. D. Page
vinces	45 '
General Use of both the Greek and Latin		Idea of a Monarchy 72
Languages	47	Situation of Augustus ib.
	48	He reforms the Senate 73
	ib.	Refigns his usurped Power - 74
	49	Is prevailed upon to resume it under the
	56	Title of Emperor, or General - ib.
Populousness of the Roman Empire	51	Power of the Roman Generals - 75
	52	Lieutenants of the Emperor 77
	53	Division of the Provinces between the strain, by mining the strain of the strain o	ib.	Emperor and the Senate - ib.
Example of Herodes Atticus -	54	The former preserves his Military Com-
	55	mand, and guards, in Rome itself 78
Most of the Roman Monuments for public		Confular and Tribunitian Powers - ib.
	56	Imperial Prerogatives - 80
Temples, Theatres, Aqueducts,	57	The Magistrates 81 The Senate 82 Number and Greatness of the Cities of the
	58	General Idea of the Imperial System 83
In Italy	ib.	Court of the Emperors ib.
	59	Deification 84
Africa	ib.	Titles of Augustus and Casar - 85
Afia	60	Character and Policy of Augustus - 86
Roman Roads	61	Image of Liberty for the People 87
	62	Attempts of the Senate after the Death of
	ib.	Caligula ib.
Improvement of Agriculture in the West-		Image of Government for the Armies 88
ern Countries of the Empire -	63	Their Obedience 89
		Defignation

A.D.	age	A.D. Page
Defignation of a Successor -	89	His Ignorance and low Sports ib.
	90	Hunting of wild Beafts - 114
	ib.	Commodus displays his Skill in the Am-
The Race of the Cæfars, and Flavian Fa-	10.	phitheatre 115
		Acts as a Gladiator - 116
	ib.	His Infamy and Extravagance 117
	91	Confpiracy of his Domestics - ib.
	92	192 Death of Commodus - 118
	ib.	Choice of Pertinax for Emperor ib.
	93
Character and Reign of Pius -	94	He is acknowledged by the Prætorian
of Marcus	ib.	Guards 119
Happiness of the Romans -	96	193 And by the Scnate 120
	ib.	The Memory of Commodus declared in-
Memory of Tiberius, Caligula, Nero,		famous - ib.
172	97	Legal Jurisdiction of the Senate over the Peculiar Mifery of the Romans under their	91	Emperors - 121 Virtues of Pertinax - ib ib.
	98	He endeavours to reform the State 122
	99	His Regulations ib.
Extent of their Empire left them no Place	99	1115 1 Opularity - 124
	00	Discontent of the Prætorians - ib.
of Keruge	03	A Confpiracy prevented - ib.
C H A P. IV.		193 Murder of Pertinax by the Prætorians 125
C 11 11 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1
The Cruelty, Follies, and Murder of Con	777 -	CHAP. V.
modus.—Election of Pertinax.—His A		C 11 11 1 . V.
		Public Sale of the Empire to Didius Julitempts to reform the State.—His Affal	1/2-	anus by the Prætorian Guards Cledius nation by the Prætorian Guards.
		Albinus in Britain, Pescennius Niger in age.	Syria, and Septimius Severus in Pannonia, 02	declare against the Murderers of Perti-
	ib.	0 ,
	03	nax.—Civil Wars and Victory of Severus
	04	over his three Rivals Relaxation of
	ib.	Discipline New Maxims of Govern-
	05
	06	ment.
Hatred and Cruelty of Commodus to-		A. D. Page wards the Senate 1	07	Proportion of the military Force to the
The Quintilian Brothers -	ib.	Number of the People - 127
186 The Minister Perennis - 1	∈8	The Institution of the Prætorian Guards 128
Revolt of Maternus - 1	09	Their Camp, Strength, and Confidence ib.
	10	Their specious Claims - 129
	ib.	They offer the Empire to Sale
	11	193 It is purchased by Julian - 131
	13	Julian is acknowledged by the Senate ib.
Dinotate Fielding of Commodus 1	• )	* a 2 Taken a 2 laken

A.D.	Page	verus Licentiousness of the Army	v
Takes Possession of the Palace	- 132	General State of the Roman Finances.
The Public Difcontent -	ib.	General State of the Roman I mances.
The Armies of Britain, Syria, and	Pan-	A, D,	Page
nonia, declare against Julian	133	Greatness and Discontent of Severus	155
Clodius Albinus in Britain -	ib.	IIis Wife the Empress Julia -	ib.
Pescennius Niger in Syria -	135	Their two Sons, Caracalla and Geta	156.
Pannonia and Dalmatia -	136	Their mutual Aversion to each other	157
193 Septimius Severus declared Empero	r by	Three Emperors	ib.
the Pannonian Legions -	137	208 The Caledonian War -	ib.
Marches into Italy -	138	Fingal and his Heroes	158
Advances towards Rome -	ib.	Contrast of the Caledonians and the Ro-
Diffress of Julian -	- 139	mans	159
His uncertain Conduct -	ib.	Ambition of Caracalla -	ib.
Is deferted by the Prætorians	140	211 Death of Severus, and Accession of his two
Is condemned and executed by Ord		Sons	160 ib.
the Senate	141	Jealoufy and Hatred of the two Emperors
Difgrace of the Prætorian Guards	ib.	Fruitless Negociation for dividing the Empire between them -	161
Funeral and Apotheons of Pertinax	142	212 Murder of Geta	162
193-197. Success of Severus against I	ib.	Remorfe and Cruelty of Caracalla	163
and against Albinus -		Death of Papinian -	165
Conduct of the two civil Wars	143 ib.	213 His Tyranny extended over the whole
Arts of Severus	- ib.	Empire	166
Towards Niger Towards Albinus		Relaxation of Discipline -	167
Towards Albinus - Event of the civil Wars -	144	217 Murder of Caracalla -	168
Decided by one or two Battles	145 346	Imitation of Alexander -	160
Siege of Byzantium -	147	Election and Character of Macrinus	ib.
Deaths of Niger and Albinus	148	Discontent of the Senate -	170
Cruel Confequences of the civil War		Discontent of the Army -	171
Animofity of Severus against Severu		Macrinus attempts a Reformation of the
The Wifdom and Justice of his		Army	172
vernment	149	Death of the Empress Julia -	173
General Peace and Prosperity	150	Education, Pretentions, and Revolt of
R Invation of military Discipline	ib.	Elagabalus, called at first Bassianus
New Efiablishment of the Præte	orian	and Antoninus	ib.
Guards	151	218 Defeat and Death of Macrinus	174
The Office of Pratorian Prafect	152	Elagabalus writes to the Senate	175
The Senate opprefied by military	Def-	210 Picture of Elagabalus -	176
potifm	. 153	His Superstition	177
New Maxims of the Imperial Prerigg	tive ib.	His profligate and effeminate Luxury	178
		Contempt of Decency, which distinguish-
CHAP. VI.		ed the Roman Tyrants - Difcontents of the Army -	130.
C 11 .1 1 . VI.			ib.
The Death of Severus Tyranny o	f Cara-	221 Alexander Severus declared Cæfar	ib.
calla -Ujurpation of Micrinus		222 Sedition of the Guards, and Murder of Elagabalus	181
of Elagavalus.—Virtues of Alexa	nutr se-	Accession of Alexander Severus	182
		D.	OWEL

C O N T E N T S.

A.D.	Page	and of the three Gordians Usurpa	tion
Power of his Mother Mamma	182	and secular Games of Philip.
His wife and moderate Administration	184	and feester dames of 1 briefs
Education and virtuous Temper of Alex-		A.D.	Page
ander	ib.	The apparent Ridicule and folid Advan-
Journal of his ordinary Life -	185		204
222-235. General Happiness of the Roman		Want of it in the Roman Empire pro-	204
World	186	ductive of the greatest Calamities	205
Alexander refuses the Name of Antoninus	187	Birth and Fortunes of Maximin	206
He attempts to reform the Army	ib.	His military Service and Honours	207
Seditions of the Prætorian Guards, and		235 Confpiracy of Maximin -	208
Murder of Ulpian -	188	Murder of Alexander and Severus	ib.
Danger of Dion Cassius -	189	Tyranny of Maximin -	200
Tumults of the Legions -	190	Oppression of the Provinces -	211
Firmness of the Emperor -	ib.	237 Revolt in Africa	212
Defects of his Reign and Character	191	Character and Elevation of the two Gor-	212
Digression on the Finances of the Empire	192	dians	213
Establishment of the Tribute on Roman		They folicit the Confirmation of their
Cinzens	193	Authority	215
Abolition of the Tribute -	194	The Senate ratifies their Election of the	213
Tributes of the Provinces -	ib.	Gordians	ib.
Of Asia and Egypt -	ib.	Declares Maximin a public Enemy	217
Of Gaul, Africa, and Spain	195	Assumes the Command of Rome and Italy
Of the Isle of Gyanis -	196	Prepares for a civil War	ib.
Amount of the Revenue -	ib.	237 Deseat and Death of the two Gordians	218
Taxes on Roman Citizens instituted by		Election of Maximus and Balbinus by the
Augustus	ib.	Senate	219
I. The Customs -	197	Their Characters	220
II. The Excife	198	Tumult at Rome. The Younger Gor-
3	ib.	dian is declared Casfar -	221
Suited to the Laws and Manners	199	Maximin prepares to attack the Senate,
Regulations of the Empercrs -	200	and their Emperors	ib.
Edi& of Caracalla - The Freedom of the City given to all the	201	238 Marches into Italy	223
Provincials, for the Purpose of Tax-		Siege of Aquileia	ib.
ation	ib.	Conduct of Maximus	224
Temporary and Reduction of the Tri-	101	238 Murder of Maximin and his Son	225
bute	202	His Portrait	226
Confequences of the univerfal Freedom of		Joy of the Roman World -	226
Rome	ib.	Sedition at Rome	227
Tomo -	10.	226 Discontent of the Prætorian Guards	228
C H A P. VII.		238 Massacre of Maximus and Balbinus	229
		The third Gordian remains fole Emperor	230
The Elevation and Tyranny of Maximin		Innocence and Virtues of Gordian	ib.
Rebellion in Africa and Italy, under		240 Administration of Misstheus ~	231
		242 The Persian War -	ib.
Authority of the Senate.—Civil Wars		243 The Arts of Philip	232
Seditions.—Violent Deaths of Maxi		2++ Murder of Gordian	ib.
and his Son, of Maximus and Balbia	1111S,	Form of a military Republic -	233
		2 Re	cign

C O N T E N T S.

A.D. Page	A.D. Page
Reign of Philip 234	Origin of the Germans - 263
48 Secular Games - ib.	Fables and Conjectures - ib.
Decline of the Roman Empire 235	- The Germans ignorant of Letters 265 of Arts and Agri-
CHAP. VIII.	culture 266 of the Use of
Of the State of Persia after the Restoration	Metals 267
of the Monarchy by Artaxerxes.	Their Indolence 268
	Their Tafte for firong Liquors 269
A.D. Page	State of Population - 270
The Barbarians of the East and of the	German Freedom 27t
North 237	Assemblies of the People - 272
Revolutions of Afia - ib.	Authority of the Princes and Magistrates 274
The Perfian Monarchy reflored by Arta-	More absolute over the Property, than xerxes 238	over the Persons of the Germans ib.
Reformation of the Magian Religion 240	Voluntary Engagements - 275
Perfian Theology, two Principles 241	German Chaftity 276
Religious Worship 242	Its probable Caufes - 277
Ceremonies and moral Precepts 243	Religion 278
Encouragement of Agriculture 244	Its Effects in Peace 279
Power of the Magi - 245	Its Effects in Peace 279
Spirit of Persecution 246	The Bards 281
Establishment of the royal Authority in	Caufes which checked the Progress of the
the Provinces 247	Germans ib.
Extent and Population of Persia 248	Want of Arms 282
Recapitulation of the War between the	- of Discipline 283
Parthian and Roman Empire 249	Civil Diffentions of Germany - 284
165 Cities of Seleucia and Ctefiphon 250	Fomented by the Policy of Rome 285
216 Conquest of Ofrhoene by the Romans 251	Transient Union against Marcus Anto-
230 Artaxerxes claims the Provinces of Afia,	ninus 286 and declares War against the Romans 252	Distinction of the German Tribes ib.
233 Pretended Victory of Alexander Severus 253	Numbers 287
More probable Account of the War 254	CHAP, X.
240 Character and Maxims of Artaxerxes 256	CHAP. X.
Military Power of the Persians 256	The Emperors Decius, Gallus, Æmilianus,
Their Infantry contemptible - 257	Valerian, and Gallienus The general
Their Cavalry excellent - ib.
Then cavary exertent	Irruption of the Barbarians.—The thirty
C II A D IV	Tyrants.
C H A P. IX.	A.D. Page
The State of Germany till the Invafion of	248-268. The Nature of the Subject - 289
the Barbarians, in the Time of the Em-	The Emperor Philip - ib.
	249 Services, Revolt, Victory, and Reign of peror Decius.	the Emperor Decius - 290
A.D. Page	250 He marches against the Goths 291
Extent of Germany 260	Origin of the Goths from Scandinavia ib.
Climate ib.	Religion of the Goths - 203
Its Effects on the Natives - 262	Institutions and Death of Odin ib.
	Agreeable, 11giccabic,

A. D.		Page	A, D.	Page
	Agreeable, but uncertain, Hypothefis		They plunder the Cities of Bythinia	320
	concerning Odin -	294	Retreat of the Goths -	321
	Emigration of the Goths from Scandinavia		Third naval Expedition of the Goths	ib.
	into Pruffia	ib.	They pass the Bosphorus and the Helfrom Pruffia to the Ukraine	295	lefpont -	322
	The Gothic Nation increases in its March	296	Ravage Greece, and threaten Italy	323
	Distinction of the Germans and Sarmatians	297	Their Divisions and Retreat -	ib.
	Description of the Ukraine -	298	Ruin of the Temple of Ephelus	324
	The Goths invade the Roman Provinces	ib.	Conduct of the Goths at Athens	325
	Various Events of the Gothic War	299	Conquest of Armenia by the Persians	326
251	Decius revives the Office of Cenfor in the		Valerian marches into the East	327
	Person of Valerius -	301	260 Is defeated and taken Prisoner by Sapor
	The Design impracticable, and without		King of Perfia	ib.
	Effect	302	Sapor overruns Syria, Cilicia, and Cap-
	Defeat and Death of Decius and his Son	303	padocia	328-
	Election of Gallus	304	Boldness and Success of Odenathus a-
252	Retreat of the Goths -	305	gainst Sapor	330
-	Gallus purchases Peace by the Payment		Treatment of Valerian -	331
	of an annual tribute -	ib.	Character and Administration of Gal-
	Popular Difcontent	ib.	lienus	332
253	Victory and Revolt of Æmilianus	306	The thirty Tyrants	333
	Gallus abandoned and flain -	307	Their real Number was no more than Valerius revenges the Death of Gallus,		nineteen	334 and is acknowledged Emperor	ib.	Character and Merit of the Tyrants	ib.
	Character of Valerian	308	Their obscure Birth	335
253	-268 General Misfortunes of the Reigns		The Causes of their Rebellion -	ib.
	of Valerian and Gallienus -	ib.	Their violent Deaths	336
	Inroads of the Barbarians -	309	Fatal Consequences of these Usurpations	337
	Origin and Confederacy of the Franks	ib.	Diforders of Sicily	338
	They invade Gaul, and ravage Spain	311	Tumults of Alexandria -	339
	They pass over into Africa -	312	Rebellion of the Isaurians -	340
	Origin and Renown of the Suevi	ib.	Famine and Pestilence -	341
	A mixed Body of Suevi assume the Name		Diminution of the human Species	ib.
	of Alemanni	313
	Invade Gaul and Italy	ib.	C H A P. XI.
	Are repulfed from Rome by the Senate		Discontinue Defeat of the Carl and People	314	Reign of Claudius.—Defeat of the Goth
	The Senators excluded by Gallienus from		Victories, Triumph, and Death of A	lure-the military Service -	ib.	lian.
	Gallienus contracts an Alliance with the			n.
	Alemanni	315	A. D.	Page
	Inroads of the Goths	ib.	268 Aureolus invades Italy, is defeated and Conquest of the Bosphorus by the Goths	316	befieged at Milan -	343
	The Goths acquire a naval Force	317	Death of Gallienus	345
	First naval Expedition of the Goths	318	Character and Elevation of the Emperor
	The Goths befiege and take Trebizond	ib.	Claudius	ib.
	The second Expedition of the Goths	319	268 Death of Aureolus	347
	3		Clem	ency

A.D.		Page
	Clemency and Justice of Claudius	347	C H A P. XII.
	He undertakes the Reformation of the			. 1
	Army	348	Conduct of the Army and Senate after	the
	The Go hs 'nvade the Empire -	349	Death of Aurelian Reigns of Tacit	45,
209	Distress and Firmness of Claudius	350	Probus, Carus, and his Sons.
	His Victory over the Goths	ib.	Trooms, Caras, and his const
	Death of the Emperor, who recommends		A. D.	Page
270	Aurelian for his Successor -	352	Extraordinary Contest between the Army
	The Attempt and Fall of Quintilius	353	and the Scnate for the Choice of an Em-
	Origin and Services of Aurelian	ib.		383
	Aurelian's fuccessful Reign -	354		384
		ib.		386
	His fevere Difcipline  He concludes a Treaty with the Goths	355	Character of Tacitus	ib.
	He refigns to them the Province of Dacia			387
	He religns to them the Province of Dacia	356		388
270	The Alemannic War	357	He accepts the Purple Authority of the Senate	ib.
	The Alemanni invade Italy	359 360	Authority of the Senate -
	Are at last vanquished by Aurelian		Their Joy and Confidence	390 ib.
271	Superfitious Ceremonics -	361	276 Tacitus is acknowledged by the Army	10.
	Fortifications of Rome	362	The Alani invade Afia, and are repulfed	00 *
	Aurelian suppresses the two Usurpers	363	by Tacitus -	391
	Succession of Usurpers in Gaul	ib.		392
271	The Reign and Defeat of Tetricus	364	Usurpation and Death of his Brother
272	Character of Zenobia -	365	Florianus	393
	Her Beauty and Learning -	366	Their Family fubfills in Obscurity	ib.
	Her Valour	ib.	Character and Elevation of the Emperor
	She revenges her Husband's Death	367	Probus	394
	Reigns over the East and Egypt	ib.	His respectful Conduct towards the Senate
272	The Expedition of Aurelian -	369	Victories of Probus over the Barbarians	396
	The Emperor defeats the Palmyrenians		277 He delivers Gaul from the Invasion of in the Battles of Antioch and Emefa	ib.	the Germans	398
	The State of Palmyra -	3-0	He carries his Arms into Germany He builds a Wall from the Rhine to the	399
	It is befieged by Aurelian -	371	Danube
	Aurelian becomes Master of Zenobia	,	Introduction and Settlement of the Bar-	400
	and of the City -	372	barians	102
	Behaviour of Zenobia -	373	Daring Enterprise of the Franks	402
	Rebellion and Ruin of Palmyra	374	270 Revolt of Saturninus in the East	404
	Aurelian suppresses the Rebellion of		280 — of Bonofus and Proculus in Gaul	405
	Firmus in Egypt -	ib.	281 Triumph of the Emperor Probus	ib.
27.	4 Triumph of Aurelian	375	His Discipline	406
	His Treatment of Tetricus and Zenobi	a 377	282 His Death	407
	His Magnificence and Devotion	ib.	Election and Character of Carus	4 8
	He suppresses a Sedition at Rome	378	The Sentiments of the Senate and People
	Observations upon it	379	Carus defeats the Sarmatians, and marches
	Cruelty of Aurolian	381	into the East	410
27	. He marches inio the East, and is assa	ſ-	283 He gives Audience to the Persian Am-
	anated	ib.	basiadors	ib
				Hi

A.D.	Page	.D.			Pag
283 His Victories and extraordinary Death	411	He suppre	effes Books of Alchyi	ny	41.1
He is fucceeded by his two Sons, Carinus		Novelty at	nd Progress of that A	rt	ib.
and Numerian	412	The Perfi	an War -	-	442
284 Vices of Carinus	413	82 Tiridates	the Armenian	~	ib.
He celebrates the Roman Games	415	86 His Reftor	ation to the Throne of	of Armenia	443
Spectacles of Rome	ib.	State of th	e Country -	-	ib.
The Amphitheatre	417	Revolt of	the People and Nob	les	444
Return of Numerian with the Army from			Jungo ~	-	ib.
Perfia	419	The Perfia	ins recover Armenia	-	445
Death of Numerian -	420	96 War betwe	een the Perfians and t	he Romans	446
284 Election of the Emperor Diocletian	421	Defeat of		-	ih.
285 Defeat and Death of Carinus	422		otion by Diocletian		448
			ampaign of Galerius		ib.
C H A P. XIII.			у -		ib.
The Reign of Diocletian and his three	100-		iour to his royal Cap		449
			on for Peace		ib.
ciates, Maximian, Galerius, and Con			the Persian Ambassa	dor	450
tius.—General Re-establishment of O	rder		Galerius -	-	ib.
and Tranquillity The Persian W	Var.		n of Diocletian		451
Victory, and Triumph The new I			of a Treaty of Peac		ib.
			the Treaty		452
of Administration.—Abdication and			ras fixed as the Limi
tirement of Diocletian and Maximian.			oires -		453
A.D.	Page		five Provinces beyond	_	ib.
285 Elevation and Character of Diocletian	423		nd Iberia -		454
His Clemency and Victory -	425		of Diocletian and Ma		455
286 Affociation and Character of Maximian	ib.		nce of the Emperors f		456
292 Affociation of two Casfars, Galerius and			idence at Milan and		457
Constantius	427		nt of Rome and of th		458
Departments and Harmony of the four			es of Guards, Jovian		450
Princes	428		istracies laid aside		459 460
Series of Events	429		Dignity and Titles		ib.
287 State of the Peafants of Gaul -	ib.		assumes the Diadem
Their Re ellion and Chastisement	430		the Perfian Ceremon		461
287 Revolt of Caraufius in Britain -	431	New Forn	n of Administration		1
Importance of Britain - Power of Caraufius	432	gufti, ar	nd two Cæfars	-	463
Power of Caraufius	ib.	Increase of	Tans -	-	464
289 Acknowledged by the other Emperors	433	Abdication	of Diocletian and A	Arximian	405
294 His Death	434		ce to Charles the Fi		466
296 Recovery of Britain by Constantius	ib.	o4 Long Illne	ess of Diocletian	-	ib.
Defence of the Frontiers -	435	His Pruder	nce -	-	467
Fortifications	ib.		ce of Maximian		468
Diffentions of the Barbarians -	436		t of Diocletian at Sa		ib.
Conduct of the Emperors - Valour of the Cæfars -	ib.	His Philos	ophy -	-	469
					4,0
Treatment of the Barbarians - Wars of Africa and Egypt -	438		n of Salona and th	e adjacent	.,
wars of Africa and Egypt -	ib.	Country		-	ib.
zo6 Conduct of Diocletian in Egypt Vol. I.	419	* b	tian's Palace		471
V Ob. I.		. D		Dec	inte

	Page
Page	A.D. 306-312. Administration of Constantine in
Decline of the Arts 473	306-312. Administration of Contamina
- of Letters 474	Tyranny of Maxentius in Italy and Africa 498
The new Platonifts - ib.	312 Civil War between Conflantine and Max-entius - 501
C H A P. XIV.	Preparations - 502
Troubles after the Abdication of Diocletian.	Conflantine passes the Alps 502
-Death of Confantius Elevation of	Partle of Turin - 503
-Death of Confianting. Cin Topperore	Ciaco and Battle of Verina
Constantine and Maxentius.—Six Emperors	Indolence and Fears of Maxentius
ot the same Time - Death of Maximien	Vistory of Constantine near Rome 509
and Calorine - Victories of Confiantine	His Reception agree Moventius and Licinius Re-union	His Conduct at Rome - 513 of the Empire under the Authority of	Lic Alliance with Licinius - 514
of the Empire under the	War between Maximin and Licinius
Constantine.	The Defeat and Death of Maximin 500
A.D.	Cruelty of Licinius 516
Basisd of civil Wars and Contunon 470	Unfortunate Fate of the Empress Valeria
Character and Situation of Container
O.C. C. Issius # 7//	314 Quarrel between Constantine and Licinius 519
The Two Casars, Severus and Maximin 478	First civil War between them
Ambition of Galerius disappointed by two	214 Battle of Cibans
Revolutions - 479	Battle of Maruia
274 Birth, Education, and Escape of Constan-315-323. General Peace, and Laws of Con-
306 Death of Conflantius, and Elevation of	flantine 322 The Gothic War  Configntine
	322 The Gotthe War are between Confiantine 323 Second civil War between Confiantine 528
He is acknowledged by Galerius, who	and Licinius - 528 gives him only the Title of Cæfar, and	Pl. of Hadrianonie 529 that of Augustus to Severus 483 The Brothers and Sisters of Constantine 484	Siege of Byzantium, and naval Victory of Discontent of the Romans at the Appre-	Crifpus - 531
hension of Taxes - 485	Parala of Chrysopolis - 53"
- 306 Maxentius declared Emperor at Rome 486	Submission and Death of Licinius 333
Maximian re-affumes the Purple 48;	324 Re-union of the Empire - 534
Maximian re-allulies the supplies the supplies and Death of Severus ib	224
	C H A P. XV.
the Title of Augustus, to Constantine 48	0
Galerius invades Italy	TI Descripte of the Christian Italy
- 49	the Sentiments, Manners, Numbers, and 307 Elevation of Licinius to the Rank of Au-	the Sentiments, within Christians
guiffus -	condition of the primitive Christians.
Elevation of Maximin 49	Page
and Six Emperors	b. Importance of the Inquity - 535
Misfortunes of Maximin
His Death - 45	Confee of the Growth of Christianity 530
Death of Galerius " "	TUE FIRST CAUSE. Zeal of the Jews 53/
His Dominion thared between maximum	Tan gradual Increase - 530 and Licinius - 4	7 Their

C O N T E N T S.

. C		Page		Page
	Their Religion better suited to Desence		V. THE FIFTH CAUSE. The Christians than to Conquest -	539	active in the Government of the Church	581
	More liberal Zeal of Christianity	541	Its primitive Freedom and Equality	582
	Obstinacy and Reasons of the believing		Institution of Bishops as Presidents of the Jews	542		584
	The Nazarene Church of Jerufalem	544		586
	The Ebionites	546	Union of the Church -	ib.
	The Gnoftics	547		587
	Their Sects, Progress, and Influence	549	Pre-eminence of the Metropolitan	3.7
	The Dæmons confidered as the Gods of			588
	Antiquity	551		589
	Abhorrence of the Christians for Idolatry	553		590
	Ceremonies	ib.		591
	Arts	554
	Festivals	555		594
	Zeal for Christianity	556		596
	II. THE SECOND CAUSE. The Doctrine	230		597 of the Immortality of the Soul among			598
	the Philosophers	ib.		599
	Among the Pagans of Greece and			600
	Rome		The Scepticism of the Pagan World proved
	Among the Barbarians and the Jews	558	8	601
	Among the Christians -	559	And to the Peace and Union of the Ro-
	Approaching End of the World			602
			Historical View of the Progress of Christi-
	Doctrine of the Millennium - Conflagration of Rome and of the World	562	anity	603
				604
	The Pagans devoted to eternal Punish-		The Church of Antioch	605
	ment -	565	In Egypt	606
	Were often converted by their Fears	567	In Rome	607
	III. THE THIRD CAUSE. Miraculous		In Africa and the Western Provinces	609
	Powers of the primitive Church	ib.	Beyond the Limits of the Roman Em-
	Their Truth contested -	569	pire	611
	Our Perplexity in defining the miraculous		General Proportion of Christians and
	Period -	ib.	Pagans	612
	Use of the primitive Miracles	57 I	Whether the first Christians were mean
	IV. THE FOURTH CAUSE. Virtues of		and ignorant	613
	the first Christians -	572	Some Exceptions with regard to Learning	61.1
	Effects of their Repentance -	573	with regard to Rank and
	Care of their Reputation -	ib.	Fortune	613
	Morality of the Fathers - Principles of human Nature -	575	Christianity most favourably received by
	Principles of human Nature -	ib.	the Poor and Simple -	616
	The primitive Christians condemn Plea-		Rejected by some eminent Men of the first
	fore and Luxury -	576	and fecond Centuries	ib
	Their Sentiments concerning Marriage		Their Neglect of Prophecy - of Miracles	617
	and Chastity	577		613
	Their Aversion to the Business of War and		General Silence concerning the Darkness
	Government	580	of the Passion	ib
		2	C.H.	A P

	A. D.	Page
C H A P. XVI.	Gradual Relaxation -	653
	Three Methods of escaping Martyrdom	ib.
be Conduct of the Roman Government to-	Alternatives of Severity and Toleration	66;
wards the Christians, from the Reign of	The ten Perfecutions -	ib.
Nero to that of Constantine.	Supposed Edicts of Tiberius and Marcus
TVETO TO TEST Of Conframence.	Antoninus	666
D. Page	180 State of the Christians in the Reigns of Christianity persecuted by the Roman Em-	Commodus and Severus -	657
perors 620	211-249. Of the Successors of Severus	663
Inquiry into their Motives - 621	244 Of Maximin, Philip, and Decius	670
Rebellious Spirit of the Jews 622	253-260. Of Valerian, Gallienus, and his
Toleration of the Jewish Religion 623	Successors	672
The Jews were a People which followed,	260 Paul of Samosata, his Manners	673
the Christians a Sect which deserted,	270 He is degraded from the See of Antioch	674
the Religion of their Fathers 624	274 The Sentence is executed by Aurelian	675
Christianity accused of Atheism, and mis-	284-303. Peace and Prosperity of the Church taken by the People and Philosophers 626	under Diocletian -	676
The Union and Affemblies of the Christi-	Progress of Zeal and Superstition among ans confidered as a dangerous Conspiracy 628	the Pagans	6,7
Their Manners calumniated - 630	Maximian and Galerius punish a few
Their imprudent Defence - 631	Christian Soldiers	679
Idea of the Conduct of the Emperors to-	Galerius prevails on Diocletian to begin a wards the Christians - 633	general Perfecution -	681
They neglected the Christians as a Sect of		68z
Jews 634	The first Edict against the Christians	683
The Fire of Rome under the Reign of Nero 636		684
Cruel Punishment of the Christians as the	Fire of the Palace of Nicomedia imputed	60-
Incendiaries of the City - 637		685 686
Remarks on the Passage of Tacitus re-		688
lative to the Perfecution of the Chrif-	Subfequent Edicts -	689
tians by Nero 639		009
Oppression of the Jews and Christians by	303-311. General Idea of the Perfecution In the Western Provinces, under
Domitian 642		600
Execution of Clemens the Conful 644	In Italy and Africa, under Maximian	690
Ignorance of Plicy concerning the	and Severus; and under Maxen-
Christians 6.16		6
Trajan and his Successors establish a legal	In Illvricum and the East under Gale-	692
Mode of proceeding against them 647		694
Popular Clamours 648 Trials of the Christians - 650	311 -Galerius publishes an Edict of Toleration
Trials of the Christians - 650		696
Humanity of the Roman Magistrates 652	Maximin prepares to renew the Perfe-	ego
Inconfiderable Number of Martyrs 653		647
Example of Cyprian, Bishop of Carthage 654		698
His Danger and Flight 655		090
	Probable Account of the Sufferings of the Martyrs and Confessors -	600
His Condemnation - 657		699 701
His Martyrdom 658		703
Various Incitements to Martyrdom 659
Ardour of the first Christians - 661	T I	T E

THE

H I S T 0 R

OFTHE

DECLINE AND FALL

OF THE

ROMANEMPIRE

CHAP. I.

The Extent and Military Force of the Empire in the Age of the Antonines.

N the fecond century of the Christian Æra, the empire of Rome CHAP. N the second century of the carth, and the most civilized portion of mankind. The frontiers of that extensive Introduction. monarchy were guarded by ancient renown and disciplined valour. The gentle, but powerful influence of laws and manners had gradually cemented the union of the provinces. Their peaceful inhabitants enjoyed and abused the advantages of wealth and luxury. The image of a free conflitution was preserved with decent reverence: The Roman senate appeared to possess the sovereign authority, and devolved on the emperors all the executive powers of government. During a happy period of more than fourfcore years, the public A. D. 08administration was conducted by the virtue and abilities of Nerva, 180. Trajan, Hadrian, and the two Antonines. It is the defign of this and of the two fucceeding chapters, to describe the prosperous condition of their empire; and afterwards, from the death of Marcus VOL. I. Antoninus, CHAP. Antoninus, to deduce the most important circumstances of its decline and fall; a revolution which will ever be remembered, and is ftill felt by the nations of the earth.

Moderation of Augustus.

The principal conquefts of the Romans were atchieved under the republic; and the emperors, for the most part, were satisfied with preferving those dominions which had been acquired by the policy of the fenate, the active emulation of the confuls, and the martial enthusiasm of the people. The seven first centuries were filled with a rapid fuccession of triumphs; but it was reserved for Augustus, to relinquish the ambitious defign of fubduing the whole earth, and to introduce a spirit of moderation into the public councils. Inclined to peace by his temper and fituation, it was eafy for him to discover, that Rome, in her present exalted fituation, had much less to hope than to fear from the chance of arms; and that, in the profecution of remote wars, the undertaking became every day more difficult, the event more doubtful, and the possession more precarious, and less beneficial. The experience of Augustus added weight to these falutary reflections, and effectually convinced him, that, by the prudent vigour of his counsels, it would be easy to secure every concession, which the safety or the dignity of Rome might require from the most formidable barbarians. Instead of exposing his person and his legions to the arrows of the Parthians, he obtained, by an honourable treaty, the restitution of the standards and prisoners which had been taken in the defeat of Crassus'.

His generals, in the early part of his reign, attempted the reduction of Æthiopia and Arabia Felix. They marched near a thousand miles to the south of the tropic; but the heat of the climate foon repelled the invaders, and protected the unwarlike natives of those

The marble of Ancyra, on which Augustus

Dion Cassius, (l. liv. p. 736.) with the recorded his own exploits, afferts that he comannotations of Reymar, who has collected all pelled the Parthians to reftore the enfigns of that Roman vanity has left upon the fubject. Craffus.

those fequestered regions 2. The northern countries of Europe C H A P. fearcely deferved the expence and labour of conquest. The forests and moraffes of Germany were filled with a hardy race of barbarians, who despised life when it was separated from freedom; and though, on the first attack, they seemed to yield to the weight of the Roman power, they foon, by a fignal act of despair, regained their independence, and reminded Augustus of the viciffitude of fortune 3. On the death of that emperor, his testament was publickly read in the fenate. He bequeathed, as a valuable legacy to his fuccessors, the advice of confining the empire within those limits, which Nature seemed to have placed as its permanent bulwarks and boundaries; on the west the Atlantic ocean; the Rhine and Danube on the north; the Euphrates on the east; and towards the fouth, the fandy deferts of Arabia and Africa .

Happily for the repose of mankind, the moderate system recom- Imitated by mended by the wisdom of Augustus, was adopted by the fears and vices of his immediate fucceffors. Engaged in the pursuit of pleafure, or in the exercise of tyranny, the first Cæsars seldom shewed themselves to the armies, or to the provinces; nor were they difposed to fuffer, that those triumphs which their indolence neglected, should be usurped by the conduct and valour of their lieutenants. The military fame of a subject was considered as an insolent inlegions. See the first book of the Annals of Tacitus. Sueton. in August. c. 23. and Velleius Paterculus, 1. ii. c. 117, &c. Augustus did not receive the melancholy news with all the temper and firmness that might have been expected from his character.

<sup>2</sup> Strabo, (l. xvi. p. 780.) Pliny the elder, (Hift. Natur. l. vi. c. 32. 35.) and Dion Caffius, (l. liii. p. 723. and l. liv. p. 734.) have left us very curious details concerning thefe wars. The Romans made themselves masters of Mariaba, or Merab, a city of Arabia Felix, well known to the Orientals (fee Abulfeda and the Nubian geography, p. 52.). They were arrived within three days journey of the Spice country, the rich object of their

<sup>8</sup> By the flaughter of Varus and his three

<sup>4</sup> Tacit. Annal. I. ii. Dion Cassius, I. Ivi. p. 833, and the speech of Augustus himself, in Julian's Cæfars. It receives great light from the learned notes of his French translator, M. Spanheim.

CHAP. valion of the Imperial prerogative; and it became the duty, as well as interest of every Roman general, to guard the frontiers intrusted to his care, without aspiring to conquests which might have proved no less fatal to himself than to the vanguished barbarians '.

Conquest of Britain was the first exception to it.

The only accession which the Roman empire received, during the first century of the Christian Æra, was the province of Britain In this fingle inftance the fucceffors of Cæfar and Augustus were persuaded to follow the example of the former, rather than the precept of the latter. The proximity of its fituation to the coast of Gaul feemed to invite their arms; the pleafing, though doubtful intelligence of a pearl fishery, attracted their avarice 6; and as Britain was viewed in the light of a diffinct and infulated world, the conquest scarcely formed any exception to the general system of continental measures. After a war of about forty years, undertaken by the most stupid, maintained by the most dissolute, and terminated by the most timid of all the emperors, the far greater part of the island submitted to the Roman yoke . The various tribes of Britons possessed valour without conduct, and the love of freedom without the spirit of union. They took up arms with favage fierceness; they laid them down, or turned them against each other with wild inconstancy; and while they fought fingly, they were fuccessively subdued. Neither the fortitude of Agricola, were checked and recalled, in the course of their victories. Corbulo was put to death. Military merit, as it is admirably expressed by Tacitus, was, in the strictest fense of the word, imperatoria virtus.

6 Cæfar himfelf conceals that ignoble motive; but it is mentioned by Suetonius, c. 47. The British pearls proved, however, of little value, on account of their dark and livid colour. Tacitus observes, with reason, defect. " Ego facilius crediderim, naturam and Horsley.

5 Germanicus, Suetonius Paulinus, and margaritis deesse quam nobis avaritiam." 7 Claudius, Nero, and Domitian. A hope is expressed by Pomponius Mela, 1. iii, c. 6. (he wrote under Claudius) that by the fuccess of the Roman arms, the island and its favage inhabitants would foon be better known. It is amusing enough to peruse such. paffages in the midft of London.

8 See the admirable abridgment, given by Tacitus, in the life of Agricola, and copioufly, though perhaps not completely illuf-(in Agricola, c. 12.) that it was an inherent trated, by our own antiquarians, Camden

Caractacus,

Caractacus, nor the despair of Boadicea, nor the fanaticism of the CHAP. Druids could avert the flavery of their country, or refift the fleady progress of the Imperial generals, who maintained the national glory, when the throne was difgraced by the weakest, or the most vicious of mankind. At the very time when Domitian, confined to his palace, felt the terrors which he inspired; his legions, under the command of the virtuous Agricola, defeated the collected force of the Caledonians, at the foot of the Grampian hills; and his fleets, venturing to explore an unknown and dangerous navigation, displayed the Roman arms round every part of the island. The conquest of Britain was considered as already atchieved; and it was the defign of Agricola to complete and enfure his fuccess, by the easy reduction of Ireland, for which, in his opinion, one legion and a few auxiliaries were fufficient?. The western isle might be improved into a valuable possession, and the Britons would wear their chains with the less reluctance, if the prospect and example of freedom was on every fide removed from before their eyes.

But the fuperior merit of Agricola foon occasioned his removal from the government of Britain; and for ever disappointed this rational, though extensive scheme of conquest. Before his departure, the prudent general had provided for security as well as for dominion. He had observed, that the island is almost divided into two unequal parts, by the opposite gulfs, or as they are now called, the Firths of Scotland. Across the narrow interval of about forty miles, he had drawn a line of military stations, which was afterwards fortisted in the reign of Antoninus Pius, by a turf rampart erected on foundations of stone ". This wall of Antoninus, at a small distance beyond the modern cities of Edinburgh and Glaf-

<sup>9</sup> The Irifh writers, jealous of their national honour, are extremely provoked on this "*See Horsley's Britannia Romana, Li.c. i.c. gCow, CHAP. gow, was fixed as the limit of the Roman province. The native Caledonians preserved in the northern extremity of the island their wild independence, for which they were not less indebted to their poverty than to their valour. Their incursions were frequently repelled and chaftifed; but their country was never fubdued ". The masters of the fairest and most wealthy climates of the globe, turned with contempt from gloomy hills affailed by the winter tempeft, from lakes concealed in a blue mift, and from cold and lonely heaths, over which the deer of the forest were chased by a troop of naked barbarians 12.

Conquest of Dacia; the fecond exception.

Such was the flate of the Roman frontiers, and fuch the maxims of Imperial policy from the death of Augustus to the accession of Trajan. That virtuous and active prince had received the education of a foldier, and possessed the talents of a general 13. The peaceful fystem of his predecessors was interrupted by scenes of war and conquest; and the legions, after a long interval, beheld a military emperor at their head. The first exploits of Trajan were against the Dacians, the most warlike of men, who dwelt beyond the Danube, and who, during the reign of Domitian, had infulted with impunity the Majesty of Rome 14. To the strength and sierceness of barbarians, they added a contempt for life, which was derived from a warm persuasion of the immortality and transmigration of the foul 15. Decebalus, the Dacian King, approved himself a rival not unworthy of Trajan; nor did he despair of his own and the public fortune.

<sup>11</sup> The poet Buchanan celebrates, with elegance and spirit, (see his Sylvæ v.) the unviolated independence of his native country. But, if the fingle testimony of Richard of Cirencester was fufficient to create a Roman province of Vespasiana to the north of the wall, that independence would be reduced within very narrow limits.

form imagery of Oslian's Poems, which, according to every hypothesis, were composed by a native Caledonian.

<sup>23</sup> See Pliny's Panegyric, which feems founded on facts.

<sup>14</sup> Dion Caffius, l. lxvii.

<sup>15</sup> Herodotus, l. iv. c. 94. Julian in the 42 See Appian (in Proam.) and the uni- Cæfars, with Spanheim's observations.

fortune, till, by the confession of his enemies, he had exhausted CHAP. every resource both of valour and policy 16. This memorable war, with a very fhort suspension of hostilities, lasted five years; and as the emperor could exert, without controul, the whole force of the state, it was terminated by the absolute submission of the barbarians 17. The new province of Dacia, which formed a fecond exception to the precept of Augustus, was about thirteen hundred miles in circumference. Its natural boundaries were the Niester, the Teyfs, or Tibiscus, the Lower Danube, and the Euxine Sea. The veftiges of a military road may still be traced from the banks of the Danube to the neighbourhood of Bender, a place famous in modern history, and the actual frontier of the Turkish and Russian empires 18.

Trajan was ambitious of fame; and as long as mankind shall Conquests of continue to bestow more liberal applause on their destroyers than east. on their benefactors, the thirst of military glory will ever be the vice of the most exalted characters. The praises of Alexander. transmitted by a succession of poets and historians, had kindled a dangerous emulation in the mind of Trajan. Like him the Roman emperor undertook an expedition against the nations of the east, but he lamented with a figh that his advanced age scarcely left him any hopes of equalling the renown of the fon of Philip 19. Yet the fuccess of Trajan, however transient, was rapid and specious. The degenerate Parthians, broken by intestine discord, fled before his arms. He defeended the river Tigris in triumph, from the mountains of Armenia to the Persian gulph. He enjoyed the honour of being the first, as he was the last, of the Roman generals, who

<sup>16</sup> Plin, Epift, viii, o.

&lt;sup>37</sup> Dion Cassius, I. lxviii. p. 1123. 1131. scriptions, tom. xxviii. p. 444-468. Julian in Cæfaribus. Eutropius, viii. 2. 6. Aurelius Victor, and Victor in Epitome.

<sup>18</sup> See a Memoir of M. Danville, on the of Julian.

Province of Dacia, in the Academie des In-

<sup>19</sup> Trajan's fentiments are reprefented in a very just and lively manner in the Cæfars

CHAP. ever navigated that remote sea. His fleets ravaged the coasts of Arabia; and Trajan vainly flattered himself that he was approaching towards the confines of India 20. Every day the aftonished fenate received the intelligence of new names and new nations, that acknowledged his fway. They were informed that the kings of Bosphorus, Colchos, Iberia, Albania, Osrhoene, and even the Parthian monarch himself, had accepted their diadems from the hands of the emperor; that the independent tribes of the Median and Carduchian hills had implored his protection, and that the rich countries of Armenia, Mesopotamia, and Assyria, were reduced into the state of provinces 21. But the death of Trajan soon clouded the splendid prospect; and it was justly to be dreaded, that so many distant nations would throw off the unaccustomed yoke, when they were no longer restrained by the powerful hand which had imposed it.

Refigned by his fucceffor Adrian.

It was an ancient tradition, that when the Capitol was founded by one of the Roman kings, the god Terminus (who prefided over boundaries, and was represented according to the fashion of that age by a large stone) alone, among all the inferiour deities, refused to yield his place to Jupiter himself. A favourable inference was drawn from his obstinacy, which was interpreted by the augurs, as a fure prefage that the boundaries of the Roman power would never recede 22. During many ages, the prediction, as it is usual, contributed to its own accomplishment. But though Terminus had refifted the majefty of Jupiter, he submitted to the authority of the emperor Hadrian 23. The refignation of all the eastern conquests

<sup>2)</sup> Eutropius and Sextus Rufus have envery fenfible differtation of M. Freret in of Tarquin. the Academie des Inscriptions, tom. xxi.

breviators.

<sup>22</sup> Ovid Fast. 1. ii. ver. 667. See Livy and deavoured to perpetuate the illusion. See a Dionysius of Halicarnassus, under the reign of Trajan was the first measure of his reign. He restored to the CHAP. Parthians the election of an independent Sovereign, withdrew the Roman garrifons from the provinces of Armenia, Mesopotamia, and Affyria, and, in compliance with the precept of Augustus, once more established the Euphrates as the frontier of the empire 24. Cenfure, which arraigns the public actions and the private motives of princes, has afcribed to envy, a conduct, which might be attributed to the prudence and moderation of Adrian. The various character of that emperor, capable, by turns, of the meanest and the most generous fentiments, may afford some colour to the sufpicion. It was, however, fearcely in his power to place the superiority of his predecessor in a more conspicuous light, than by thus confessing himself unequal to the task of defending the conquests of Trajan.

<sup>23</sup> St. Augustin is highly delighted with the proof of the weakness of Terminus, and 21 Dion Cassius, I. Ixviii; and the Ab- the vanity of the Augurs. See De Civitate Dei, iv. 29.

The martial and ambitious spirit of Trajan, formed a very fin- Contrast of gular contrast with the moderation of his fuccessor. The restless activity of Hadrian was not less remarkable when compared with the gentle repose of Antoninus Pius. The life of the former was almost a perpetual journey; and as he possessed the various talents of the foldier, the statesman, and the scholar, he gratified his curiofity in the discharge of his duty. Careless of the difference of feafons and of climates, he marched on foot, and bare-headed, over the fnows of Caledonia, and the fultry plains of the Upper Egypt; nor was there a province of the empire, which, in the course of his reign, was not honoured with the presence of the monarch 25. But the tranquil life of Antoninus Pius was spent in the bosom of

<sup>24</sup> See the Augustan History, p. 5. Je-

<sup>25</sup> Dion, I. lxix. p. 1158. Hift. August. rome's Chronicle, and all the Epitomizers. p. 5.8. If all our historians were lost, me-It is fomewhat furprifing, that this memora- dals, inferiptions, and other monuments, ble event should be omitted by Dion, or ra- would be sufficient to record the travels of Ha-

CHAP. Italy: and, during the twenty-three years that he directed the public administration, the longest journies of that amiable prince extended no farther than from his palace in Rome, to the retirement of his Lanuvian Villa 25.

Pacific fyftem of Hadrian and the wo

Notwithstanding this difference in their personal conduct, the general fystem of Augustus was equally adopted and uniformly purfued by Hadrian and by the two Antonines. They perfifted in the defign of maintaining the dignity of the empire, without attempting to enlarge its limits. By every honourable expedient they invited the friendship of the barbarians; and endeavoured to convince mankind, that the Roman power, raifed above the temptation of conquest, was actuated only by the love of order and justice. During a long period of forty-three years their virtuous labours were crowned with fuccess; and if we except a few slight hostilities that ferved to exercise the legions of the frontier, the reigns of Hadrian and Antoninus Pius offer the fair prospect of universal peace 27. The Roman name was revered among the most remote nations of the earth. The fiercest barbarians frequently submitted their differences to the arbitration of the emperor, and we are informed by a cotemporary historian, that he had feen ambaffadors who were refused the honour which they came to folicit, of being admitted into the rank of subjects 28.

Defensive wars of Marcus Antonimus.

The terror of the Roman arms added weight and dignity to the moderation of the emperors. They preferved peace by a constant preparation for war; and while justice regulated their conduct, they gainst the wandering Moors, who were driven into the folitudes of Atlas. 2d, Against the Brigantes of Britain, who had invaded the Roman province. Both thefe wars (with feveral other hostilities) are mentioned in the Augustan history, p. 19.

26 See the Augustan History and the Epi-

28 Appian of Alexandria, in the preface to his History of the Roman wars.

announced

<sup>27</sup> We must, however, remember, that, in the time of Hadrian, a rebellion of the Jews raged with religious fury, though only in a fingle province: Paufanias (l. viii. c. 43.) mentions two necessary and fuccessful wars, conducted by the generals of Pius. 1ft, A-

announced to the nations on their confines, that they were as little C H A P. disposed to endure as to offer an injury. The military strength, which it had been fufficient for Hadrian and the elder Antoninus to display, was exerted against the Parthians and the Germans, by the emperor Marcus. The hostilities of the barbarians provoked the refentment of that philosophic monarch, and in the profecution of a just defence, Marcus and his generals obtained many fignal victories, both on the Euphrates, and on the Danube 20. The military establishment of the Roman empire, which thus assured either its tranquillity or fuccess, will now become the proper and important object of our attention.

In the purer ages of the commonwealth, the use of arms Military estawas referved for those ranks of citizens who had a country to love, the Roman a property to defend, and some share in enacting those laws, which emperors. it was their interest, as well as duty, to maintain. But in proportion as the public freedom was loft in extent of conquest, war was gradually improved into an art, and degraded into a trade 3°. The legions themselves, even at the time when they were recruited in the most distant provinces, were supposed to consist of Roman citizens. That diffinction was generally confidered, either as a legal qualification, or as a proper recompence for the foldier; but a more ferious regard was paid to the effential merit of age, firength, and military stature 31. In all levies, a just preference was given to the climates of the North over those of the South: the race of men born time when money was fo scarce, that an ounce reward.

<sup>29</sup> Dion, I. Ixxi. Hist. August. in Mar- of filver was equivalent to seventy pound posed to ridicule, in a very lively piece of Bell. Jugurth. c. 91. criticism of Lucian.

co. The Parthian victories gave birth to a weight of brafs. The populace, excluded by crowd of contemptible historians, whose me- the ancient constitution, were indiscriminatemory has been rescued from oblivion, and ex- ly admitted by Marius. See Sallust, de

<sup>31</sup> Cæfar formed his legion Alauda, of 10 The poorest rank of foldiers possessed Gauls and strangers: but it was during the above forty pounds sterling (Dionys. Hali- license of civil war; and after the victory he carn. iv. 17.), a very high qualification, at a gave them the freedom of the city, for their

CHAP. to the exercise of arms, was sought for in the country rather than in cities; and it was very reasonably presumed, that the hardy occupations of fmiths, carpenters, and huntímen, would fupply more vigour and refolution, than the fedentary trades which are employed in the fervice of luxury 32. After every qualification of property had been laid aside, the armies of the Roman emperors were still commanded, for the most part, by officers of a liberal birth and education; but the common foldiers, like the mercenary troops of modern Europe, were drawn from the meanest, and very frequently from the most profligate, of mankind.

Discipline.

That public virtue which among the ancients was denominated patriotism is derived from a strong sense of our own interest in the prefervation and prosperity of the free government of which we are members. Such a fentiment, which had rendered the legions of the republic almost invincible, could make but a very feeble impression on the mercenary fervants of a despotic prince; and it became neceffary to supply that defect by other motives, of a different, but not less forcible nature; honour and religion. The peasant, or mechanic, imbibed the useful prejudice that he was advanced to the more dignified profession of arms, in which his rank and reputation would depend on his own valour: and that, although the prowess of a private foldier must often escape the notice of fame, his own behaviour might fometimes confer glory or difgrace on the company, the legion, or even the army, to whose honours he was affociated. On his first entrance into the service, an oath was administered to him. with every circumstance of solemnity. He promised never to defert his flandard, to fubmit his own will to the commands of his leaders. and to facrifice his life for the fafety of the emperor and the empire 33. The attachment of the Roman troops to their standards, was inspired by the united influence of religion and of honour. CHAP. The golden eagle, which glittered in the front of the legion, was the object of their fondest devotion; nor was it esteemed less impious, than it was ignominious, to abandon that facred enfign in the hour of danger 34. These motives, which derived their strength from the imagination, were enforced by fears and hopes of a more fubftantial kind. Regular pay, occasional donatives, and a stated recompence, after the appointed term of fervice, alleviated the hardthips of the military life 35, whilst, on the other hand, it was impossible for cowardice or disobedience to escape the severest punishment. The centurions were authorized to chassife with blows, the generals had a right to punish with death; and it was an inflexible maxim of Roman discipline, that a good soldier should dread his officers far more than the enemy. From fuch laudable arts did the valour of the Imperial troops receive a degree of firmness and docility, unattainable by the impetuous and irregular passions of barbarians.

<sup>32</sup> See Vegetius de Re Militari, l. i. c. 2--7. emperor, was annually renewed by the troops,

The oath of fervice and fidelity to the on the first of January.

And yet fo fensible were the Romans of the imperfection of va- Exercises. lour without skill and practice, that, in their language, the name of an army was borrowed from the word which fignified exercise 36. Military exercises were the important and unremitted object of their discipline. The recruits and young foldiers were constantly trained rum Deos. They were placed in a chapel in the camp, and with the other deities received the religious worthip of the troops.

<sup>25</sup> See Gronovius de Pecunia vetere, 1. iii. p. 120, &c. The emperor Domitian raifed the annual stipend of the legionaries, to twelve pieces of gold, which, in his time, was equivalent to about ten of our guine. This pay, fomewhat higher than our own, had been, and was afterwards, gradually increased, according to the progress of wealth and milita-

<sup>34</sup> Tacitus calls the Roman Eagles, Bello- ry government. After twenty years fervice, the veteran received three thousand denarii (about one hundred pounds sterling), or a proportionable allowance of land. The pay and advantages of the guards were, in gene-

<sup>36</sup> Exercitus ab Exercitando, Vasro de Lin-37. There is room for a very interesting work, which should lay open the connecion between the languages and manners of na-

C H A P. both in the morning and in the evening, nor was age or knowledge allowed to excufe the veterans from the daily repetition of what they had completely learnt. Large sheds were erected in the winter-quarters of the troops, that their useful labours might not receive any interruption from the most tempessuous weather; and it was carefully observed, that the arms destined to this imitation of war, should be of double the weight which was required in real action 37. It is not the purpose of this work to enter into any minute description of the Roman exercises. We shall only remark, that they comprehended whatever could add firength to the body, activity to the limbs, or grace to the motions. The foldiers were diligently instructed to march, to run, to leap, to swim, to carry heavy burdens, to handle every species of arms that was used either for offence or for defence, either in distant engagement or in a closer onset; to form a variety of evolutions; and to move to the found of flutes, in the Pyrrhic or martial dance 38. In the midst of peace, the Roman troops familiarifed themselves with the practice of war; and it is prettily remarked by an ancient historian who had fought against them, that the effusion of blood was the only circumstance which distinguished a field of battle from a field of exercise 39. It was the policy of the ablest generals, and even of the emperors themselves, to encourage these military studies by their presence and example; and we are informed that Hadrian, as well as Trajan, frequently condefeended to inftruct the unexperienced foldiers, to reward the diligent, and fometimes to dispute with them the prize of fuperior strength or dexterity 4°. Under the reigns of those princes, <sup>37</sup> Vegetius, 1. ii. and the rest of his first book. 38 The Pyrrhic Dance is extremely well illustrated by M. le Beau, in the Academie des Inferiptions, tom. xxxv. p. 262, &c. That learned academician, in a feries of memoirs, has collected all the passages of the ancients that relate to the Roman legion.

<sup>19</sup> Joseph. de Bell. Judaico, l. iii. c. 5. We are indebted to this Jew for fome very curious details of Roman discipline.

<sup>40</sup> Plin. panegyr. c. 13. Life of Hadrian, in the Augustan history.

the science of tactics was cultivated with success; and as long as the CII AP. empire retained any vigour, their military instructions were respected, as the most perfect model of Roman discipline.

Nine centuries of war had gradually introduced into the fervice The legions many alterations and improvements. The legions, as they are de-emperors. feribed by Polybius 47, in the time of the Punic wars, differed very materially from those which atchieved the victories of Cæsar, or defended the monarchy of Hadrian and the Antonines. The conftitution of the Imperial legion may be described in a few words 42. The heavy-armed infantry, which composed its principal strength 43, was divided into ten cohorts, and fifty-five companies, under the orders of a correspondent number of tribunes and centurions. The first cohort, which always claimed the post of honour and the custody of the eagle, was formed of eleven hundred and five foldiers, the most approved for valour and fidelity. The remaining nine cohorts confifted each of five hundred and fifty-five; and the whole body of legionary infantry amounted to fix thousand one hundred men-Their arms were uniform, and admirably adapted to the nature of Arms. their fervice: an open helmet, with a lofty crest; a breast-plate, or coat of mail; greaves on their legs, and an ample buckler on their left arm. The buckler was of an oblong and concave figure, four feet in length, and two and a half in breadth, framed of a light wood, covered with a bull's hide, and strongly guarded with plates of brafs. Befides a lighter fpear, the legionary foldier grafped in his right hand the formidable pilum, a ponderous javelin, whose utmost length was about fix feet, and which was terminated by a maffy

triangular

<sup>41</sup> See an admirable digression on the Rofcribes it, cannot fuit any other age of the horseback. Roman empire.

<sup>43</sup> Vegetius de Re Militari, I. ii. c. 1. In man discipline, in the fixth book of his history. the purer age of Casfar and Cicero, the word 42 Vegetius de Re Militari, 1. ii. c. 4, &c. miles was almost confined to the infantry. Unconfiderable part of his very perplexed abridg- der the lower empire, and in the times of ment was taken from the regulations of Tra- chivalry, it was appropriated almost as exjan and Hadrian; and the legion, as he de- clusively to the men at arms, who fought on

CHAP. triangular point of steel of eighteen inches 44. This instrument was indeed much inferior to our modern fire-arms; fince it was exhausted by a fingle discharge, at the distance of only ten or twelve paces. Yet when it was launched by a firm and skilful hand, there was not any cavalry that durst venture within its reach, nor any flield or corflet that could fustain the impetuofity of its weight. As foon as the Roman had darted his pilum, he drew his fword, and rushed forwards to close with the enemy. His sword was a short welltempered Spanish blade, that carried a double edge, and was alike fuited to the purpose of striking, or of pushing; but the soldier was always instructed to prefer the latter use of his weapon, as his own body remained lefs exposed, whilft he inflicted a more dangerous wound on his adverfary 45. The legion was usually drawn up eight deep; and the regular diffance of three feet was left between the files as well as ranks 46. A body of troops, habituated to preferve this open order, in a long front and a rapid charge, found themfelves prepared to execute every disposition which the circumstances of war, or the skill of their leader, might suggest. The foldier possessed a free space for his arms and motions, and sufficient intervals were allowed, through which feafonable reinforcements might be introduced to the relief of the exhausted combatants 47. The tactics of the Creeks and Macedonians were formed on very different principles. The strength of the phalanx depended on fixteen ranks of long pikes, wedged together in the closest array 48. But it

* In the time of Polybius and Dionyfius of Halicarnasius (l. v. c. 45.), the steel point of the pinon feems to have been n uch longer. In the time of Vegetius, it was reduced to a foot, or even nine inches. I have chosen

<sup>45</sup> For the legionary arms fee Lipfius de

<sup>46</sup> See the beautiful comparison of Virgil,

M. Guichardt, Memoires Militaires, tum. i. c. 4. and Neuveaux Memoires, tom. i. p. 293-311, has treated the fubject like a feholar and an officer.

<sup>48</sup> See Arri n's Tactics. With the true to describe the phalanx of which he had rend, than the legions which he had com-was foon discovered by reflection, as well as by the event, that the CHAP. ftrength of the phalanx was unable to contend with the activity of the legion 49.

The cavalry, without which the force of the legion would have Cavalry. remained imperfect, was divided into ten troops or fquadrons; the first, as the companion of the first cohort, consisted of an hundred and thirty-two men; whilst each of the other nine amounted only to fixty-fix. The entire establishment formed a regiment, if we may use the modern expression, of seven hundred and twentyfix horse, naturally connected with its respective legion, but occafionally separated to act in the line, and to compose a part of the wings of the army 50. The cavalry of the emperors was no longer composed, like that of the ancient republic, of the noblest youths of Rome and Italy, who, by performing their military fervice on horseback, prepared themselves for the offices of senator and conful; and folicited, by deeds of valour, the future fuffrages of their countrymen 51. Since the alteration of manners and government, the most wealthy of the equestrian order were engaged in the administration of justice, and of the revenue 52; and whenever they embraced the profession of arms, they were immediately intrusted with a troop of horse, or a cohort of foot 53. Trajan and Hadrian formed their cavalry from the same provinces, and the same class of their subjects, which recruited the ranks of the legion. The horses were bred, for the most part, in Spain or Cappadocia. The Roman troopers despised the complete armour with which the cavalry of the fense of that very curious passage was first discovered and illustrated by M. de Beaufort, Republique Romaine, 1. ii. c. z.

VOL. I.

D

Eaft

<sup>49</sup> Polyb. I. xvii.

<sup>5)</sup> Veget. de Re Militari, 1. ii. c. 6. His politive testimony, which might be supported by circumstantial evidence, ought furely to filence those critics who refuse the Imperial legion its proper body of cavalry.

<sup>51</sup> See Livy almost throughout, particularly xlii. 61.

52 Plin. Hist. Natur. xxxiii. 2. The true

<sup>53</sup> As in the instance of Horace and Agricola. This appears to have been a defect in the Roman discipline; which Hadrian endeavoured to remedy, by afcertaining the legal age of a tribune.

CHAP. East was encumbered. Their more useful arms consisted in a helmet, an oblong shield, light boots, and a coat of mail. A javelin, and a long broad fword, were their principal weapons of offence. The use of lances and of iron maces they seem to have borrowed from the barbarians 54.

Auxiliaries.

The fafety and honour of the empire was principally intrufted to the legions, but the policy of Rome condescended to adopt every useful instrument of war. Considerable levies were regularly made among the provincials, who had not yet deferved the honourable distinction of Romans. Many dependent princes and communities, dispersed round the frontiers, were permitted, for a while, to hold their freedom and fecurity by the tenure of military fervice 55. Even select troops of hostile barbarians were frequently compelled or perfuaded to confume their dangerous valour in remote climates. and for the benefit of the state 56. All these were included under the general name of auxiliaries; and howfoever they might vary according to the difference of times and circumstances, their numbers were feldom much inferior to those of the legions themselves 57. Among the auxiliaries, the bravest and most faithful bands were placed under the command of præfects and centurions, and feverely trained in the arts of Roman discipline; but the far greater part retained those arms, to which the nature of their country, or their early habits of life, more peculiarly adapted them. By this inflitution each legion, to whom a certain proportion of auxiliaries was allotted, contained within itself every species of lighter troops, and of miffile weapons; and was capable of encountering every na-

<sup>54</sup> See Arrian's Tactics.

<sup>55</sup> Such, in particular, was the ftate of the Batavians. Tacit. Germania, c. 29. 56 Marcus Antoninus obliged the vanquished Quadi and Marcomanni to supply him with a large body of troops, which he immediately fent into Britain. Dion Caffius, 1. Ixxi. 57 Tacit. Annal. iv. 5. Those who fix a regular proportion of as many foot, and twice as many horse, confound the auxiliaries of the emperors, with the Italian allies of the republic.

tion, with the advantages of its respective arms and discipline 35. C II A P. Nor was the legion destitute of what, in modern language, would be flyled a train of artillery. It confifled in ten military engines Artillery. of the largest, and fifty-five of a smaller fize; but all of which, either in an oblique or horizontal manner, discharged stones and darts with irrefiftible violence 59.

19

The camp of a Roman legion presented the appearance of a for- Encamptified city 60. As foon as the space was marked out, the pioneers carefully levelled the ground, and removed every impediment that might interrupt its perfect regularity. Its form was an exact quadrangle; and we may calculate, that a square of about seven hundred yards was fufficient for the encampment of twenty thoufand Romans; though a fimilar number of our own troops would expose to the enemy a front of more than treble that extent. In the midst of the camp, the prætorium, or general's quarters, rose above the others; the cavalry, the infantry, and the auxiliaries occupied their respective stations; the streets were broad, and persectly ftraight, and a vacant space of two hundred feet was left on all sides, between the tents and the rampart. The rampart itself was usually twelve feet high, armed with a line of strong and intricate palisades, and defended by a ditch of twelve fect in depth as well as in breadth. This important labour was performed by the hands of the legionaries march and battle against the Alani.

<sup>59</sup> The subject of the ancient machines is treated with great knowledge and ingenuity by the Chevalier Folard (Polybe, tom. ii. p. 233-290). He prefers them in many respects to our modern cannon and mortars. We may observe, that the use of them in the field gradually became more prevalent, in proportion as personal valour and military skill declined " faciat civitatem."

<sup>58</sup> Vegetius, ii. 2. Arrian, in his order of with the Roman empire. When men were no longer found, their place was supplied by machines. See Vegetius, ii. 25. Arrian.

<sup>65</sup> Vegetius finishes his second book, and the description of the legion, with the following emphatic words, "Universa quæ in

&quot; quoque belli genere neccsiaria esse cre-" duntur, fecum legio debet ubique portare,

&quot; ut in quovis loco fixerit cafera, armatam

C H A P. themselves: to whom the use of the spade and the pick-axe was no lefs familiar than that of the fword or pilum. Active valour may often be the present of nature; but such patient diligence can be the fruit only of habit and discipline 61.

March.

Whenever the trumpet gave the figual of departure, the camp was almost instantly broke up, and the troops fell into their ranks without delay or confusion. Besides their arms, which the legionaries fcarcely confidered as an encumbrance, they were laden with their kitchen furniture, the instruments of fortification, and the provision of many days 62. Under this weight, which would opprefs the delicacy of a modern foldier, they were trained by a regular step to advance, in about fix hours, near twenty miles 63. On the appearance of an enemy they threw afide their baggage, and by eafy and rapid evolutions converted the column of march into an order of battle 64. The flingers and archers skirmished in the front; the auxiliaries formed the first line, and were feconded or fustained by the strength of the legions: the cavalry covered the flanks, and the military engines were placed in the rear.

Number and disposition of the legions.

Such were the arts of war, by which the Roman emperors defended their extensive conquests, and preserved a military spirit, at a time when every other virtue was oppressed by luxury and despotism. If, in the consideration of their armies, we pass from their discipline to their numbers, we shall not find it easy to define them with any tolerable accuracy. We may compute, however, that the legion, which was itself a body of fix thou-

fand

<sup>61</sup> For the Roman Castremetation, see Polybius, I. vi. with Lipfius de Militiì Romanà, Joseph. de Bell. Jud. l. iii. c. 5. Vegetius, i. 21-25. iii. 9. and Memoires de Guichard, tom. i. c. 1.

<sup>64</sup> Cicero in Tufculan. ii. 37 .- Joseph. de Bell. Jud. l. iii. 5. Frontinus, iv. 1.

<sup>61</sup> Vegetius, i. 9. See Memoires de l' Academie des Infcriptions, tom. xxv. p.

<sup>64</sup> See those evolutions admirably well explained by M. Guichard, Nouveaux Memoires, tom. i. p. 141-234.

fand eight hundred and thirty-one Romans, might, with its at- CHAP. tendant auxiliaries, amount to about twelve thousand five hundred men. The peace establishment of Hadrian and his successors was composed of no less than thirty of these formidable brigades; and most probably formed a standing force of three hundred and seventyfive thousand men. Instead of being confined within the walls of fortified cities, which the Romans confidered as the refuge of weaknefs or pufillanimity, the legions were encamped on the banks of the great rivers, and along the frontiers of the barbarians. As their flations, for the most part, remained fixed and permanent. we may venture to describe the distribution of the troops. Three legions were fufficient for Britain. The principal strength lay upon the Rhine and Danube, and confifted of fixteen legions. in the following proportions: two in the Lower, and three in the Upper Germany; one in Rhætia, one in Noricum, four in Pannonia, three in Mæsia, and two in Dacia. The defence of the Euphrates was intrufted to eight legions, fix of whom were placed in Syria, and the other two in Cappadocia. With regard to Egypt, Africa, and Spain, as they were far removed from any important feene of war, a fingle legion maintained the domestic tranquillity of each of those great provinces. Even Italy was not left destitute of a military force. Above twenty thousand chosen foldiers, diffinguished by the titles of City Cohorts and Prætorian Guards, watched over the fafety of the monarch and the capital. As the authors of almost every revolution that distracted the empire, the Prætorians will, very foon, and very loudly, demand our attention; but in their arms and inflitutions, we cannot find any circumstance which difcriminated them from the legions, unless it were a more splendid appearance, and a lefs rigid discipline 65.

<sup>63</sup> Tacitus (Annal. iv. 5.) has given us a the proper medium between these two periscate of the legions under Tiberius: and ods. See likewise Lipsus de Magnitudine-Dion Cassius (I. Iv. p. 794.) under Alexan-Romaná, I. i. c. 4, 5. der Sevens. I have endeavoured to six on

CHAP.

The navy maintained by the emperors might feem inadequate to their greatness; but it was fully sufficient for every useful purpose of government. The ambition of the Romans was confined to the land; nor was that warlike people ever actuated by the enterprifing spirit which had prompted the navigators of Tyre, of Carthage, and even of Marfeilles, to enlarge the bounds of the world, and to explore the most remote coasts of the ocean. To the Romans the ocean remained an object of terror rather than of curiofity 66; the whole extent of the Mediterranean, after the destruction of Carthage, and the extirpation of the pirates, was included within their provinces. The policy of the emperors was directed only to preferve the peaceful dominion of that fea, and to protect the commerce of their fubjects. With these moderate views, Augustus flationed two permanent fleets in the most convenient ports of Italy, the one at Ravenna, on the Adriatic, the other at Misenum, in the bay of Naples. Experience feems at length to have convinced the ancients, that as foon as their gallies exceeded two, or at the most three ranks of oars, they were fuited rather for vain pomp than for real fervice. Augustus himself, in the victory of Actium, had feen the fuperiority of his own light frigates (they were called Liburnians) over the lofty but unwieldy castles of his rival 67. Of these Liburnians he composed the two fleets of Ravenna and Mifenum, destined to command, the one the eastern, the other the western division of the Mediterranean; and to each of the squadrons he attached a body of several thousand marines. Befides these two ports, which may be considered as the principal feats of the Roman navy, a very confiderable force was fla-

<sup>66</sup> The Romans tried to difguife, by the we may credit Orofius, these monstrous cafpretence of religious awe, their ignorance and tles were no more than ten feet above the waterror. See Tacit. Germania, c. 34. 6. Plutarch, in Marc. Anton. And yet if

ter, vi. 19.

tioned at Frejus, on the coast of Provence, and the Euxine was CHAP. guarded by forty ships, and three thousand soldiers. To all these we add the fleet which preserved the communication between Gaul and Britain, and a great number of veffels conftantly maintained on the Rhine and Danube, to harafs the country, or to intercept the passage of the barbarians 68. If we review this general state of the Imperial forces; of the cavalry as well as infantry; of the legions, the auxiliaries, the guards, and the navy; the most liberal computation will not allow us to fix the entire establishment by sea and by land at more than four hundred and fifty thousand men: Amount of a military power, which, however formidable it may feem, was tablishment. equalled by a monarch of the last century, whose kingdom was confined within a fingle province of the Roman empire 67.

the whole ef-

View of the provinces of empire.

We have attempted to explain the spirit which moderated, and the strength which supported, the power of Hadrian and the An- the Roman tonines. We shall now endeavour with clearness and precision to describe the provinces once united under their sway, but, at present, divided into fo many independent and hostile states.

Spain, the western extremity of the empire, of Europe, and of the Spainancient world, has, in every age, invariably preferved the fame natural limits; the Pyrenæan mountains, the Mediterranean, and the Atlantic Ocean. That great peninfula, at prefent fo unequally divided between two fovereigns, was diffributed by Augustus into three provinces, Lufitania, Bætica, and Tarraconenfis. The kingdom of Portugal now fills the place of the warlike country of the Lusitanians; and the loss sustained by the former, on the side of the East, is compensated by an accession of territory towards the North. The confines of Grenada and Andalusia correspond with those of

<sup>68</sup> See Lipsius, de Magnitud. Rom. 1. i. c. 5. The fixteen last chapters of Vegetius re- must, however, be remembered, that France late to naval affairs.

<sup>69</sup> Voltaire, Siecle de Louis XIV. c. 29. It ftill feels that extraordinary effort.

CHAP. ancient Batica. The remainder of Spain, Gallicia, and the Asturias, Bifcay, and Navarre, Leon, and the two Castilles, Murcia, Valencia, Catalonia, and Arragon, all contributed to form the third and most considerable of the Roman governments, which, from the name of its capital, was flyled the Province of Tarragona 70. Of the native barbarians, the Celtiberians were the most powerful, as the Cantabrians and Afturians proved the most obstinate. Confident in the strength of their mountains, they were the last who submitted to the arms of Rome, and the first who threw off the yoke of the Arabs.

Gaul.

Ancient Gaul, as it contained the whole country between the Pyrenees, the Alps, the Rhine, and the Ocean, was of greater extent than modern France. To the dominions of that powerful monarchy, with its recent acquifitions of Alface and Lorraine, we must add the dutchy of Savoy, the cantons of Switzerland, the four electorates of the Rhine, and the territories of Liege, Luxemburgh, Hainault, Flanders, and Brabant. When Augustus gave laws to the conquests of his father, he introduced a division of Gaul equally adapted to the progress of the legions, to the course of the rivers, and to the principal national distinctions, which had comprehended above an hundred independent states?". The sea-coast of the Mediterranean, Languedoc, Provence, and Dauphine, received their provincial appellation from the colony of Narbonne. The government of Aquitaine was extended from the Pyrenees to the Loire. The country between the Loire and the Seine was flyled the

to suppose, that Arragon is derived from Tarmous. It is however certain, that the Arracountry, and gradually to a kingdom. See hundred.

7º See Strabo, I. ii. It is natural enough Danville, Geographie du Moyen Age, p. 181. 71 One hundred and fifteen cities appear in raconenlis, and feveral moderns who have the Notitia of Gaul; and it is well known written in Latin, use those words as fynony- that this appellation was applied not only to the capital town, but to the whole territory gon, a little flream which falls from the Py- of each flate. But Plutarch and Appian inrences into the Ebro, first gave its name to a crease the number of tribes to three or four

Celtic

Celtic Gaul, and foon borrowed a new denomination from the CHAP. celebrated colony of Lugdunum, or Lyons. The Belgic lay beyond the Seine, and in more ancient times had been bounded only by the Rhine; but a little before the age of Cæfar, the Germans abusing their fuperiority of valour, had occupied a confiderable portion of the Belgic territory. The Roman conquerors very eagerly embraced fo flattering a circumstance, and the Gallic frontier of the Rhine, from Bafil to Leyden, received the pompous names of the Upper and the Lower Germany 72. Such, under the reign of the Antonines, were the fix provinces of Gaul; the Narbonnese, Aquitaine, the Celtic, or Lyonnese, the Belgic, and the two Germanies.

We have already had occasion to mention the conquest of Britain. Britain, and to fix the boundary of the Roman province in this island. It comprehended all England, Wales, and the Lowlands of Scotland, as far as the Firths of Dunbarton and Edinburgh. Before Britain lost her freedom, the country was irregularly divided between thirty tribes of barbarians, of whom the most considerable were the Belgæ in the West, the Brigantes in the North, the Silures in South Wales, and the Iceni in Norfolk and Suffolk 73. As far as we can either trace or credit the resemblance of manners and language, Spain, Gaul, and Britain were peopled by the fame hardy race of favages. Before they yielded to the Roman arms, they often disputed the field, and often renewed the contest. After their fubmission they constituted the western division of the European provinces, which extended from the columns of Hercules to the wall of Antoninus, and from the mouth of the Tagus to the fources of the Rhine and Danube.

Before the Roman conquest, the country which is now called Italy. Lombardy, was not confidered as a part of Italy. It had been

72 Danville. Notice de l'Ancienne 73 Whitaker's History of Manchester, vol. i. Gaule. c. 3. VOL. I. E occupied

CHAP. occupied by a powerful colony of Gauls, who fettling themselves along the banks of the Po, from Piedmont to Romagna, carried their arms and diffused their name from the Alps to the Apennine. The Ligurians dwelt on the rocky coast, which now forms the republic of Genoa. Venice was yet unborn; but the territories of that state, which lie to the east of the Adige, were inhabited by the Venetians 74. The middle part of the peninfula, that now composes the dutchy of Tufcany and the ecclefiaftical state, was the ancient feat of the Etruscans and Umbrians; to the former of whom Italy was indebted for the first rudiments of civilized life 75. The Tyber rolled at the foot of the feven hills of Rome, and the country of the Sabines, the Latins, and the Volsci, from that river to the frontiers of Naples, was the theatre of her infant victories. On that celebrated ground the first consuls deserved triumphs; their fucceffors adorned villas, and their posterity have erected convents 76. Capua and Campania possessed the immediate territory of Naples: the rest of the kingdom was inhabited by many warlike nations, the Marsi, the Samnites, the Apulians, and the Lucanians; and the fea-coasts had been covered by the flourishing colonies of the Greeks. We may remark, that when Augustus divided Italy into eleven regions, the little province of Istria was annexed to that feat of Roman fovereignty 77.

The Danube and Illyrian frontier.

The European provinces of Rome were protected by the course of the Rhine and the Danube. The latter of those mighty streams, which rifes at the distance of only thirty miles from the former, flows above thirteen hundred miles, for the most part, to the foutheast, collects the tribute of fixty navigable rivers, and is, at length, through

<sup>74</sup> The Italian Veneti, though often confounded with the Gauls, were more probably of Illyrian origin. See M. Freret, Memoires de l'Academie des Infcriptions, tom. xviii.

<sup>75</sup> See Maffei Verona illustrata, I. i.

<sup>76</sup> The first contrast was observed by the ancients. See Florus, i. 11. The fecond must strike every modern traveller.

<sup>77</sup> Pliny (Hift, Natur. I. iii.) follows the division of Italy, by Augustus.

through fix mouths received into the Euxine, which appears fearcely CHAP. equal to fuch an accession of waters 73. The provinces of the Danube foon acquired the general appellation of Illyricum, or the Illyrian frontier 79, and were esteemed the most warlike of the empire; but they deferve to be more particularly confidered under the names of Rhætia, Noricum, Pannonia, Dalmatia, Dacia, Mæsia, Thrace, Macedonia, and Greece.

The province of Rhætia, which foon extinguished the name of Rhætia. the Vindelicians, extended from the fummit of the Alps to the banks of the Danube; from its fource, as far as its conflux with the Inn. The greatest part of the flat country is subject to the elector of Bavaria; the city of Augsburgh is protected by the constitution of the German empire; the Grisons are safe in their mountains, and the country of Tirol is ranked among the numerous provinces of the house of Austria.

The wide extent of territory, which is included between the Inn, Noricum and the Danube, and the Save; Austria, Styria, Carinthia, Carniola, the Lower Hungary and Sclavonia, was known to the ancients under the names of Noricum and Pannonia. In their original state of independence, their fierce inhabitants were intimately connected. Under the Roman government they were frequently united, and they still remain the patrimony of a fingle family. They now contain the refidence of a German prince, who styles himself Emperor of the Romans, and form the center, as well as ftrength, of the Auftrian power. It may not be improper to observe, that if we except Bohemia, Moravia, the northern skirts of Austria, and a part of Hungary, between the Teyss and the Danube, all the other domi-

Pannonia.

<sup>78</sup> Tournefort, Voyages en Grèce et Asie was gradually extended by the Romans from Mineure, lettre zviii.

<sup>79</sup> The name of Illyricum originally be- Pannonia, 1. i. c. 3. longed to the fea-coast of the Hadriatic, and

the Alps to the Euxine Sea. See Severini

Dalmatia.

CHAP. nions of the House of Austria were comprised within the limits of the Roman empire.

Dalmatia, to which the name of Illyricum more properly belonged, was a long, but narrow tract, between the Save and the Adriatic. The best part of the sea-coast, which still retains its ancient appellation, is a province of the Venetian state, and the seat of the little republic of Ragufa. The inland parts have affumed the Sclavonian names of Croatia and Bosnia; the former obeys an Austrian governor, the latter a Turkish pasha; but the whole country is still infested by tribes of barbarians, whose savage independence irregularly marks the doubtful limit of the Christian and Mahometan power 80.

Mæsia and Dacia.

After the Danube had received the waters of the Teyss and the Save, it acquired, at leaft, among the Greeks, the name of Ister ". It formerly divided Mæsia and Dacia, the latter of which, as we have already seen, was a conquest of Trajan, and the only province beyond the river. If we inquire into the present state of those countries, we shall find that, on the left hand of the Danube, Temeswar and Tranfylvania have been annexed, after many revolutions, to the crown of Hungary; whilst the principalities of Moldavia and Walachia acknowledge the fupremacy of the Ottoman Porte. On the right hand of the Danube, Mæsia, which, during the middle ages, was broken into the barbarian kingdoms of Servia and Bulgaria, is again united in Turkish slavery.

Thrace, Macedonia, and Greece.

The appellation of Roumelia, which is still bestowed by the Turks on the extensive countries of Thrace, Macedonia, and Greece. preferves the memory of their ancient state under the Roman empire. In the time of the Antonines, the martial regions of Thrace, 30 A Venetian traveller, the Abbate from the munificence of the emperor, its Fortis, has lately given us fome ac- fovereign. count of those very obscure countries. 81 The Save rifes near the confines of Iltria.

But the geography and antiquities of the and was confidered by the more early Greeks western Illyricum can be expected only as the principal stream of the Danube.

frem

from the mountains of Hæmus and Rhodope, to the Bosphorus and CHAP. the Hellespont, had assumed the form of a province. Notwithflanding the change of masters and of religion, the new city of Rome, founded by Constantine on the banks of the Bosphorus, has ever fince remained the capital of a great monarchy. kingdom of Macedonia, which, under the reign of Alexander, gave laws to Afia, derived more folid advantages from the policy of the two Philips; and with its dependencies of Epirus and Theffaly, extended from the Ægean to the Ionian fea. When we reflect on the fame of Thebes and Argos, of Sparta and Athens, we can fearcely perfuade ourselves, that so many immortal republies of ancient Greece, were loft in a fingle province of the Roman empire, which, from the fuperior influence of the Achæan league, was usually denominated the province of Achaia.

Such was the state of Europe under the Roman emperors. The Asia Minorprovinces of Asia, without excepting the transient conquests of Trajan, are all comprehended within the limits of the Turkith power. But inflead of following the arbitrary divisions of despotism and ignorance, it will be fafer for us, as well as more agreeable, to observe the indelible characters of nature. The name of Asia Minor is attributed with some propriety to the peninsula, which, confined between the Euxine and the Mediterranean, advances from the Euphrates towards Europe. The most extensive and flourishing district, westward of mount Taurus and the river Halys, was dignified by the Romans with the exclusive title of Asia. The jurifdiction of that province extended over the ancient monarchies of Troy, Lydia, and Phrygia, the maritime countries of the Pamphylians, Lycians, and Carians, and the Grecian colonies of Ionia. which equalled in arts, though not in arms, the glory of their parent. The kingdoms of Bithynia and Pontus poffeffed the northern fide of the peninfula from Constantinople to Trebizond. On the opposite side, the province of Cilicia was terminated by the moun-

CHAP. tains of Syria: the inland country, separated from the Roman Asia by the river Halys, and from Armenia by the Euphrates, had once formed the independent kingdom of Cappadocia. In this place we may observe, that the northern shores of the Euxine, beyond Trebizond in Asia, and beyond the Danube in Europe, acknowledged the fovereignty of the emperors, and received at their hands, either tributary princes, or Roman garrifons. Budzak, Crim Tartary, Circassia, and Mingrelia, are the modern appellations of those favage countries 82.

Syria, Phœnicia, and Palestine.

Under the successors of Alexander, Syria was the seat of the Seleucidæ, who reigned over Upper Asia, till the successful revolt of the Parthians confined their dominions between the Euphrates and the Mediterranean. When Syria became fubject to the Romans, it formed the eastern frontier of their empire; nor did that province, in its utmost latitude, know any other bounds than the mountains of Cappadocia to the north, and towards the fouth, the confines of Egypt, and the Red Sea. Phœnicia and Palestine were fometimes annexed to, and fometimes separated from, the jurisdiction of Syria. The former of these was a narrow and rocky coast; the latter was a territory scarcely superior to Wales, either in fertility or extent. Yet Phœnicia and Palestine will for ever live in the memory of mankind; fince America, as well as Europe, has received letters from the one, and religion from the other 83. A fandy defert alike destitute of wood and water skirts along the doubtful confine of Syria, from the Euphrates to the Red Sea. The wandering life of the Arabs was inseparably connected with their inde-mined the coasts of the Euxine, when he to America, about fifteen centuries after the was governor of Cappadocia.

favages of Europe about fifteen hundred years the hands of the Greeks and Romans.

82 See the Periplus of Arrian. He exa- before Christ; and the Europeans carried them Christian æra. But in a period of three thou-The progress of religion is well known. fand years, the Phoenician alphabet received The use of letters was introduced among the considerable alterations, as it passed through pendence, and wherever, on fome spots less barren than the rest, CHAP. they ventured to form any fettled habitations, they foon became fubjects of the Roman empire 84.

The geographers of antiquity have frequently helitated to what Egyptportion of the globe they should ascribe Egypt 35. By its situation that celebrated kingdom is included within the immense peninsula of Africa, but it is accessible only on the fide of Asia, whose revolutions, in almost every period of history, Egypt has humbly obeyed. A Roman præfect was feated on the splendid throne of the Ptolemies; and the iron sceptre of the Mamalukes is now in the hands of a Turkish pasha. The Nile flows down the country, above five hundred miles from the tropic of Cancer to the Mediterranean, and marks, on either fide, the extent of fertility by the measure of its inundations: Cyrene, fituate towards the west, and along the seacoast, was first a Greek colony, afterwards a province of Egypt, and is now loft in the defert of Barca.

From Cyrene to the Ocean, the coast of Africa extends above fif- Africateen hundred miles; yet so closely is it pressed between the Mediterranean and the Sahara, or fandy defert, that its breadth feldom exceeds fourfcore or an hundred miles. The eaftern division was confidered by the Romans as the more peculiar and proper province of Africa. Till the arrival of the Phœnician colonies, that fertile country was inhabited by the Libyans, the most savage of mankind. Under the immediate jurisdiction of Carthage, it became the center of commerce and empire; but the republic of Carthage is now degenerated into the feeble and diforderly states of Tripoli and geographers, fix the lithmus of Suez as the great Catabathmus, or descent, which boundary of Asia and Africa. Dionysius, last would assign to Asia, not only Egypt, but Mela, Pliny, Salluft, Hirtius and Solinus, part of Libya.

<sup>84</sup> Dion Caffius, lib. lxviii. p. 1131.

have preferred for that purpose the west-85 Ptolemy and Strabo, with the modern ern branch of the Nile, or even the CHAP. Tunis. The military government of Algiers oppresses the wide extent of Numidia, as it was once united under Massinissa and Jugurtha: but in the time of Augustus, the limits of Numidia were contracted; and, at least, two thirds of the country acquiesced in the name of Mauritania, with the epithet of Cæsariensis. The genuine Mauritania, or country of the Moors, which, from the ancient city of Tingi, or Tangier, was diffinguished by the appellation of Tingitana, is represented by the modern kingdom of Fez. Sallè, on the Ocean, fo infamous at present for its piratical depredations, was noticed by the Romans, as the extreme object of their power, and almost of their geography. A city of their foundation may still be difcovered near Mequinez, the refidence of the barbarian whom we condescend to style the Emperor of Morocco; but it does not appear, that his more fouthern dominions, Morocco itself, and Segelmessa, were ever comprehended within the Roman province. The western parts of Africa are interfected by the branches of mount Atlas, a name fo idly celebrated by the fancy of poets 86; but which is now diffused over the immense ocean that rolls between the ancient and the new continent 87.

The Mediterranean with its

Having now finished the circuit of the Roman empire, we may observe, that Africa is divided from Spain by a narrow firait of about twelve miles, through which the Atlantic flows into the Mediterranean. The columns of Hercules, fo famous among the ancients, were two mountains which feemed to have been torn afunder by some convulsion of the elements; and at the foot of Travels, p. 5.) are very unlike a folitary mountain which rears its head into the clouds, and feems to support the heavens. fea, and as it was frequently visited by the Roman empire.

<sup>85</sup> The long range, moderate height, and Phoenicians, might engage the notice of the gentle declivity of mount Atlas (see Shaw's Greek poets. See Buffon, Histoire Naturelle, tom. i. p. 312. Histoire des Voyages, toni.

<sup>87</sup> M. de Voltaire, tom. xiv. p. 297. un-The peak of Tencriff, on the contrary, rifes supported by either fact or probability, has a league and a half above the furface of the generously bestowed the Canary Islands on the

the European mountain, the fortress of Gibraltar is now feated. C H A P. The whole extent of the Mediterranean Sea, its coasts, and its islands, were comprised within the Roman dominion. Of the larger islands, the two Baleares, which derive their names of Majorca and Minorca from their respective size, are subject at present, the former to Spain, the latter to Great Britain. It is easier to deplore the fate, than to describe the actual condition of Corfica. Two Italian fovereigns assume a regal title from Sardinia and Sicily. Crete, or Candia, with Cyprus, and most of the smaller islands of Greece and Asia, have been subdued by the Turkish arms; whilst the little rock of Malta defies their power, and has emerged, under the government of its military Order, into fame and opulence.

man empire.

This long enumeration of provinces, whose broken fragments General idea have formed fo many powerful kingdoms, might almost induce us of the Roto forgive the vanity or ignorance of the ancients. Dazzled with the extensive sway, the irresissible strength, and the real or affected moderation of the emperors, they permitted themselves to despise, and fometimes to forget, the outlying countries which had been left in the enjoyment of a barbarous independence; and they gradually usurped the licence of confounding the Roman monarchy with the globe of the earth 88. But the temper, as well as knowledge, of a modern historian, require a more sober and accurate language. He may impress a juster image of the greatness of Rome, by observing that the empire was above two thousand miles in breadth, from the wall of Antoninus and the northern limits of Dacia, to mount Atlas and the tropic of Cancer; that it extended, in length, more than three thousand miles from the Western Ocean to the Euphrates; that it was fituated in the finest part of the Temperate Zone, between the twenty-fourth and fifty-fixth degrees of northern latitude; and that it was supposed to contain above fixteen hundred thousand fquare miles, for the most part of fertile and well cultivated land 39.

VOL. I.

<sup>88</sup> Bergier, Hist. des Grands Chemins, but I distrust both the doctor's learning and 1. iii. c. 1, 2, 3, 4. a very useful collection. his maps. 89 See Templeman's Survey of the Globe :

CHAP. II.

Of the Union and internal Prosperity of the Roman Empire, in the Age of the Antonines.

II. Principles of government.

CHAP. TT is not alone by the rapidity, or extent of conquest, that we I should estimate the greatness of Rome. The sovereign of the Russian deserts commands a larger portion of the globe. In the feventh fummer after his passage of the Hellespont, Alexander erected the Macedonian trophies on the banks of the Hyphasis'. Within less than a century, the irresistible Zingis, and the Mogul princes of his race, spread their cruel devastations and transient empire, from the sea of China, to the confines of Egypt and Germany2. But the firm edifice of Roman power was raifed and preserved by the wisdom of ages. The obedient provinces of Trajan and the Antonines were united by laws, and adorned by arts. They might occasionally fuffer from the partial abuse of delegated authority; but the general principle of government was wife, fimple, and beneficent. They enjoyed the religion of their anceflors, whilst in civil honours and advantages they were exalted, by just degrees, to an equality with their conquerors.

Universal fpirit of toleration.

I. The policy of the emperors and the fenate, as far as it concerned religion, was happily feconded by the reflections of the enlightened, and by the habits of the fuperstitious, part of their fubjects. The various modes of worship, which prevailed in the

Roman

<sup>1</sup> They were erected about the mid- tered by the five great streams of the way between Lahor and Dehli. The Indus. conquests of Alexander in Hindostan were 2 See M. de Guignes Histoire des Huns, confined to the Punjab, a country wa- 1. xv, xvi, and xvii.

Roman world, were all confidered by the people, as equally true; CHAP. by the philosopher, as equally false; and by the magistrate, as equally useful. And thus toleration produced not only mutual indulgence, but even religious concord.

The fupersition of the people was not embittered by any mixture Of the of theological rancour; nor was it confined by the chains of any fpeculative fystem. The devout polytheist, though fondly attached to his national rites, admitted with implicit faith the different religions of the earth '. Fear, gratitude, and curiofity, a dream or an omen, a fingular diforder or a diftant journey, perpetually disposed him to multiply the articles of his belief, and to enlarge the lift of his protectors. The thin texture of the Pagan mythology was interwoven with various, but not discordant materials. As soon as it was allowed that fages and heroes, who had lived, or who had died for the benefit of their country, were exalted to a state of power and immortality, it was univerfally confessed, that they deserved, if not the adoration, at least the reverence, of all mankind. The deities of a thousand groves and a thousand streams possessed, in peace, their local and respective influence; nor could the Roman who deprecated the wrath of the Tiber, deride the Egyptian who prefented his offering to the beneficent genius of the Nile. The visible powers of Nature, the planets, and the elements, were the fame throughout the universe. The invisible governors of the moral world were inevitably cast in a similar mould of siction and allegory. Every virtue, and even vice, acquired its divine representative; every art fo lively a manner as Herodotus, the true ge- xv.); and the Christians as well as Jews, who nius of Polytheism. The best commentary lived under the Roman empire, formed a very may be found in Mr. Hume's Natural History important exception: fo important indeed, of Religion; and the best contrast in Bof- that the discussion will require a distinct chapfuet's Universal History. Some obscure ter of this work. traces of an intolerant spirit appear in the CHAP. and profession its patron, whose attributes, in the most distant ages and countries, were uniformly derived from the character of their peculiar votaries. A republic of gods of fuch opposite tempers and interest required, in every fystem, the moderating hand of a supreme magistrate, who, by the progress of knowledge and flattery, was gradually invested with the sublime perfections of an Eternal Parent, and an Omnipotent Monarch 4. Such was the mild fpirit of antiquity, that the nations were less attentive to the difference, than to the refemblance, of their religious worship. The Greek, the Roman, and the Barbarian, as they met before their respective altars, eafily perfuaded themselves, that under various names, and with various ceremonies, they adored the fame deities. The elegant mythology of Homer gave a beautiful, and almost a regular form, to the polytheifm of the ancient world 5.

3 There is not any writer who describes in conduct of the Egyptians (see Juvenal, Sat.

Of philofophers.

The philosophers of Greece deduced their morals from the nature of man, rather than from that of God. They meditated, however, on the Divine Nature, as a very curious and important speculation, and in the profound inquiry, they displayed the strength and weakness of the human understanding 6. Of the four most celebrated fchools, the Stoics and the Platonifts endeavoured to reconcile the jarring interests of reason and piety. They have left us the most fublime proofs of the existence and perfections of the first cause; but, as it was impossible for them to conceive the creation of matter, the workman in the Stoic philosophy was not fufficiently diffinguished from the work; whilft, on the contrary, the spiritual God of Plato the fovereign of Olympus, are very clearly of Mercury, Mars, Apollo, &c. described in the xvth book of the lliad: in without perceiving it, has improved the theology of Homer.

4 The rights, powers, and pretentions of themselves applied to their gods the names

<sup>17.</sup> Within a century or two the Gauls philosophers.

<sup>6</sup> The admirable work of Cicero de Na. the Greek original, I mean; for Mr. Pope, turâ Deorum, is the best clue we have to guide us through the dark and profound abyfs. He reprefents with candonr, and 5 See for inftance, Cafar de Bell. Gall. vi. confutes with fubtlety, the opinions of the

and his disciples, resembled an idea, rather than a substance. The opinions of the Academics and Epicureans were of a less religious cast; but whilst the modest science of the former induced them to doubt, the politive ignorance of the latter urged them to deny, the providence of a Supreme Ruler. The fpirit of inquiry, prompted by emulation, and supported by freedom, had divided the public teachers of philosophy into a variety of contending fects; but the ingenuous youth, who, from every part, reforted to Athens, and the other feats of learning in the Roman empire, were alike inftructed in every school to reject and to despise the religion of the multitude. How, indeed, was it possible, that a philosopher should accept, as divine truths, the idle tales of the poets, and the incoherent traditions of antiquity; or, that he should adore, as gods, those imperfect beings whom he must have despised, as men! Against such unworthy adversaries, Cicero condescended to employ the arms of reason and eloquence; but the satire of Lucian was a much more adequate, as well as more efficacious weapon. We may be well affured, that a writer, conversant with the world, would never have ventured to expose the gods of his country to public ridicule, had they not already been the objects of fecret contempt among the polished and enlightened orders of fociety 7.

Notwithstanding the fashionable irreligion which prevailed in the age of the Antonines, both the interest of the priests, and the credulity of the people, were sufficiently respected. In their writings and conversation, the philosophers of antiquity afferted the independent dignity of reason; but they resigned their actions to the commands of law and of custom. Viewing, with a smile of pity and indulgence, the various errors of the vulgar, they diligently practised the ceremonies of their fathers, devoutly frequented the temples of the gods; and sometimes condescending to act a part on the theatre of fuperstition,

<sup>7</sup> I do not pretend to affert, that, in this fittion, dreams, omens, apparitions, &c. had irreligious age, the natural terrors of super-last their efficacy.

C H A P. superstition, they concealed the sentiments of an Atheist under the facerdotal robes. Reasoners of such a temper were scarcely inclined to wrangle about their respective modes of faith, or of worship. It was indifferent to them what shape the folly of the multitude might chuse to assume; and they approached, with the same inward contempt, and the same external reverence, he altars of the Libyan, the Olympian, or the Capitoline Jupiter 3.

Of the magiftrate.

It is not easy to conceive from what motives a spirit of persecution could introduce itself into the Roman councils. The magiftrates could not be actuated by a blind, though honest bigotry, fince the magistrates were themselves philosophers; and the schools of Athens had given laws to the senate. They could not be impelled by ambition or avarice, as the temporal and ecclefiaftical powers were united in the fame hands. The pontiffs were chosen among the most illustrious of the senators; and the office of Supreme Pontiff was conftantly exercifed by the emperors themselves. They knew and valued the advantages of religion, as it is connected with civil government. They encouraged the public festivals which humanize the manners of the people. They managed the arts of divination, as a convenient inftrument of policy; and they respected, as the firmest bond of society, the useful persuasion, that either in this or in a future life, the crime of perjury is most affuredly punished by the avenging gods?. But whilft they acknowledged the general advantages of religion, they were convinced, that the various modes of worship contributed alike to the same salutary purposes; and that, in every country, the form of superstition, which had received the fanction of time and experience, was the best adapted to the climate, and to its inhabitants. Avarice and tafte very frequently despoiled the vanquished nations of the elegant statues of CHAP. their gods, and the rich ornaments of their temples ": but, in the exercise of the religion which they derived from their ancestors, they uniformly experienced the indulgence, and even protection, of the Roman conquerors. The province of Gaul feems, and indeed only feems, an exception to this universal toleration. Under the specious pretext of abolishing human sacrifices, the emperors Tiberius and Claudius suppressed the dangerous power of the Druids ": but the priefts themselves, their gods and their altars, sublisted in peaceful obscurity till the final destruction of Paganism ".

In the provinces:

frequently

<sup>8</sup> Socrates, Epicurus, Cicero, and Plu- duous and exemplary. Diogen. Laert. x. 10. tarch, always inculcated a decent reverence for the religion of their own country, and of mankind. The devotion of Epicurus was affi-fion had loft much of its effect.

Rome, the capital of a great monarchy, was inceffantly filled with at Rome, fubjects and strangers from every part of the world 13, who all introduced and enjoyed the favourite superstitions of their native country 14. Every city in the empire was justified in maintaining the purity of its ancient ceremonies; and the Roman senate, using the common privilege, fometimes interposed, to check this inundation of foreign rites. The Egyptian superstition, of all the most contemptible and abject, was frequently prohibited; the temples of Serapis and Isis demolished, and their worshippers banished from Rome and Italy 15. But the zeal of fanaticism prevailed over the so See the fate of Syracuse, Tarentum, Ambracia, Corinth, &c. the conduct of Verres, in Cicero (Actio ii. Orat. 4.), and the usual practice of governors, in the viiith Satire of Juvenal. " Sueton. in Claud .- Plin. Hift. Nat.

p. 230-252.

13 Seneca Confolat. ad Helviam, p. 74. Edit. Lipf.

"4 Dionysius Halicarn. Antiquitat. Roman. l. ii.

15 In the year of Rome 701, the temple of Isis and Serapis was demolished by the order of the fenate (Dion Cassius, l. xl.

p. 252.), and even by the hands of the conful (Valerius Maximus, i. 3.). After the deathof Cæfar, it was restored at the public expence (Dion, l. xlvii. p. 501.). When Augustus was in Egypt, he revered the majesty of Serapis (Dion, l. li. p. 647.); but in the Pomærium of Rome, and a mile round it, 12 Pelloutier Histoire des Celtes, tom. vi. he prohibited the worship of the Egyptian gods (Dion, 1. liii. p. 679. l. liv. p. 735.). They remained, however, very fashionable under his reign (Ovid. de Art. Amand. l. i.) and that of his fuccessor, till the justice of Tiberius was provoked to fome acts of feverity. (See Tacit. Annal. ii. 85. Joseph. Antiquit. l. xviii. c. 3.)

CHAP. cold and feeble efforts of policy. The exiles returned, the profelytes multiplied, the temples were restored with increasing splendor, and Isis and Serapis at length assumed their place among the Roman deities 16. Nor was this indulgence a departure from the old maxims of government. In the pureft ages of the commonwealth, Cybele and Æsculapius had been invited by solemn embaffies 17; and it was customary to tempt the protectors of besieged cities, by the promise of more distinguished honours than they possessed in their native country 18. Rome gradually became the common temple of her fubjects; and the freedom of the city was bestowed on all the gods of mankind 19.

Freedom of Rome.

II. The narrow policy of preserving, without any foreign mixture, the pure blood of the ancient citizens, had checked the fortune, and hastened the ruin, of Athens and Sparta. The aspiring genius of Rome facrificed vanity to ambition, and deemed it more prudent, as well as honourable, to adopt virtue and merit for her own wherefoever they were found, among flaves or ftrangers, enemies or barbarians 20. During the most flourishing ara of the Athenian commonwealth, the number of citizens gradually decreafed from about thirty 21 to twenty-one thousand 22. If, on the contrary, we fludy the growth of the Roman republic, we may discover, that, notwithstanding the incessant demands of wars and colonies, the citizens, who, in the first census of Servius Tullius, amounted to no more than eighty-three thousand, were multiplied, before the the Flavian family.

*7 See Livy, 1. xi. and xxix.

20 Tacit. Annal. xi. 24. The Orbis Ro- c. 4.

16 Tertullian in Apologetic. c. 6. p. 74. manus of the learned Spankeim, is a com-Edit. Havercamp. I am inclined to attri- plete history of the progressive admission of bute their establishment to the devotion of Latium, Italy, and the provinces, to the freedom of Rome.

21 Herodotus, v. 97. It should feem, 18 Macrob. Saturnalia, l. iii. c. g. He however, that he followed a large and popular estimation.

22 Athenaus Deipnosophist. 1. vi. p. 272. Edit, Cafaubon, Meursius de Fortuna Attica.

commence-

gives us a form of evocation.

<sup>19</sup> Minutius Fælix in Octavio, p. 54. Arnobius, l. vi. p. 115.

commencement of the focial war, to the number of four hundred CHAP. and fixty-three thousand men, able to bear arms in the service of their country 21. When the allies of Rome claimed an equal share of honours and privileges, the fenate indeed preferred the chance of arms to an ignominious concession. The Samnites and the Lucanians paid the severe penalty of their rashness; but the rest of the Italian states, as they successively returned to their duty, were admitted into the bosom of the republic 24, and soon contributed to the ruin of public freedom. Under a democratical government, the citizens exercife the powers of fovereignty; and those powers will be first abused, and afterwards lost, if they are committed to an unwieldy multitude. But when the popular affemblies had been suppressed by the administration of the emperors, the conquerors were diffinguished from the vanquished nations, only as the first and most honourable order of subjects; and their increase, however rapid, was no longer exposed to the same dangers. Yet the wifest princes, who adopted the maxims of Augustus, guarded with the firictest care the dignity of the Roman name, and diffused the freedom of the city with a prudent liberality 25.

Till the privileges of Romans had been progressively extended Italy. to all the inhabitants of the empire, an important distinction was preferved between Italy and the provinces. The former was efteemed the centre of public unity, and the firm basis of the conflitution. Italy claimed the birth, or at least the residence, of the emperors and the fenate 16. The estates of the Italians were exempt

23 See a very accurate collection of the the practice of his own age, and so little to numbers of each Lustrum in M. de Beaufort, that of Augustus. Republique Romaine, 1. iv. c. 4.

one edict, all his subjects, citizens. But we the reign of Trajan, Italy had sunk nearer may justly suspect that the Historian Dion was to the level of the provinces. the author of a counsel, so much adapted to 26 The fenators were obliged to have one-Paterculus, I. ii. c. 15, 16, 17.

See Plin, I. vi. ep. 19. The qualification was reduced by Marcus to one-fourth. Since

VOL. I.

from

C II A P. from taxes, their perfons from the arbitrary jurisdiction of governors. Their municipal corporations, formed after the perfect model of the capital, were intrufted, under the immediate eye of the fupreme power, with the execution of the laws. From the foot of the Alps to the extremity of Calabria, all the natives of Italy were born citizens of Rome. Their partial diffinctions were obliterated, and they infenfibly coalefced into one great nation, united by language, manners, and civil institutions, and equal to the weight of a powerful The republic gloried in her generous policy, and was frequently rewarded by the merit and fervices of her adopted fons. Had the always confined the diffinction of Romans to the ancient families within the walls of the city, that immortal name would have been deprived of fome of its noblest ornaments. Virgil was a native of Mantua; Horace was inclined to doubt whether he thould call himself an Apulian or a Lucanian; it was in Padua that an historian was found worthy to record the majestic series of Roman victories. The patriot family of the Catos emerged from Tusculum: and the little town of Arpinum claimed the double honour of producing Marius and Cicero, the former of whom deferved, after Romulus and Camillus, to be flyled the Third Founder of Rome; and the latter, after faving his country from the defigns of Catiline, enabled her to contend with Athens for the palm of eloquence 27.

The provinces.

The provinces of the empire (as they have been described in the preceding chapter) were destitute of any public force, or constitutional freedom. In Etruria, in Greece 28, and in Gaul 29, it was condescended to restore the names of those tablissement de Monarchie Françoise, affemblies, when they could no longer be 1. i. c. 4. dangerous.

&lt;sup>27</sup> The first part of the Verona Illustrata <sup>29</sup> They are frequently mentioned of the marquis Massei, gives the clearest and by Carfar. The Abbé Dubos attempts, most comprehensive view of the state of Italy with very little success, to prove that under the Cæfars.

the affemblies of Gaul were continu-28 See Paufanias, 1. vii. The Romans ed under the emperors. Histoire de l'E-the first care of the senate to dissolve those dangerous confederacies CHAP. which taught mankind, that, as the Roman arms prevailed by division, they might be resisted by union. Those princes, whom the oftentation of gratitude or generofity permitted for a while to hold a precarious sceptre, were dismissed from their thrones, as soon as they had performed their appointed talk of fashioning to the yoke the vanquished nations. The free states and cities which had embraced the cause of Rome, were rewarded with a nominal alliance, and infenfibly funk into real fervitude. The public authority was every where exercifed by the ministers of the senate and of the emperors, and that authority was absolute, and without control. But the fame falutary maxims of government, which had fecured the peace and obedience of Italy, were extended to the most diftant conquests. A nation of Romans was gradually formed in the provinces, by the double expedient of introducing colonies, and of admitting the most faithful and deserving of the provincials to the freedom of Rome.

"Wherefoever the Roman conquers, he inhabits," is a very just Colonies and observation of Seneca 30, confirmed by history and experience. The towns. natives of Italy, allured by pleafure or by interest, hastened to enjoy the advantages of victory; and we may remark, that about forty years after the reduction of Asia, eighty thousand Romans were massacred in one day, by the cruel orders of Mithridates 31. These voluntary exiles were engaged, for the most part, in the occupations of commerce, agriculture, and the farm of the revenue. But after the legions were rendered permanent by the emperors, the provinces were peopled by a race of foldiers; and the veterans, whether they received the reward of their fervice in land or in money, usually settled with their families in the country, where they had honourably spent fwell the massacre to 150,000 citizens; but 31 Memnon apud Photium, c. 33. Valer. I should eliem the smaller number to be Maxim. ix. 2. Plutarch and Dion Cassius more than sufficient.

<sup>30</sup> Seneca in Confolat. ad Helviam, c. 6.

CHAP, their youth. Throughout the empire, but more particularly in the western parts, the most fertile districts, and the most convenient fituations, were referved for the establishment of colonies; some of which were of a civil, and others of a military nature. In their manners and internal policy, the colonies formed a perfect reprefentation of their great parent; and as they were foon endeared to the natives by the ties of friendship and alliance, they effectually diffused a reverence for the Roman name, and a defire, which was feldom disappointed, of sharing, in due time, its honours and advantages 32. The municipal cities infensibly equalled the rank and fplendour of the colonies; and in the reign of Hadrian, it was difputed which was the preferable condition, of those societies which had iffued from, or those which had been received into, the bosom of Rome 33. The right of Latium, as it was called, conferred on the cities to which it had been granted, a more partial favour. The magistrates only, at the expiration of their office, assumed the quality of Roman citizens; but as those offices were annual, in a few years they circulated round the principal families 34. Those of the provincials who were permitted to bear arms in the legions 15; those who exercised any civil employment; all, in a word, who performed any public fervice, or displayed any personal talents, were rewarded with a prefent, whose value was continually diminished by the increasing liberality of the emperors. Yet even, in the age of the Antonines, when the freedom of the city had been

beflowed

and nine in Britain, of which London, Colchefter, Lincoln, Chefter, Gloucester, and Bath, still remain considerable cities (see Richard of Cirencester, p. 36, and Whitaker's History of Manchester, l. i. c. 3.).

<sup>33</sup> Aul. Gell. Noctes Atticze, xvi. 13. The emperor Hadrian expressed his surprise, that the cities of Utica, Gades, and Itatica, which.

<sup>32</sup> Twenty-five colonies were fettled in already enjoyed the rights of Municipia, Spain (fee Plin. Hist. Natur. iii. 3, 4. iv. 35): should folicit the title of colonies. Their example, however, became fashionable, and the empire was filled with honorary colonies. See Spanheim, de Ulu Numismatum, Differtat, xiii, bestowed on the greater number of their subjects, it was still accom- CHAP! panied with very folid advantages. The bulk of the people acquired, with that title, the benefit of the Roman laws, particularly in the interesting articles of marriage, testaments, and inheritances; and the road of fortune was open to those whose pretentions were feconded by favour or merit. The grandfons of the Gauls, who had befreged Julius Cæfar in Alefia, commanded legions, governed provinces, and were admitted into the fenate of Rome 36. Their ambition, inflead of diffurbing the tranquillity of the flate, was intimately connected with its fafety and greatness.

<sup>34</sup> Spanheim, Orbis Roman. c. 8. p. 62. 35 Ariffid, in Roma Encomio, tom. i. p. 218. Edit. Jebh.

So fensible were the Romans of the influence of language over Division of national manners, that it was their most ferious care to extend, with the Latin and the Greek the progress of their arms, the use of the Latin tongue 37. The provinces. ancient dialects of Italy, the Sabine, the Etruscan, and the Venetian, funk into oblivion; but in the provinces, the east was less docile than the west, to the voice of its victorious preceptors. This obvious difference marked the two portions of the empire with a distinction of colours, which, though it was in some degree concealed during the meridian fplendor of profperity, became gradually more visible, as the shades of night descended upon the Roman world. The western countries were civilized by the same hands which subdued them. As foon as the barbarians were reconciled to obedience, their minds were opened to any new impressions of knowledge and politeness. The language of Virgil and Cicero, though with fome inevitable mixture of corruption, was fo univerfally adopted in Africa, Spain, Gaul, Britain, and Pannonia 18, that the faint traces of the Punic or Celtic idioms were preferved elatione Lingua Latina, c. 3.

<sup>36</sup> Tacit. Annal. xi. 23, 24. Hift. iv. 74.

Apuleius and Augustin will answer for fcriptions.

Africa: Strabo for Spain and Gaul: Taci-37 See Plin. Hift. Natur. iii. 5. Augustin tus, in the life of Agricola, tor Britain; de Civitate Dei, xix. 7. Lipfius de pronun- and Velleius Paterculus, for Pannonia. To them we may add the language of the In-

CHAP, only in the mountains, or among the peafants 19. Education and study insensibly inspired the natives of those countries with the fentiments of Romans; and Italy gave fashions, as well as laws, to her Latin provincials. They folicited with more ardour, and obtained with more facility, the freedom and honours of the state; fupported the national dignity in letters 40 and in arms; and, at length, in the person of Trajan, produced an emperor whom the Scipios would not have disowned for their countryman. The situation of the Greeks was very different from that of the barbarians. The former had been long fince civilized and corrupted. They had too much taste to relinquish their language, and too much vanity to adopt any foreign inflitutions. Still preferving the prejudices, after they had loft the virtues, of their ancestors, they affected to despise the unpolished manners of the Roman conquerors, whilst they were compelled to respect their superior wisdom and power 41. Nor was the influence of the Grecian language and fentiments confined to the narrow limits of that once celebrated country. Their empire, by the progress of colonies and conquest, had been diffused from the Hadriatic to the Euphrates and the Nile. Afia was covered with Greek cities, and the long reign of the Macedonian kings had introduced a filent revolution into Syria and Egypt. In their pompous courts those princes united the elegance of Athens with the luxury of the East, and the example of the court was imitated, at an humble distance, by the higher ranks of their fubiects. Such was the general division of the Roman empire tains of Wales, Cornwall, and Armo- to the Punic. rica. We may observe that Apuleius reproaches an African youth, who lived Senecas, Lucan, Martial, and Quintilian. among the populace, with the use of the "There is not, I believe, from Dionysius

<sup>39</sup> The Celtic was preferved in the moun- St. Austin's congregations were strangers

<sup>40</sup> Spain alone produced Columella, the

Punic; whilft he had almost forgot Greek, to Libanius, a single Greek critic who menand neither could nor would fpeak Latin tions Virgil or Horace. They feem igno-(Apolog. p. 596.). The greater part of rant that the Romans had any good writers.

into the Latin and Greek languages. To these we may add a third distinction for the body of the natives in Syria and especially in Egypt. The use of their ancient dialects, by secluding them from the commerce of mankind, checked the improvements of those barbarians 42. The flothful effeminacy of the former, exposed them to the contempt; the fullen ferociousness of the latter, excited the averfion of the conquerors 41. Those nations had submitted to the Roman power, but they feldom defired or deferved the freedom of the city; and it was remarked that more than two hundred and thirty years elapsed after the ruin of the Ptolemies, before an Egyptian was

It is a just though trite observation, that victorious Rome was her- General use felf subdued by the arts of Greece. Those immortal writers who still guages. command the admiration of modern Europe, foon became the favourite object of study and imitation in Italy and the western provinces. But the elegant amusements of the Romans were not suffered to interfere with their found maxims of policy. Whilst they acknowledged the charms of the Greek, they afferted the dignity of the Latin tongue, and the exclusive use of the latter was inflexibly maintained in the administration of civil as well as military government 45. The two languages exercifed at the same time their separate jurisdiction throughout the empire: the former, as the natural idiom of science; the latter, as the legal dialect of public transactions. Those who united letters with bufiness, were equally conversant with both; and it was almost impossible, in any province, to find a Roman sub-admitted into the fenate of Rome ++.

Marcellin. xxii. 16.

(Bibliotheque Ecclefiastique, tom. xix. p. 1. c. 8.) how much the use of the Syriac and

Egyptian languages were still preserved. 43 See Juvenal, Sat. iii. and xv. Ammian.

<sup>44</sup> Dion Cassius, l. lxxvii. p. 1275. The tonius in Claud. c. 16.

<sup>42</sup> The curious reader may fee in Dupin first instance happened under the reign of Septimius Severus.

<sup>45</sup> See Valerius Maximus, 1. ii. c. z. n. 2. The emperor Claudius disfranchifed an eminent Grecian for not understanding Latin. He was probably in some public office. Sue-Slaves.

CHAP. ject, of a liberal education, who was at once a stranger to the Greek and to the Latin language.

It was by fuch infiitutions that the nations of the empire infenfibly

Their treatment.

melted away into the Roman name and people. But there still remained, in the centre of every province and of every family, an unhappy condition of men who endured the weight, without sharing the benefits of fociety. In the free flates of antiquity, the domestic flaves were exposed to the wanton rigour of despotism. The perfect fettlement of the Roman empire was preceded by ages of violence and rapine. The flaves confifted, for the most part, of barbarian captives, taken in thousands by the chance of war, purchased at a vile price 46, accustomed to a life of independence, and impatient to break and to revenge their fetters. Against fuch internal encinies, whose desperate insurrections had more than once reduced the republic to the brink of destruction 47, the most severe regulations 48, and the most cruel treatment, seemed almost justified by the great law of felf-preservation. But when the principal nations of Europe, Asia, and Africa, were united under the laws of one fovereign, the fource of foreign fupplies flowed with much less abundance, and the Romans were reduced to the milder but more tedious method of propagation. In their numerous families, and particularly in their country estates, they encouraged the marriage of their flaves. The fentiments of nature, the habits of education, and the possession of a dependent species of property, contributed to alleviate the hardships of servitude 47. The existence of a slave became an object of greater value, and though his

溢

happiness

<sup>46</sup> In the camp of Lucullus, an ox fold for a drachma, and a flave for four drachmæ, or about three shillings. Plutarch, in Lucull.

<sup>47</sup> Diodorus Siculus in Eclog. Hift. I. xxxiv. and xxxvi. Florus, iii. 19, 20.

<sup>48</sup> See a remarkable instance of feverity in Cicero in Verrem, v. 3.

<sup>49</sup> See in Gruter, and the other collectors. a great number of infcriptions addressed by flaves to their wives, children, fellow-fervants, masters, &c. They are all most probably of the Imperial age.

happiness still depended on the temper and circumstances of the CHAP. master, the humanity of the latter, instead of being restrained by fear, was encouraged by the fense of his own interest. The progress of manners was accelerated by the virtue or policy of the emperors; and by the edicts of Hadrian and the Antonines, the protection of the laws was extended to the most abject part of mankind. The jurisdiction of life and death over the flaves, a power long exercised and often abused, was taken out of private hands, and referved to the magistrates alone. The subterraneous prisons were abolished; and, upon a just complaint of intolerable treatment, the injured flave obtained either his deliverance, or a lefs cruel mafter 50.

Hope, the best comfort of our imperfect condition, was not denied Enfranchises to the Roman flave; and if he had any opportunity of rendering himself either useful or agreeable, he might very naturally expect that the diligence and fidelity of a few years would be rewarded with the inestimable gift of freedom. The benevolence of the master was fo frequently prompted by the meaner suggestions of vanity and avarice, that the laws found it more neceffary to reftrain than to encourage a profuse and undistinguishing liberality, which might degenerate into a very dangerous abuse 57. It was a maxim of ancient jurisprudence, that as a flave had not any country of his own, he acquired with his liberty an admission into the political fociety of which his patron was a member. The consequences of this maxim would have proflituted the privileges of the Roman city to a mean and promiscuous multitude. Some seafonable exceptions were therefore provided; and the honourable distinction was confined to such flaves only, as for just causes, and

<sup>50</sup> See the Augustan History, and a Dif- 51 See another differtation of M. de Bufertation of M. de Burigny, in the xxxvth rigny in the xxxviith volume, on the Roman volume of the Academy of Inscriptions, upon freedmen. the Roman flaves.

CHAP. with the approbation of the magistrate, should receive a folemn and legal manumission. Even these chosen freedmen obtained no more than the private rights of citizens, and were rigorously excluded from civil or military honours. Whatever might be the merit or fortune of their fons, they likewise were esteemed unworthy of a feat in the fenate; nor were the traces of a fervile origin allowed to be completely obliterated till the third or fourth generation 52. Without destroying the distinction of ranks, a distant prospect of freedom and honours was presented, even to those whom pride and prejudice almost disdained to number among the human species.

Numbers.

It was once proposed to discriminate the slaves by a peculiar habit; but it was juftly apprehended that there might be fome danger in acquainting them with their own numbers 53. Without interpreting, in their utmost strictness, the liberal appellations of legions and myriads 54; we may venture to pronounce, that the proportion of flaves, who were valued as property, was more confiderable than that of fervants, who can be computed only as an expence 55. The youths of a promifing genius were instructed in the arts and sciences, and their price was afcertained by the degree of their skill and talents 56. Almost every profession, either liberal 57 or mechanical, might be found in the household of an opulent fenator. The ministers of pomp and fenfuality were multiplied beyond the con-

52 Spanheim, Orbis Roman. 1. i. c. 16. p. 124, &c.

53 Seneca de Clementia, 1. i. c. 24. The original is much stronger, " Quantum perieulum immineret si servi nostri numerare nos copissent."

54 See Pliny (Hift. Natur. l. xxxiii.) and Athenœus (Deipnosophist. l. vi. p. 272.). The latter boldly afferts, that he knew very for use, but ostentation, ten and even twenty Desence. thousand flaves.

55 In Paris there are not more than 43,700 domestics of every fort, and not a twelfth part of the inhabitants. Messange Recherches fur la Population, p. 186.

56 A learned flave fold for many hundred pounds fterling; Atticus always bred and taught them himfelf. Cornel. Nepos in Vit.

57 Many of the Roman physicians were many (παμπολλοι) Romans who possessed, not flaves. See Dr. Middleton's Differtation and

ception

ception of modern luxury 58. It was more for the interest of the CHAP. merchant or manufacturer to purchase, than to hire his workmen; and in the country, flaves were employed as the cheapest and most laborious instruments of agriculture. To confirm the general obfervation, and to display the multitude of flaves, we might allege a variety of particular inflances. It was discovered, on a very melancholy occasion, that four hundred slaves were maintained in a fingle palace of Rome 59. The fame number of four hundred belonged to an estate, which an African widow, of a very private condition, religned to her fon, whilft she reserved for herself a much larger share of her property 6°. A freedman, under the reign of Augustus, though his fortune had suffered great losses in the civil wars, left behind him three thousand fix hundred voke of oxen, two hundred and fifty thousand head of smaller cattle, and what was almost included in the description of cattle, four thousand one hundred and fixteen flaves 61.

The number of fubjects who acknowledged the laws of Rome, Populousness of citizens, of provincials, and of flaves, cannot now be fixed with empire. fuch a degree of accuracy, as the importance of the object would deferve. We are informed, that when the emperor Claudius exercifed the office of cenfor, he took an account of fix millions nine hundred and forty-five thousand Roman citizens, who, with the proportion of women and children, must have amounted to about twenty millions of fouls. The multitude of fubjects of an inferior rank, was uncertain and fluctuating. But, after weighing with attention every circumstance which could influence the balance, it seems probable, that there existed, in the time of Claudius, about twice as many provincials as there were citizens, of either fex and of every

<sup>58</sup> Their ranks and offices are very copioufly enumerated by Pignorius de Servis.

<sup>59</sup> Tacit. Annal. xiv. 43. They all were executed for not preventing their master's murder.

<sup>62</sup> Apuleius in Apolog. p. 548. Edit. Delphin.

<sup>61</sup> Plin. Hift. Natur. I. xxxiii. 47.

CHAP. age; and that the flaves were at least equal in number to the free inhabitants of the Roman world. The total amount of this imperfect calculation would rife to about one hundred and twenty millions of persons: a degree of population which possibly exceeds that of modern Europe 62, and forms the most numerous society that has ever been united under the fame fystem of government.

Obedience and union.

Domestic peace and union were the natural consequences of the moderate and comprehensive policy embraced by the Romans. If we turn our eyes towards the monarchies of Afia, we shall behold despotism in the centre, and weakness in the extremities; the collection of the revenue, or the administration of justice, enforced by the presence of an army; hostile barbarians established in the heart of the country, hereditary fatraps usurping the dominion of the provinces, and subjects inclined to rebellion, though incapable of freedom. But the obedience of the Roman world was uniform, voluntary, and permanent. The vanquished nations, blended into one great people, refigned the hope, nay even the wish, of resuming their independence, and fearcely confidered their own existence as distinct from the existence of Rome. The established authority of the emperors pervaded without an effort the wide extent of their dominions, and was exercifed with the fame facility on the banks of the Thames, or of the Nile, as on those of the Tyber. The legions were deftined to ferve against the public enemy, and the civil magistrate feldom required the aid of a military force 63. In this state of general fecurity, the leifure as well as opulence both of the prince and people, were devoted to improve and to adorn the Roman empire.

Among

Britain and Ireland, eight in Spain and Por- taire, de Histoire Generale. tugal, ten or twelve in the European Ruffia, four in Sweden, three in Denmark and Nor- torian, is a fine picture of the Roman empire.

<sup>62</sup> Compute twenty millions in France, way, four in the Low Countries. The whole twenty-two in Germany, four in Hungary, would amount to one hundred and five, or ten in Italy with its islands, eight in Great one hundred and feven millions. See Vol-

<sup>63</sup> Joseph, de Bell. Judaico, 1. ii. c. 16. fix in Poland, fix in Greece and Turkey, The oration of Agrippa, or rather of the hif-

Among the innumerable monuments of architecture conftructed CHAP. by the Romans, how many have escaped the notice of history, how few have refisted the ravages of time and barbarism! And yet even numents, the majestic ruins that are still scattered over Italy and the provinces, would be fufficient to prove, that those countries were once the feat of a polite and powerful empire. Their greatness alone, or their beauty, might deferve our attention; but they are rendered more interesting, by two important circumstances, which connect the agreeable history of the arts, with the more useful history of human manners. Many of those works were erected at private expence, and almost all were intended for public benefit.

It is natural to suppose that the greatest number, as well as the Many of most considerable of the Roman edifices, were raised by the emperors, who possessed so unbounded a command both of men and pence. money. Augustus was accustomed to boast that he had found his capital of brick, and that he had left it of marble 64. strict economy of Vespasian was the source of his magnificence. The works of Trajan bear the stamp of his genius. The public monuments with which Hadrian adorned every province of the empire, were executed, not only by his orders, but under his immediate inspection. He was himself an artist; and he loved the arts, as they conduced to the glory of the monarch. They were encouraged by the Antonines, as they contributed to the happiness of the people. But if the emperors were the first, they were not the only architects of their dominions. Their example was univerfally imitated by their principal subjects, who were not afraid of declaring to the world that they had spirit to conceive, and wealth to accomplish,

<sup>64</sup> Sueton, in August. c. 28. Augustus Octavia, and the theatre of Marcellus. The built in Rome the temple and forum of Mars example of the fovereign was imitated by his the Avenger; the temple of Jupiter Tonans ministers and generals; and his friend Agrippa. in the Capitol; that of Apollo Palatine, with left behind him the immortal monument of public libraries; the portico and bafilica of the Pantheon. Caius and Lucius, the porticoes of Livia and

C H A P. complish, the noblest undertakings. Scarcely had the proud structure of the Colifeum been dedicated at Rome, before the edifices of a smaller scale indeed, but of the same design and materials, were erected for the use, and at the expence, of the cities of Capua and Verona 65. The infcription of the stupendous bridge of Alcantara, attests that it was thrown over the Tagus by the contribution of a few Lusitanian communities. When Pliny was intrusted with the government of Bithynia and Pontus, provinces by no means the richest or most considerable of the empire, he found the cities within his jurisdiction striving with each other in every useful and ornamental work, that might deferve the curiofity of strangers, or the gratitude of their citizens. It was the duty of the Proconful to supply their deficiencies, to direct their tafte, and fometimes to moderate their emulation 66. The opulent fenators of Rome and the provinces efteemed it an honour, and almost an obligation, to adorn the folendour of their age and country; and the influence of fashion very frequently supplied the want of taste or generosity. Among a crowd of these private benefactors, we may felect Herodes Atticus, an Athenian citizen, who lived in the age of the Antonines. Whatever might be the motive of his conduct, his magnificence would have been worthy of the greatest kings.

Example of Atticus.

The family of Herod, at least after it had been favoured by fortune, was lineally defcended from Cimon and Miltiades, Thefeus and Cecrops, Eacus and Jupiter. But the posterity of so many gods and heroes was fallen into the most abject state. His grandfather had fuffered by the hands of justice, and Julius Atticus, his father, and a theatre which had already cost near ninety thousand pounds; baths at Prusa and He mentions the following works, carried on Claudiopolis; and an aqueduct of fixteen miles in length for the use of Sinope.

must

<sup>65</sup> See Maffei, Verona illustrata, 1. iv. unfinished by a king; at Nice, a Gymnasium,

<sup>66</sup> See the xth book of Pliny's Epiftles. at the expence of the cities. At Nicomedia, a new forum, an aqueduct, and a canal, left must have ended his life in poverty and contempt, had he not dif- C H A P. covered an immense treasure buried under an old house, the last remains of his patrimony. According to the rigour of law, the emperor might have afferted his claim, and the prudent Atticus prevented, by a frank confession, the officiousness of informers. But the equitable Nerva, who then filled the throne, refused to accept any part of it; and commanded him to use, without scruple, the present of fortune. The cautious Athenian still insisted, that the treasure was too considerable for a subject, and that he knew not how to use it. Abuse it, then, replied the monarch, with a goodnatured peevishness; for it is your own 67. Many will be of opinion, that Atticus literally obeyed the emperor's last instructions; fince he expended the greatest part of his fortune, which was much increased by an advantageous marriage, in the service of the Public. He had obtained for his fon Herod, the prefecture of the free cities of Asia; and the young magistrate, observing that the town of Troas was indifferently supplied with water, obtained from the munificence of Hadrian, three hundred myriads of drachms (about a hundred thousand pounds) for the construction of a new aqueduct. But in the execution of the work the charge amounted to more than double the estimate, and the officers of the revenue began to murmur, till the generous Atticus filenced their complaints, by requesting that he might be permitted to take upon himfelf the whole additional expence 68.

The ablest preceptors of Greece and Asia had been invited by His repuliberal rewards to direct the education of young Herod. Their pupil foon became a celebrated orator according to the ufeless rhetoric of that age, which, confining itself to the schools, disdained to visit either the Forum or the Senate. He was honoured with the con-

<sup>67</sup> Hadrian afterwards made a very perty and that of discovery, Hist. August. equitable regulation, which divided all p. 9. treafure-trove between the right of profulfhip

CHAP. fulfhip at Rome; but the greatest part of his life was spent in a philofophic retirement at Athens, and his adjacent villas; perpetually furrounded by fophists, who acknowledged, without reluctance, the fuperiority of a rich and generous rival 69. The monuments of his genius have perished; some considerable ruins still preserve the same of his tafte and munificence: modern travellers have meafured the remains of the fladium which he conftructed at Athens. It was fix hundred feet in length, built entirely of white marble, capable of admitting the whole body of the people, and finished in four years, whilft Herod was prefident of the Athenian games. To the memory of his wife Regilla, he dedicated a theatre, fcarcely to be paralleled in the empire: no wood except cedar, very curioufly carved, was employed in any part of the building. The Odeum, defigned by Pericles for mufical performance, and the rehearfal of new tragedies, had been a trophy of the victory of the arts over Barbaric greatness; as the timbers employed in the construction consisted chiefly of the masts of the Persian vessels. Notwithstanding the repairs bestowed on that ancient edifice by a king of Cappadocia, it was again fallen to decay. Herod reftored its ancient beauty and magnificence. Nor was the liberality of that illustrious citizen confined to the walls of Athens. The most splendid ornaments bestowed on the temple of Neptune in the Ishmus, a theatre at Corinth, a stadium at Delphi, a bath at Thermopylæ, and an aqueduct at Canufium in Italy, were infufficient to exhauft his treasures. The people of Epirus, Theffaly, Eubœa, Bœotia, and Peloponnesus, experienced his fayours; and many infcriptions of the cities of Greece and Afia gratefully style Herodes Atticus their patron and benefactor 70.

Most of the Roman monuments for public use;

In the commonwealths of Athens and Rome, the modest simplicity of private houses announced the equal condition of freedom;

whilft

<sup>69</sup> Aulus Gellius, in Noct. Attic. i. z. ix. 2. fanias, l. i. and vii. 10. The life of Heroiii. 10. xix. 12. Philostrat. p. 564. des, in the xxxth volume of the Memoirs of 70 See Philostrat. l. ii. p. 548. 566. Pauthe Academy of Inscriptions. xviii. 10. xix. 12. Philoftrat. p. 564.

57

temples, theducts, &c.

whilft the fovereighty of the people was represented in the ma- CHAP. jestic edifices destined to the public use 7'; nor was this republican spirit totally extinguished by the introduction of wealth and monarchy. It was in works of national honour and benefit, that the most virtuous of the emperors affected to display their magnificence. The golden palace of Nero excited a just indignation, but the vast extent of ground which had been usurped by his felfish luxury, was more nobly filled under the fucceeding reigns by the Colifeum, the baths of Titus, the Claudian portico, and the temples dedicated to the goddess of Peace and to the genius of Rome 72. These monuments of architecture, the property of the Roman people, were adorned with the most beautiful productions of Grecian painting and sculpture; and in the temple of Peace, a very curious library was open to the curiofity of the learned. At a small diftance from thence was fituated the Forum of Trajan. It was furrounded with a lofty portico, in the form of a quadrangle, into which four triumphal arches opened a noble and spacious entrance: in the centre arose a column of marble, whose height, of one hundred and ten feet, denoted the elevation of the hill that had been cut away. This column, which still subfists in its ancient beauty, exhibited an exact reprefentation of the Dacian victories of its founder. The veteran foldier contemplated the flory of his own campaigns, and by an easy illusion of national vanity, the peaceful citizen affociated himself to the honours of the triumph. All the other quarters of the capital, and all the provinces of the empire, Dicearchus, de Statu Gracia, p. 8. inter Canon Ricardi at Florence. Two celebrated Geographes Minores, edit. Hudson.

<sup>6.</sup> Nardini Roma Antica, I. iii. 11, 12, 13. Peace; and the Laocoon was found in the and a MS. description of ancient Rome, by Bernardus Oricellarius, or Rucellai, of which

<sup>71</sup> It is particularly remarked of Athens by I obtained a copy from the library of the pictures of Timanthes and of Protogenes are 72 Donatus de Roma Vetere, I. iii. c. 4, 5, mentioned by Pliny, as in the temple of baths of Titus.

CHAP. were embellished by the same liberal spirit of public magnificence, and were filled with amphitheatres, theatres, temples, porticos, triumphal arches, baths, and aqueducts, all variously conducive to the health, the devotion, and the pleasures of the meanest citizen. The last mentioned of those edifices deserve our peculiar attention. The boldness of the enterprise, the folidity of the execution, and the uses to which they were subservient, rank the aqueducts among the noblest monuments of Roman genius and power. The aqueducts of the capital claim a just pre-eminence; but the curious traveller, who, without the light of history, should examine those of Spoleto, of Metz, or of Segovia, would very naturally conclude, that those provincial towns had formerly been the refidence of fome potent monarch. The folitudes of Afia and Africa were once covered with flourishing cities, whose populousness, and even whose existence, was derived from such artificial supplies of a perennial ffream of fresh water 73.

Numberand greatness of the cities of the empire.

We have computed the inhabitants, and contemplated the public works, of the Roman empire. The observation of the number and greatness of its cities will serve to confirm the former, and to multiply the latter. It may not be unpleafing to collect a few feattered inflances relative to that fubiect, without forgetting, however, that from the vanity of nations and the poverty of language, the vague appellation of city has been indifferently bestowed on Rome and upon Laurentum. Ancient Italy is faid to have contained eleven hundred and ninety-seven cities; and for whatsoever æra of antiquity the expression might be intended 74, there is not any reason to believe the country less populous in the age of the Antonines, than in that of Romulus. The petty states of Latium were contained CHAP. within the metropolis of the empire, by whose superior influence they had been attracted. Those parts of Italy which have so long languished under the lazy tyranny of priests and viceroys, had been afflicted only by the more tolerable calamities of war; and the first symptoms of decay, which they experienced, were amply compensated by the rapid improvements of the Cifalpine Gaul. The splendor of Verona may be traced in its remains: yet Verona was less celebrated than Aquileia or Padua, Milan or Ravenna. II. The spirit of improvement had passed the Alps, and been felt Gauland even in the woods of Britain, which were gradually cleared away to open a free space for convenient and elegant habitations. York was the feat of government; London was already enriched by commerce; and Bath was celebrated for the falutary effects of its medicinal waters. Gaul could boaft of her twelve hundred cities 75; and though, in the northern parts, many of them, without excepting Paris itself, were little more than the rude and imperfect townships of a rifing people; the fouthern provinces imitated the wealth and elegance of Italy 76. Many were the cities of Gaul, Marfeilles, Arles, Nifmes, Narbonne, Thouloufe, Bourdeaux, Autun, Vienna, Lyons, Langres, and Treves, whose ancient condition might fustain an equal, and perhaps advantageous comparison with their present flate. With regard to Spain, that country flourished as a province, and has declined as a kingdom. Exhausted by the abuse of her ffrength, by America, and by fuperflition, her pride might poffibly be confounded, if we required fuch a lift of three hundred and fixty cities, as Pliny has exhibited under the reign of Vefpafian 77. III. Three hundred African cities had once acknowledged the Africa.

In Italy.

<sup>33</sup> Montfaucon l'Antiquitée Expliquée, 74 Ælian Hist. Var. l. ix. c. 16. He lived tom. iv. p. 2. l. i. c. 9. Fabretti has comin the time of Alexander Severus. See Fabriof Rome.

<sup>75</sup> Joseph. de Bell. Jud. ii. 16. The number, however, is mentioned, and should be list seems authentic and accurate : the division received with a degree of latitude.

<sup>26</sup> Plin. Hift. Natur. iii. 5.

<sup>77</sup> Plin. Hift. Natur. iii. 3, 4. iv. 35. The of the provinces and the different condition of the cities, are minutely diftinguished.

Afia.

CHAP, authority of Carthage 78, nor is it likely that their numbers diminished under the administration of the emperors: Carthage itself rose with new splendor from its ashes; and that capital, as well as Capua and Corinth, foon recovered all the advantages which can be feparated from independent fovereignty. IV. The provinces of the east present the contrast of Roman magnificence with Turkish barbarism. The ruins of antiquity scattered over uncultivated fields, and afcribed, by ignorance, to the power of magic, fcarcely afford a shelter to the oppressed peasant or wandering Arab. Under the reign of the Cæsars, the proper Asia alone contained five hundred populous cities 79, enriched with all the gifts of nature, and adorned with all the refinements of art. Eleven cities of Afia had once disputed the honour of dedicating a temple to Tiberius, and their respective merits were examined by the fenate 80. Four of them were immediately rejected as unequal to the burden; and among these was Laodicea, whose splendor is ffill difplayed in its ruins 81. Laodicea collected a very confiderable revenue from its flocks of sheep, celebrated for the fineness of their wool, and had received, a little before the contest, a legacy of above four hundred thousand pounds by the testament of a generous citizen 82. If fuch was the poverty of Laodicea, what must have been the wealth of those cities, whose claim appeared preferable, and particularly of Pergamus, of Smyrna, and of Ephefus, who under the name of Guzel-hiffar, a town of fome consequence; and Smyrna, a great city, peopled by an hundred thousand fouls. But even at Smyrna while the Franks have maintained commerce, the Turks have ruined

> 78 Strabon, Geograph. I. xvii. p. 1189. 79 Joseph. de Bell. Jud. ii. 16. Philostrat. in Vit. Sophist. 1. ii. p. 548. Edit. Olear.

<sup>80</sup> Tacit. Annal. iv. 55. I have taken fome pains in confulting and comparing modern travellers, with regard to the fate of those eleven cities of Asia; seven or eight are totally destroyed, Hypæpe, Tralles, Laodicea, Ilium, Halicarnassus, Miletus, Ephesus, and vels through Asia Minor, p. 225, &c. we may add Sardes. Of the remaining three, Pergamus is a straggling village of two at Tralles. or three thousand inhabitants. Magnesia, the arts. 81 See a very exact and pleasing description of the ruins of Laodicea, in Chandler's Trafo long disputed with each other the titular primacy of Asia 83. The CHAP. capitals of Syria and Egypt held a still superior rank in the empire: Antioch and Alexandria looked down with disdain on a crowd of dependent cities 84, and yielded, with reluctance, to the majesty of Rome itself.

<sup>82</sup> Strabo, l. xii. p. 866. He had fludied

61

All these cities were connected with each other, and with the Roman capital by the public highways, which issuing from the Forum of Rome, traversed Italy, pervaded the provinces, and were terminated only by the frontiers of the empire. If we carefully trace the distance from the wall of Antoninus to Rome, and from thence to Jerusalem, it will be found that the great chain of communication, from the north-west to the south-east point of the empire, was drawn out to the length of four thousand and eighty Roman miles 85. The public roads were accurately divided by mile-stones, and ran in a direct line from one city to another, with very little respect for the obstacles either of nature or private property. Mountains were perforated, and bold arches thrown over the broadeft and most rapid streams 86. The middle part of the road was raifed into a terrace which commanded the adjacent country, confifted of feveral strata of fand, gravel, and cement, and was paved with large stones, or in some places, near the capital, with 83 See a Differtation of M. de Boze, Mem. de l'Academie, tom. xviii. Aristides pronounced an oration which is still extant to recommend concord to the rival cities.

84 The inhabitants of Egypt, exclusive of Alexandria, amounted to feven millions and a half (Joseph, de Bell. Jud. ii. 16.). Under the military government of the Mamalukes, Syria was supposed to contain fixty thousand villages. (Histoire de Timur Bec, l. v. c. 20.)

85 The following Itinerary may ferve to convey some idea of the direction of the road, and of the distance between the principal towns. I. From the wall of Antoninus to York 222 Roman miles. II. London 227. III. Rhutupiæ or Sandwich 67. IV. The navigation to Boulogne 45. V. Rheims 174. VI. Lyons 330. VII. Milan 324. VIII. Rome 426. IX. Brundusium 360. X. The navigation to Dyrrachium 40. XI. Byzantium 711. XII. Ancyra 283. XIII. Tarfus 301. XIV. Antioch 141. XV. Tyre 252. XVI. Jerusalem 168. In all 4080 Roman, or 3740 English miles. See the Itineraries published by Wesseling, his annotations; Gale and Stukeley for Britain, and M. Danville for Gaul and Italy.

85 Montfaucon, l'Antiquitè Expliquée, (tom. iv. p. 2. l. i. c. 5.) has described the bridges of Narni, Alcantara, Nifmes, &c.

granite.

Posts.

C H A P. granite 37. Such was the folid construction of the Roman highways, whole firmness has not entirely yielded to the effort of fifteen centuries. They united the subjects of the most distant provinces by an easy and familiar intercourse; but their primary object had been to facilitate the marches of the legions; nor was any country confidered as completely fubdued, till it had been rendered, in all its parts, pervious to the arms and authority of the conqueror. The advantage of receiving the earliest intelligence, and of conveying their orders with celerity, induced the emperors to establish throughout their extensive dominions, the regular institution of posts 88. Houses were every where erected at the distance only of five or fix miles; each of them was constantly provided with forty horses, and by the help of these relays, it was easy to travel an hundred miles in a day along the Roman roads 89. The use of the posts was allowed to those who claimed it by an Imperial mandate; but though originally intended for the public fervice, it was fometimes indulged to the bufiness or conveniency of private citizens 90. Nor was the communication of the Roman empire less free and open by sea than it was by land. The provinces furrounded and inclosed the Mediterranean; and Italy, in the shape of an immense promontory, advanced into the midst of that great lake. The coasts of Italy are, in general, destitute of safe harbours; but human industry had corrected the deficiencies of nature; and the artificial port of Offia, in particular, fituate at the mouth of the 87 Bergier Histoire des grands Chemins de from Antioch) the ensuing evening, and ar-1'Empire Romain, I. ii. c. 1-28.

Navigation.

88 Procorius in Hift. Arcani, c. 30. Bergier Hilt. des grands Chemins, l. iv. Codex or 665 English miles. See Libanius Orat. Theodofian. l. viii. tit. v. vol. ii. p. 506-563. with Godefroy's learned commentary.

magistrate of high rank, went post from Antioch to Conftantinople. He began his jour- x. 121, 122. ney at night, was in Cappadocia (165 miles rived at Conftantinople the fixth day about noon. The whole diffance was 725 Roman, xxii. and the Itineraria, p. 572-581.

90 Pliny, though a favourite and a mini-89 In the time of Theodofius, Cæfarius, a fler, made an apology for granting post horses to his wife on the most urgent bufiness. Epist.

Tyber,

Tyber, and formed by the emperor Claudius, was a useful monu- CHAP. ment of Roman greatness 91. From this port, which was only fixteen miles from the capital, a favourable breeze frequently carried vessels in feven days to the columns of Hercules, and in nine or ten, to Alexandria in Egypt 92.

Whatever evils either reason or declamation have imputed to Improveextensive empire, the power of Rome was attended with some beneficial consequences to mankind; and the same freedom of inter-countries of course which extended the vices, diffused likewise the improvements, of focial life. In the more remote ages of antiquity, the world was unequally divided. The east was in the immemorial possession of arts and luxury; whilft the west was inhabited by rude and warlike barbarians, who either difdained agriculture, or to whom it was totally unknown. Under the protection of an established government, the productions of happier climates, and the industry of more civilized nations, were gradually introduced into the western countries of Europe; and the natives were encouraged, by an open and profitable commerce, to multiply the former, as well as to improve the latter. It would be almost impossible to enumerate all the articles, either of the animal or the vegetable reign. which were fuccessively imported into Europe, from Asia and Egypt 93; but it will not be unworthy of the dignity, and much less of the utility, of an historical work, slightly to touch on a few of the principal heads. I. Almost all the flowers, the herbs, and Introduction the fruits, that grow in our European gardens, are of foreign extraction, which, in many cases, is betrayed even by their names: the apple was a native of Italy, and when the Romans had tafted the richer flavour of the apricot, the peach, the pomegranate, the ment of agriculture in the western the empire.

of fruits, &c.

91 Bergier Hift, des grands Chemins, 1, iv. and Phoenicians introduced some new arts and productions into the neighbourhood of Marfeilles and Gades ..

citron.

c. 49.
92 Plin. Hift. Natur. xix. 1.

<sup>93</sup> It is not improbable that the Greeks

The vine.

C H A P. citron, and the orange, they contented themselves with applying to all these new fruits the common denomination of apple, difcriminating them from each other by the additional epithet of their country. 2. In the time of Homer, the vine grew wild in the island of Sicily, and most probably in the adjacent continent; but it was not improved by the skill, nor did it afford a liquor grateful to the taste, of the savage inhabitants 94. A thousand years afterwards, Italy could boaft, that of the fourfcore most generous and celebrated wines, more than two-thirds were produced from her foil 95. The bleffing was foon communicated to the Narbonnese province of Gaul; but so intense was the cold to the north of the Cevennes, that, in the time of Strabo, it was thought impossible to ripen the grapes in those parts of Gaul 96. This difficulty, however, was gradually vanquished; and there is some reason to believe, that the vineyards of Burgundy are as old as the age of the Antonines 97. 3. The olive, in the western world, followed the progress of peace, of which it was considered as the symbol. Two centuries after the foundation of Rome, both Italy and Africa were strangers to that useful plant; it was naturalized in those countries; and at length carried into the heart of Spain and Gaul. The timid errors of the ancients, that it required a certain degree of heat, and could only flourish in the neighbourhood of the fea, were infensibly exploded by industry and experience 98. 4. The cultivation of flax was transported from Egypt to Gaul, and enriched the whole country, however it might impoverish the particular lands on which it was fown 99. 5. The use of artificial graffes became familiar to the farmers

Flax.

The olive.

Artificial grafs.

<sup>94</sup> See Homer Odyff. 1. ix. v. 358. 95 Plin, Hift. Natur. 1. xiv.

<sup>96</sup> Strab. Geograph. 1. iv. p. 223. The intenfe cold of a Gallic winter was almost proverbial among the ancients.

the orator Eumenius (Panegyric, Veter, viii. 6. edit. Delphin.) speaks of the vines in the territory of Autun, which were decayed through age, and the first plantation of which was totally unknown. The Pagus Arebrignus is supposed by M. Danville to be the diffrict of Beaune, celebrated, even at prefent. 27 In the beginning of the 1/th century, for one of the first growths of Burgundy.

<sup>98</sup> Plin. Hift. Natur. I. xv. 59 Plin. Hift. Natur. I. xix.

65

armers both of Italy and the provinces, particularly the Lucerne, CHAP. which derived its name and origin from Media 100. The affured fupply of wholesome and plentiful food for the cattle during winter, multiplied the number of the flocks and herds, which in their turn contributed to the fertility of the foil. To all these improvements may be added an affiduous attention to mines and fisheries, which, by employing a multitude of laborious hands, ferve to increase the pleasures of the rich, and the subfishence of the poor. The elegant treatife of Columella describes the advanced state of the Spanish husbandry, under the reign of Tiberius; and General it may be observed, that those famines which so frequently afflicted the infant republic, were feldom or never experienced by the extensive empire of Rome. The accidental fearcity, in any fingle province, was immediately relieved by the plenty of its more fortunate neighbours.

Agriculture is the foundation of manufactures; fince the pro- Arts of ductions of nature are the materials of art. Under the Roman empire, the labour of an industrious and ingenious people was variously, but incessantly employed, in the service of the rich. In their dress, their table, their houses, and their furniture, the favourites of fortune united every refinement of conveniency, of elegance, and of splendour; whatever could footh their pride, or gratify their fenfuality. Such refinements, under the odious name of luxury, have been feverely arraigned by the moralists of every age; and it might perhaps be more conducive to the virtue, as well as happiness, of mankind, if all possessed the necessaries, and none the superfluities, of life. But in the present imperfect condition of fociety, luxury, though it may proceed from vice or folly, feems to be the only means that can correct the unequal dif-

100 See the agreeable Essays on Agri- lested all that the ancients and moderns have culture by Mr. Harte, in which he has col- faid of lucerne.

VOL. I.

K

tribution

CHAP, tribution of property. The diligent mechanic, and the skilful artist, who have obtained no share in the division of the earth, receive a voluntary tax from the possessor of land; and the latter are prompted, by a fense of interest, to improve those estates, with whose produce they may purchase additional pleasures. This operation, the particular effects of which are felt in every fociety, acted with much more diffusive energy in the Roman world. The provinces would foon have been exhaufted of their wealth, if the manufactures and commerce of luxury had not infenfibly reftored to the industrious subjects, the sums which were exacted from them by the arms and authority of Rome. As long as the circulation was confined within the bounds of the empire, it impressed the political machine with a new degree of activity, and its confequences, fometimes beneficial, could never become pernicious.

trade.

But it is no easy task to confine luxury within the limits of an empire. The most remote countries of the ancient world were ranfacked to fupply the pomp and delicacy of Rome. The forest of Scythia afforded fome valuable furs. Amber was brought over land from the shores of the Baltic to the Danube; and the barbarians were aftonished at the price which they received in exchange for fo useless a commodity "o". There was a considerable demand for Babylonian carpets, and other manufactures of the east; but the most important and unpopular branch of foreign trade was carried on with Arabia and India. Every year, about the time of the fummer folftice, a fleet of an hundred and twenty veffels failed from Myos-hormos, a port of Egypt, on the Red Sea. By the periodical affistance of the Monfoons, they traversed the ocean in about forty days. The coast of Malabar, or the island of Ceylon 102, ferved, with fome humour, that even 102 Called Taprobana by the Romans, and fashion had not yet found out the use Screndib by the Arabs. It was discovered of amber. Nero fent a Roman knight, under the reign of Claudius, and gradually to purchase great quantities on the spot, became the principal mart of the east.

<sup>161</sup> Tacit. Germania, c. 45. Plin. where it was produced; the coast of mo-Hist. Natur. xxxviii. 11. The latter ob- dern Prusia.

was the usual term of their navigation, and it was in those CHAP. markets that the merchants from the more remote countries of Afia expected their arrival. The return of the fleet of Egypt was fixed to the months of December or January; and as foon as their rich cargo had been transported on the backs of camels, from the Red Sea to the Nile, and had descended that river as far as Alexandria, it was poured, without delay, into the capital of the empire 105. The objects of oriental traffic were splendid and trifling: filk, a pound of which was efteemed not inferior in value to a pound of gold 104; precious stones, among which the pearl claimed the first rank after the diamond 105; and a variety of aromatics, that were confumed in religious worship and the pomp of funerals. The labour and rifk of the voyage was rewarded with almost incredible profit; but the profit was made upon Roman subjects, and a few individuals were enriched at the expence of the Public. As the Gold and natives of Arabia and India were contented with the productions and manufactures of their own country, filver, on the fide of the Romans, was the principal, if not the only instrument of commerce. It was a complaint worthy of the gravity of the fenate. that, in the purchase of female ornaments, the wealth of the state was irrecoverably given away to foreign and hostile nations 106. The annual loss is computed, by a writer of an inquisitive but cenforious temper, at upwards of eight hundred thousand pounds sterling 107. Such was the style of discontent, brooding over the dark prospect of approaching poverty. And yet, if we compare filver.

but as a difgrace to a man.

106 Tacit. Annal. iii. 52. In a fpeech of was confidered as an ornament to a woman, de Tavernier, tom. ii. p. 281.

<sup>105</sup> The two great pearl fisheries were the Tiberius. fame as at prefent, Ormuz and Cape Comorin. As well as we can compare ancient place he computes half that fum; Quingenwith modern geography, Rome was supplied ties H. S. for India exclusive of Arabia.

<sup>103</sup> Plin. Hift. Natur. 1. vi. Strabo, 1. xvii. with diamonds from the mine of Jumelpur. 104 Hift. August. p. 224. A filk garment in Bengal, which is described in the Voyages

<sup>107</sup> Plin. Hift. Natur. xii. 18. In another

C H A P. the proportion between gold and filver, as it flood in the time of Pliny, and as it was fixed in the reign of Constantine, we shall difcover within that period a very confiderable increase 108. There is not the least reason to suppose that gold was become more scarce; it is therefore evident that filver was grown more common; that whatever might be the amount of the Indian and Arabian exports, they were far from exhausting the wealth of the Roman world; and that the produce of the mines abundantly supplied the demands of commerce.

General felicity.

Notwithstanding the propensity of mankind to exalt the past, and to depreciate the prefent, the tranquil and prosperous state of the empire was warmly felt, and honefly confessed, by the provincials as well as Romans. "They acknowledged that the true " principles of focial life, laws, agriculture, and fcience, which had " been first invented by the wisdom of Athens, were now firmly " established by the power of Rome, under whose auspicious " influence, the fiercest barbarians were united by an equal govern-" ment and common language. They affirm, that with the im-" provement of arts, the human species was visibly multiplied. "They celebrate the increasing splendour of the cities, the beau-" tiful face of the country, cultivated and adorned like an im-" menfe garden; and the long festival of peace, which was en-" joyed by fo many nations, forgetful of their ancient animofities, " and delivered from the apprehension of future danger 109." Whatever fuspicions may be suggested by the air of rhetoric and declamation, which feems to prevail in these passages, the substance of them is perfectly agreeable to historic truth.

The proportion which was 1 to 10, and 109 Among many other passages, see Pliny, 121 rose to 14-, the legal regulation of Con- (Hist. Natur. iii. 5.) Aristides, (de Urbe stantine. See Arbuthnot's Tables of ancient Româ) and Tertullian (de Animâ, c. 30.). Coins, c. v.

It was fearcely possible that the eyes of contemporaries should CHAP. discover in the public felicity the latent causes of decay and corruption. This long peace, and the uniform government of the courage; Romans, introduced a flow and fecret poison into the vitals of the empire. The minds of men were gradually reduced to the fame level, the fire of genius was extinguished, and even the military spirit evaporated. The natives of Europe were brave and robust. Spain, Gaul, Britain, and Illyricum fupplied the legions with excellent foldiers, and conflituted the real strength of the monarchy. Their personal valour remained, but they no longer possessed that public courage which is nourished by the love of independence, the fense of national honour, the presence of danger, and the habit of command. They received laws and governors from the will of their fovereign, and trufted for their defence to a mercenary army. The posterity of their boldest leaders was contented with the rank of citizens and fubjects. The most aspiring spirits resorted to the court or flandard of the emperors; and the deferted provinces, deprived of political strength or union, insensibly funk into the languid indifference of private life.

The love of letters, almost inseparable from peace and re- of genius. finement, was fashionable among the subjects of Hadrian and the Antonines, who were themselves men of learning and cu-It was diffused over the whole extent of their empire; the most northern tribes of Britons had acquired a taste for rhetoric: Homer as well as Virgil were transcribed and studied on the banks of the Rhine and Danube; and the most liberal rewards fought out the faintest glimmerings of literary merit ". The fciences lemo above eight thousand pounds for three were maintained at the public expence for declamations. See Philostrat. 1. i. p. 558. the instruction of youth. The salary of a The Antonines founded a school at Athens, philosopher was ten thousand drachmae, be-

120 Herodes Atticus gave the fophist Po- litics, and the four great fects of philosophy, in which professors of grammar, rhetoric, po- tween three and four hundred pounds a year.

C H A P. sciences of physic and astronomy were successfully cultivated by the Greeks: the observations of Ptolemy and the writings of Galen are fludied by those who have improved their discoveries and corrected their errors; but if we except the inimitable Lucian, this age of indolence passed away without having produced a single writer of original genius, or who excelled in the arts of elegant composition. The authority of Plato and Aristotle, of Zeno and Epicurus, still reigned in the schools; and their systems, transmitted with blind deference from one generation of disciples to another, precluded every generous attempt to exercise the powers, or enlarge the limits, of the human mind. The beauties of the poets and orators, instead of kindling a fire like their own, inspired only cold and servile imitations: or if any ventured to deviate from those models, they deviated at the same time from good sense and propriety. On the revival of letters, the youthful vigour of the imagination, after a long repose, national emulation, a new religion, new languages, and a new world, called forth the genius of Europe. But the provincials of Rome, trained by a uniform artificial foreign education, were engaged in a very unequal competition with those bold ancients, who, by expressing their genuine feelings in their native tongue, had already occupied every place of honour. The name of Poet was almost forgotten; that of Orator was usurped by the sophists. A cloud of critics, of compilers, of commentators, darkened the face of learning, and the decline of genius was foon followed by the corruption of tafte.

Degeneracy.

The fublime Longinus, who in fomewhat a later period, and in the court of a Syrian queen, preserved the spirit of ancient Athens, other great cities of the empire. See Lu- envy, is obliged, however, to fay, cian in Eunuch. tom. ii. p. 353. edit. Reitz. Philostrat. l. ii. p. 566. Hist. August. p. 21. Dion. Caffius, 1. lxxi. p. 1195. Juvenal himfelf, in a morofe fatire, which in every Similar establishments were formed in the line betrays his own disappointment and

-O Juvenes, circumspicit et agitat vos. Materiamque fibi Ducis indulgentia quærit. Satir. vii. 20.

observes

observes and laments this degeneracy of his contemporaries, which CHAP. debased their sentiments, enervated their courage, and depressed their talents. " In the fame manner, fays he, as fome children al-" ways remain pygmies, whose infant limbs have been too closely " confined; thus our tender minds, fettered by the prejudices and " habits of a just fervitude, are unable to expand themselves, or to " attain that well-proportioned greatness which we admire in the " ancients; who living under a popular government, wrote with the " fame freedom as they acted "." This diminutive stature of mankind, if we purfue the metaphor, was daily finking below the old flandard, and the Roman world was indeed peopled by a race of pygmies; when the fierce giants of the north broke in, and mended the puny breed. They restored a manly spirit of freedom; and after the revolution of ten centuries, freedom became the happy parent of tafte and science.

" his own example strengthens all his laws." Instead of proposing his fentiments with a resuting them himself, manly boldness, he infinuates them with the

Longin. de Sublim. c. 43. p. 229. edit. most guarded caution, puts them into the Toll. Here too we may fay of Longinus, mouth of a friend; and as far as we can collect from a corrupted text, makes a shew of

CHAP. III.

Of the Constitution of the Roman Empire, in the Age of the Antonines.

C H A P. III. Idea of a monarchy.

HE obvious definition of a monarchy feems to be that of a flate, in which a fingle person, by whatsoever name he may be distinguished, is intrusted with the execution of the laws, the management of the revenue, and the command of the army. But unless public liberty is protected by intrepid and vigilant guardians, the authority of so formidable a magistrate will soon degenerate into despotism. The influence of the clergy, in an age of superstition, might be usefully employed to affert the rights of mankind; but so intimate is the connexion between the throne and the altar, that the banner of the church has very seldom been seen on the side of the people. A martial nobility and slubborn commons, possessed of arms, tenacious of property, and collected into constitutional affemblies, form the only balance capable of preserving a free constitution against enterprises of an aspiring prince.

Situation of Augustus. Every barrier of the Roman conflitution had been levelled by the vaft ambition of the dictator; every fence had been extirpated by the cruel hand of the Triumvir. After the victory of Actium, the fate of the Roman world depended on the will of Octavianus, furnamed Cæfar, by his uncle's adoption, and afterwards Augusfus, by the flattery of the senate. The conqueror was at the head of forty-four veteran legions', conscious of their own strength, and of the weakness of the constitution, habituated, during twenty years civil war, to every act of blood and violence, and paffionately devoted CHAP. to the house of Casar, from whence alone they had received, and expected, the most lavish rewards. The provinces, long oppressed by the ministers of the republic, fighed for the government of a fingle person, who would be the master, not the accomplice, of those petty tyrants. The people of Rome, viewing, with a fecret pleafure, the humiliation of the ariflocracy, demanded only bread and public shows; and were supplied with both by the liberal hand of Augustus. The rich and polite Italians, who had almost univerfally embraced the philosophy of Epicurus, enjoyed the present bleffings of eafe and tranquillity, and fuffered not the pleafing dream to be interrupted by the memory of their old tumultuous freedom. With its power, the fenate had lost its dignity; many of the most noble families were extinct. The republicans of spirit and ability had perished in the field of battle, or in the proscription. The door of the affembly had been defignedly left open, for a mixed multitude of more than a thousand persons, who reflected disgrace upon their rank, instead of deriving honour from it 2.

<sup>1</sup> Orofius, vi. 18.

the fenate.

The reformation of the senate, was one of the first steps in which He reforms Augustus laid aside the tyrant, and professed himself the father of his country. He was elected cenfor; and, in concert with his faithful Agrippa, he examined the lift of the fenators, expelled a few members, whose vices or whose obstinacy required a public example, perfuaded near two hundred to prevent the shame of an expulsion by a voluntary retreat, raised the qualification of a senator to about ten thousand pounds, created a sufficient number of Patrician families, and accepted for himself, the honourable title of Prince of the Senate, which had always been bestowed, by the cenfors, on the citizen the most eminent for his honours and services.

<sup>2</sup> Julius Cæfar introduced foldiers, stran- became still more scandalous after his death. gers, and half-barbarians, into the fenate (Sueton. in Cafar. c. 77. 80.). The abufe in August. c. 55.

C II A P. But whilft he thus restored the dignity, he destroyed the independence of the fenate. The principles of a free constitution are irrecoverably loft, when the legislative power is nominated by the executive.

Refigns his

Before an affembly thus modelled and prepared, Augustus pronounced a fludied oration, which displayed his patriotism, and difguifed his ambition. " He lamented, yet excufed, his past " conduct. Filial piety had required at his hands the revenge of " his father's murder; the humanity of his own nature had fome-" times given way to the stern laws of necessity, and to a forced " connexion with two unworthy colleagues: as long as Antony

" lived, the republic forbade him to abandon her to a degenerate "Roman, and a barbarian queen. He was now at liberty to

" fatisfy his duty and his inclination. He folemnly restored the " fenate and people to all their ancient rights; and wished only to

" mingle with the crowd of his fellow-citizens, and to share the

" bleffings which he had obtained for his country 4."

Is prevailed upon to refume it under the title of Emperor or General.

It would require the pen of Tacitus (if Tacitus had affisted at this affembly) to describe the various emotions of the senate; those that were suppressed, and those that were affected. It was dangerous to trust the fincerity of Augustus; to seem to distrust it, was still more dangerous. The respective advantages of monarchy and a republic have often divided speculative inquirers; the present greatness of the Roman state, the corruption of manners, and the licence of the foldiers, supplied new arguments to the advocates of monarchy; and these general views of government were again warped by the hopes and fears of each individual. Amidst this confusion of fentiments, the answer of the fenate was unanimous and decifive. They refused to accept the refignation of Augustus; they conjured

him

<sup>4</sup> Dion (l. liii, p. 698.) gives us a prolix have borrowed from Suetonius and Tacitus and bombast speech on this great occasion. I the general language of Augustus.

him not to defert the republic, which he had faved. After a de- CHAP. cent refistance, the crafty tyrant submitted to the orders of the fenate; and confented to receive the government of the provinces, and the general command of the Roman armies, under the wellknown names of PROCONSUL and IMPERATOR5. But he would receive them only for ten years. Even before the expiration of that period, he hoped that the wounds of civil discord would be completely healed, and that the republic, restored to its pristine health and vigour, would no longer require the dangerous interpolition of lo extraordinary a magistrate. The memory of this comedy, repeated feveral times during the life of Augustus, was preserved to the last ages of the empire, by the peculiar pomp with which the perpetual monarchs of Rome always folemnized the tenth years of their reign 6.

Without any violation of the principles of the constitution, the Power of the general of the Roman armies might receive and exercise an au-nerals. thority almost despotic over the foldiers, the enemies, and the fubjects of the republic. With regard to the foldiers, the jealoufy of freedom had, even from the earliest ages of Rome, given way to the hopes of conquest, and a just sense of military discipline. The dictator, or conful, had a right to command the fervice of the Roman youth; and to punish an obstinate or cowardly disobedience by the most severe and ignominious penalties, by striking the offender out of the lift of citizens, by confiscating his property, and by felling his person into slavery 7. The most facred rights of freedom, confirmed by the Porcian and Sempronian laws, were

<sup>5</sup> Imperator (from which we have derived emperors assumed it in that sense, they placed Emperor) fignified under the republic no it after their name, and marked how often more than general, and was emphatically be- they had taken it. flowed by the fildiers, when on the field of battle they proclaimed their victorious leader worthy of that title. When the Roman

<sup>6</sup> Dion, I. liii. p. 703, &c. 7 Livy Epitom. l. xiv. Valer. Maxim. vi. 3.

CHAP. fuspended by the military engagement. In his camp the general exercifed an absolute power of life and death; his jurifdiction was not confined by any forms of trial, or rules of proceeding, and the execution of the fentence was immediate and without appeal 8. The choice of the enemies of Rome was regularly decided by the legislative authority. The most important resolutions of peace and war were feriously debated in the fenate, and folemnly ratified by the people. But when the arms of the legions were carried to a great distance from Italy, the generals assumed the liberty of directing them against whatever people, and in whatever manner, they judged most advantageous for the public service. It was from the fuccess, not from the justice, of their enterprises, that they expected the honours of a triumph. In the use of victory, especially after they were no longer controlled by the commissioners of the fenate, they exercifed the most unbounded despotism. When Pompey commanded in the east, he rewarded his foldiers and allies, dethroned princes, divided kingdoms, founded colonies, and distributed the treasures of Mithridates. On his return to Rome, he obtained, by a fingle act of the fenate and people, the universal ratification of all his proceedings?. Such was the power over the foldiers, and over the enemies of Rome, which was either granted to, or assumed by, the generals of the republic. They were, at the fame time, the governors, or rather monarchs, of the conquered provinces, united the civil with the military character, administered

See in the viiith book of Livy, the con- gustus. Among the extraordinary acts of duct of Manlius Torquatus and Papirius Curpower executed by the former, we may refor. They violated the laws of nature and mark the foundation of twenty-nine cities, and the distribution of three or four millions flerling to his troops. The ratification of his acts met with some opposition and de-9 By the lavish but unconstrained suffrages lays in the senate. See Plutarch, Appian, of the people, Pompey had obtained a mili- Dion Cassius, and the first book of the epishumanity, but they afferted those of military discipline; and the people, who abhorred the action, was obliged to respect the principle.

juffice

tary command fearcely inferior to that of Au- tles to Atticus.

justice as well as the finances, and exercised both the executive and CHAP. legislative power of the state.

From what has been already observed in the first chapter of this Lieutenants work, fome notion may be formed of the armies and provinces of the emthus intrufted to the ruling hand of Augustus. But as it was impossible that he could personally command the legions of so many diffant frontiers, he was indulged by the fenate, as Pompey had already been, in the permission of devolving the execution of his great office on a fufficient number of lieutenants. In rank and authority these officers seemed not inferior to the ancient proconfuls; but their flation was dependent and precarious. They received and held their commissions at the will of a superior, to whose auspicious influence the merit of their actions was legally attributed '. They were the representatives of the emperor. The emperor alone was the general of the republic, and his jurisdiction, civil as well as military, extended over all the conquests of Rome. It was some fatisfaction, however, to the fenate, that he always delegated his power to the members of their body. The Imperial lieutenants were of confular or prætorian dignity; the legions were commanded by fenators, and the præfecture of Egypt was the only important trust committed to a Roman knight.

Within fix days after Augustus had been compelled to accept so Division of very liberal a grant, he refolved to gratify the pride of the fenate between the by an easy sacrifice. He represented to them, that they had enlarged his powers, even beyond that degree which might be required by the melancholy condition of the times. They had not permitted him to refuse the laborious command of the armies and 10 Under the commonwealth, a triumph and religion, the triumph was referved to the could only be claimed by the general, who emperor, and his most fuccessful lieutenants was authorifed to take the Auspices in the were satisfied with some marks of distinction, name of the people. By an exact confe- which, under the name of triumphal hoquence drawn from this principle of policy nours, were invented in their favour.

III.

CHAP, the frontiers; but he must insist on being allowed to restore the more peaceful and fecure provinces, to the mild administration of the civil magistrate. In the division of the provinces, Augustus provided for his own power, and for the dignity of the republic. The proconfuls of the fenate, particularly those of Asia, Greece, and Africa, enjoyed a more honourable character than the lieutenants of the emperor, who commanded in Gaul or Syria. The former were attended by lictors, the latter by foldiers. A law was paffed, that wherever the emperor was prefent, his extraordinary commission should superfede the ordinary jurisdiction of the governor. a custom was introduced, that the new conquests belonged to the Imperial portion, and it was foon discovered that the authority of the Prince, the favourite epithet of Augustus, was the same in every part of the empire.

The former preferves his military command. and guards in Rome itself.

In return for this imaginary concession, Augustus obtained an important privilege, which rendered him mafter of Rome and Italy. By a dangerous exception to the ancient maxims, he was authorized to preferve his military command, supported by a numerous body of guards, even in time of peace, and in the heart of the capital. His command indeed, was confined to those citizens who were engaged in the fervice by the military oath; but fuch was the propenfity of the Romans to fervitude, that the oath was voluntarily taken by the magistrates, the tenators, and the equestrian order, till the homage of flattery was insensibly converted into an annual and folemn protestation of fidelity.

Confular and tribunitian powers.

Although Augustus confidered a military force, as the firmest foundation, he wifely rejected it, as a very odious inftrument, of government. It was more agreeable to his temper, as well as to his policy, to reign under the venerable names of ancient magistracy, and artfully to collect, in his own person, all the scattered rays of civil jurisdiction. With this view he permitted the senate to confer upon him, for his life, the powers of the confular " and tri- CHAP. bunitian offices 12, which were, in the same manner, continued to all his fuccesfors. The confuls had fucceeded to the kings of Rome. and represented the dignity of the state. They superintended the ceremonies of religion, levied and commanded the legions, gave audience to foreign ambassadors, and presided in the assemblies both of the fenate and people. The general control of the finances was intrusted to their care, and though they feldom had leifure to administer justice in person they were considered as the supreme guardians of law, equity, and the public peace. Such was their ordinary jurisdiction; but whenever the fenate empowered the first magistrate to consult the safety of the commonwealth, he was raised by that degree above the laws, and exercised, in the defence of liberty, a temporary despotism 13. The character of the tribunes was, in every respect, different from that of the consuls. The appearance of the former was modest and humble; but their persons were facred and inviolable. Their force was fuited rather for oppolition than for action. They were instituted to defend the oppressed, to pardon offences, to arraign the enemies of the people, and when they judged it necessary, to stop, by a single word, the whole machine of government. As long as the republic fubfifted, the dangerous influence, which either the conful or the tribune might derive from their respective jurisdiction, was di-confular office the name of Regia potestas: and Polybius (l. vi. c. 3.) observes three powers in the Roman constitution. The monarchical was represented and exercised by the

fer

79

<sup>12</sup> As the tribunitian power (distinct from the annual office) was first invented for the dictator Cæfar (Dion, 1. xliv. p. 384.), we may eafily conceive, that it was given as a reward for having fo nobly afferted, by arms,

<sup>11</sup> Cicero (de Legibus, iii. 3.) gives the the facred rights of the tribunes and people. See his own Commentaries, de Bell. Civil. 1. i.

<sup>13</sup> Augustus exercised nine annual confulfhips without interruption. He then most artfully refused that magistracy as well as the dictatorship, absented himself from Rome, and waited till the fatal effects of tumult and faction forced the fenate to invest him with a perpetual confulship. Augustus, as well as his fuccessors, affected, however, to conceal fo invidious a title.

CHAP. minished by several important restrictions. Their authority expired with the year in which they were elected; the former office was divided between two, the latter among ten persons; and, as both in their private and public interest they were averse to each other, their mutual conflicts contributed, for the most part, to strengthen rather than to deflroy the balance of the conflitution. But when the confular and tribunitian powers were united, when they were vefted for life in a fingle person, when the general of the army was, at the fame time, the minister of the senate and the representative of the Roman people, it was impossible to refult the exercise, nor was it easy to define the limits, of his imperial prerogative.

Imperial prerogatives.

To these accumulated honours, the policy of Augustus soon added the fplendid as well as important dignities of fupreme pontiff, and of cenfor. By the former he acquired the management of the religion, and by the latter a legal inspection over the manners and fortunes, of the Roman people. If fo many distinct and independent powers did not exactly unite with each other, the complaifance of the fenate was prepared to supply every deficiency by the most ample and extraordinary concessions. The emperors, as the first ministers of the republic, were exempted from the obligation and penalty of many inconvenient laws: they were authorized to convoke the fenate, to make feveral motions in the fame day, to recommend candidates for the honours of the state, to enlarge the bounds of the city, to employ the revenue at their discretion, to declare peace and war, to ratify treaties; and by a most comprehensive claufe, they were empowered to execute whatfoever they should judge advantageous to the empire, and agreeable to the majefly of things private or public, human or divine 14.

<sup>14</sup> See a fragment of a Decree of the Se- Augustus, Tiberius, and Claudius. This nate, conferring on the emperor Vespasian, curious and important monument is published all the powers granted to his predecessors, in Gruter's Inscriptions, No. ccxlii.

When all the various powers of executive government were CHAP. committed to the Imperial magistrate, the ordinary magistrates of The magistrates the commonwealth languished in obscurity, without vigour, and trates. almost without business. The names and forms of the ancient administration were preserved by Augustus with the most anxious care. The usual number of consuls, prætors, and tribunes 15, were annually invested with their respective ensigns of office, and continued to discharge some of their least important functions. Those honours still attracted the vain ambition of the Romans, and the emperors themselves, though invested for life with the powers of the confulfhip, frequently aspired to the title of that annual dignity, which they condescended to share with the most illustrious of their fellow-citizens 16. In the election of these magistrates, the people, during the reign of Augustus, were permitted to expose all the inconveniencies of a wild democracy. That artful prince, inflead of discovering the least symptom of impatience, humbly solicited their fuffrages for himself or his friends, and scrupulously practised all the duties of an ordinary candidate 17. But we may venture to ascribe to his councils, the first measure of the succeeding reign, by which the elections were transferred to the fenate 48. The af-charge of it. Trajan revived the ancient oath, and fwore before the conful's tribunal, that he would observe the laws (Plin. Panegyric. c. 64.).

16 The tyrants themselves were ambitious VOL. I.

17 Quoties Magistratuum Comitiis interesfet, Tribus cum candidatis fuis circuibat : fupplicabatque more folemni. Ferebat et ipfe fuffragium in tribubus, ut unus e populo. Suetonius in August. c. 56.

18 Tum primum Comitia e campo ad patres translata funt. Tacit. Annal, i. 15. The word primum feems to allude to fome faint and unfuccefsful efforts, which were made towards refloring them to the people.

M femblies

<sup>15</sup> Two confuls were created on the Ca- of the confulfhip. The virtuous princes were lends of January; but in the course of the moderate in the pursuit, and exact in the disyear others were substituted in their places, till the annual number feems to have amounted to no less than twelve. The prætors were ufually fixteen or eighteen (Lipfius in Excurf. D. ad Tacit. Annal. l. i.). I have not mentioned the Ædiles or Quæstors. Officers of the police or revenue easily adapt themselves to any form of government. In the time of Nero, the tribunes legally possessed the right of intercession, though it might be dangerous to exercise it (Tacit. Annal. xvi. 26.). In the time of Trajan, it was doubtful whether the tribuneship was an office or a name (Plin. Epist. i. 23.).

CHAP.

femblies of the people were for ever abolifhed, and the emperors were delivered from a dangerous multitude, who, without refloring liberty, might have diffurbed, and perhaps endangered, the established government.

The fenate.

By declaring themselves the protectors of the people, Marius and Cafar had subverted the constitution of their country. But as soon as the fenate had been humbled and difarmed, fuch an affembly, confifting of five or fix hundred persons, was found a much more tractable and useful instrument of dominion. It was on the dignity of the fenate, that Augustus and his successors founded their new empire; and they affected, on every occasion, to adopt the language and principles of Patricians. In the administration of their own powers, they frequently confulted the great national council, and feemed to refer to its decision the most important concerns of peace and war. Rome, Italy, and the internal provinces were fubject to the immediate jurisdiction of the senate. With regard to civil objects, it was the supreme court of appeal; with regard to criminal matters, a tribunal, conflituted for the trial of all offences that were committed by men in any public station, or that affected the peace and majesty of the Roman people. The exercise of the judicial power became the most frequent and serious occupation of the senate: and the important causes that were pleaded before them, afforded a last refuge to the spirit of ancient eloquence. As a council of state, and as a court of justice, the senate possessed very considerable. prerogatives; but in its legislative capacity, in which it was fupposed virtually to represent the people, the rights of fovereignty were acknowledged to refide in that affembly. Every power was derived from their authority, every law was ratified by their fanction. Their regular meetings were held on three stated days in every month, the Calends, the Nones, and the Ides. The debates were conducted with decent freedom; and the emperors themselves.

themselves, who gloried in the name of senators, sat, voted, and CHAP. divided with their equals.

To refume, in a few words, the fystem of the Imperial govern- General idea ment: as it was instituted by Augustus, and maintained by those rial system. princes who understood their own interest and that of the people, it may be defined an absolute monarchy disguised by the forms of a commonwealth. The masters of the Roman world surrounded their throne with darkness, concealed their irresistible strength, and humbly professed themselves the accountable ministers of the senate, whose supreme decrees they dictated and obeyed 19.

The face of the court corresponded with the forms of the admini- Court of the firation. The emperors, if we except those tyrants whose capricious folly violated every law of nature and decency, disdained that pomp and ceremony which might offend their countrymen, but could add nothing to their real power. In all the offices of life, they affected to confound themselves with their subjects, and maintained with them an equal intercourse of visits and entertainments. Their habit, their palace, their table, were fuited only to the rank of an opulent fenator. Their family, however numerous or fplendid, was composed entirely of their domestic flaves and freedmen 20. Augustus or Trajan would have blushed at employing the meanest of the Romans in those menial offices, which, in the household and bedchamber of a limited monarch, are so eagerly solicited by the proudest nobles of Britain.

given a very loofe and partial fketch of the correct him, I have meditated Tacitus, examined Suetonius, and confulted the following moderns: the Abbe de la Bleterie, in the Memoires de l'Academie des Inscriptions, tom. xix. xxi. xxiv. xxv. xxvii. Beaufort Two Differtations of Noodt and Gronovius, may be a gentleman.

19 Dion Cassius (l. liii. p. 703-714.) has de lege Regia; printed at Leyden, in the year 1731. Gravina de Imperio Romano, p. 479 Imperial fystem. To illustrate and often to -544 of his Opuscula. Maffei Verona Illustrata, p. i. p. 245, &c.

20 A weak prince will always be governed by his domestics. The power of slaves aggra-vated the shame of the Romans; and the senate paid court to a Pallas or a Narciffus. Republique Romaine, tom. i. p. 255-275. There is a chance that a modern favourite

M 2

The

CHAP. III. Deification.

The deification of the emperors 21 is the only instance in which they departed from their accustomed prudence and mo-The Afiatic Greeks were the first inventors, the fucceffors of Alexander the first objects, of this servile and impious mode of adulation. It was eafily transferred from the kings to the governors of Afia; and the Roman magistrates very frequently were adored as provincial deities, with the pomp of altars and temples, of festivals and facrifices 12. It was natural that the emperors should not refuse what the proconfuls had accepted, and the divine honours which both the one and the other received from the provinces, attested rather the despotism than the fervitude of Rome. But the conquerors foon imitated the vanquished nations in the arts of flattery; and the imperious spirit of the first Casfar too easily confented to assume, during his life-time, a place among the tutelar deities of Rome. The milder temper of his fucceffor declined fo dangerous an ambition, which was never afterwards revived, except by the madness of Caligula and Domitian. Augustus permitted indeed some of the provincial cities to erect temples to his honour, on condition that they should affociate the worthip of Rome with that of the fovereign; he tolerated private fuperstition, of which he might be the object 23; but he contented himself with being revered by the senate and people in his human character, and wifely left to his fuccessor, the care of his public deification. A regular custom was introduced, that on the decease of every emperor who had neither lived nor died like a tyrant, the fenate by a folemn decree should place him in the number of the fecratione Principum. It would be easier of Inscriptions. for me to copy, than it has been to 23 Jurandasque tuum per nomen ponimus Dutchman.

<sup>22</sup> See a differration of the Abb? Mon- court of Augustus.

<sup>21</sup> See a treatife of Vandale de Con- gault in the first volume of the Academy

verify, the quotations of that learned aras, fays Horace to the emperor himself. and Horace was well acquainted with the gods: and the ceremonies of his Apotheofis were blended with CHAP. those of his funeral. This legal, and as it should seem, injudicious profanation, so abhorrent to our stricter principles, was received with a very faint murmur 24, by the easy nature of Polytheism; but it was received as an inflitution, not of religion but of policy. We should disgrace the virtues of the Antonines, by comparing them with the vices of Hercules or Jupiter. Even the character of Cæsar or Augustus were far superior to those of the popular deities. But it was the misfortune of the former to live in an enlightened age, and their actions were too faithfully recorded to admit of fuch a mixture of fable and mystery, as the devotion of the vulgar requires. As foon as their divinity was established by law, it funk into oblivion, without contributing either to their own fame, or to the dignity of fucceeding princes.

In the confideration of the Imperial government, we have fre- Titles of Auquently mentioned the artful founder, under his well-known title guifus and Garage. of Augustus, which was not however conferred upon him, till the edifice was almost completed. The obscure name of Octavianus, he derived from a mean family, in the little town of Aricia. It was flained with the blood of the profcription: and he was defirous, had it been possible, to erase all memory of his former life. The illustrious furname of Cæfar, he had affumed, as the adopted fon of the dictator; but he had too much good fense, either to hope to be confounded, or to wish to be compared, with that extraordinary man. It was proposed in the senate, to dignify their minister with a new appellation; and after a very serious discussion, that of Augustus was chosen among several others, as being the most expressive of the character of peace and fanctity, which he uni-

24 See Cicero in Philippic. i. 6. Julian of Lucan, but it is a patriotic, rather than in Carfaribus. Inque Deûm templis jurabit a devout indignation. Roma per umbras, is the indignant expression

CHAP. formly affected 25. Augustus was therefore a personal, Cesar a family distinction. The former should naturally have expired with the prince, on whom it was bestowed; and however the latter was diffused by adoption and female alliance, Nero was the last prince who could alledge any hereditary claim to the honours of the Julian line. But, at the time of his death, the practice of a century had inseparably connected those appellations with the Imperial dignity. and they have been preserved by a long succession of emperors, Romans, Greeks, Franks, and Germans, from the fall of the republic to the prefent time. A distinction was, however, soon introduced. The facred title of Augustus was always reserved for the monarch, whilst the name of Cæsar was more freely communicated to his relations; and, from the reign of Hadrian, at least, was appropriated to the fecond person in the state, who was considered as the prefumptive heir of the empire.

Character and policy of Augustus.

The tender respect of Augustus for a free constitution which he had destroyed, can only be explained by an attentive consideration of the character of that fubtle tyrant. A cool head, an unfeeling heart, and a cowardly disposition, prompted him, at the age of nineteen, to assume the mask of hypocrify, which he never afterwards laid afide. With the fame hand, and probably with the fame temper, he figned the profcription of Cicero, and the pardon of Cinna. His virtues, and even his vices, were artificial; and according to the various dictates of his interest, he was at first the enemy, and at last the father, of the Roman world 26. When he framed the artful fystem of the Imperial authority, his moderation his ingenious fiction, is just and elegant; but 26 As Octavianus advanced to the banquet when he considers this change of character of the Cæfars, his colour changed like that as real, and afcribes it to the power of phiof the camelion; pale at first, then red, af- losophy; he does too much honour to phiterwards black, he at last assumed the mild losophy, and to Octavianus. livery of Venus and the Graces (Cæfares, p.

<sup>25</sup> Dion Cassius, I. liii. p. 710, with the 309.). This image employed by Julian, in curious annotations of Reymar.

was inspired by his fears. He wished to deceive the people by CHAP. an image of civil liberty, and the armies by an image of civil government.

I. The death of Cæsar was ever before his eyes. He had lavished berty for the wealth and honours on his adherents; but the most favoured friends people. of his uncle were in the number of the conspirators. The fidelity of the legions might defend his authority against open rebellion; but their vigilance could not fecure his person from the dagger of a determined republican; and the Romans who revered the memory of Brutus 27, would applaud the imitation of his virtue. Cæfar had provoked his fate, as much by the oftentation of his power, as by his power itself. The conful or the tribune might have reigned in peace. The title of King had armed the Romans against his life. Augustus was sensible that mankind is governed by names; nor washe deceived in his expectation, that the fenate and people would fubmit to flavery, provided they were respectfully assured, that they still enjoyed their ancient freedom. A feeble senate and enervated people cheerfully acquiefced in the pleafing illusion, as long as it. was supported by the virtue, or by even the prudence, of the succeffors of Augustus. It was a motive of felf-preservation, not a principle of liberty, that animated the confpirators against Caligula, Nero, and Domitian. They attacked the person of the tyrant, without: aiming their blow at the authority of the emperor.

There appears, indeed, one memorable occasion, in which the Attempt of fenate, after feventy years of patience, made an ineffectual attempt after the to reassume its long forgotten rights. When the throne was va- death of Ca-ligula. cant by the murder of Caligula, the confuls convoked that affembly in the Capitol, condemned the memory of the Cæfars, gave the watch-word liberty to the few cohorts who faintly adhered to their flandard.

<sup>27</sup> Two centuries after the establishment of recommends the character of Brutus as a permonarchy, the emperor Marcus Antoninus fect model of Roman virtue.

CHAP. flandard, and during eight and forty hours acted as the independent chiefs of a free commonwealth. But while they deliberated, the Prætorian guards had refolved. The stupid Claudius, brother of Germanicus, was already in their camp, invested with the Imperial purple, and prepared to support his election by arms. The dream of liberty was at an end; and the fenate awoke to all the horrors of inevitable fervitude. Deferted by the people, and threatened by a military force, that feeble affembly was compelled to ratify the choice of the Prætorians, and to embrace the benefit of an amnesty, which Claudius had the prudence to offer, and the generofity to observe *8.

Image of government for the armies.

II. The infolence of the armies inspired Augustus with fears of a fill more alarming nature. The despair of the citizens could only attempt, what the power of the foldiers was, at any time, able to execute. How precarious was his own authority over men whom he had taught to violate every focial duty! He had heard their feditious clamours; he dreaded their calmer moments of reflection. One revolution had been purchased by immense rewards; but a fecond revolution might double those rewards. The troops professed the fondest attachment to the house of Cæsar; but the attachments of the multitude are capricious and inconstant. Augustus summoned to his aid, whatever remained in those sierce minds, of Roman prejudices; enforced the rigour of discipline by the fanction of law; and interpoling the majefty of the fenate, between the emperor and the army, boldly claimed their allegiance, as the first magistrate of the republic 29.

loft the part of Tacitus, which treated of that ped the endearing name of Fellow-Soldiers, and called them only Soldiers (Sueton. in August. c. 25.). See the use Tiberius made of the fenate in the mutiny of the Pannonian legions (Tacit. Annal. i.).

<sup>28</sup> It is much to be regretted, that we have of discipline. After the civil wars, he droptransaction. We are forced to content ourfelves with the popular rumors of Josephus, and the imperfect hints of Dion and Sue-

<sup>29</sup> Augustus restored the ancient severity

the establishment of this artful system to the death of Commodus, the dangers inherent to a military government were, in a great dience. measure, suspended. The soldiers were seldom roused to that fatal sense of their own strength, and of the weakness of the civil authority, which was, before and afterwards, productive of fuch dreadful calamities. Caligula and Domitian were affaffinated in their palace by their own domestics: the convulsions which agitated Rome on the death of the former, were confined to the walls of the city. But Nero involved the whole empire in his ruin. In the space of eighteen months, four princes perished by the fword; and the Roman world was shaken by the fury of the contending armies. Excepting only this short, though violent, eruption of military licence, the two centuries from Augustus to Commodus passed away unstained with civil blood, and undisturbed by revolutions. The emperor was elected by the authority of the fenate and the confent

In elective monarchies, the vacancy of the throne is a moment Defignation big with danger and mischief. The Roman emperors desirous to fpare the legions that interval of suspense, and the temptation of an irregular choice, invested their defigned successor with so large a share of present power, as should enable him, after their decease, to of the foldiers 30. The legions respected their oath of fidelity, and it requires a minute inspection of the Roman annals to discover three inconfiderable rebellions, which were all suppressed in a few months, and without even the hazard of a battle 31.

of a fucceffor.

30 These words feem to have been the the third, Avidius Cassius, in the reign of constitutional language. See Tacit. Annal. M. Antoninus. The two last reigned but a few months, and were cut off by their own 31 The first was Camillus Scribonianus, who adherents. We may observe, that both CaOf Tiberius.

took up arms in Dalmatia against Claudius, millus and Cassius coloured their ambition and was deferted by his own troops in five with the defign of reftoring the republic; a days. The fecond, L. Antonius, in Ger-many, who rebelled against Domitian; and name and family.

Of Titus.

C H A P. affume the remainder, without fuffering the empire to perceive the change of masters. Thus Augustus, after all his fairer prospects had been fnatched from him by untimely deaths, rested his last hopes on Tiberius, obtained for his adopted fon the cenforial and tribunitian powers, and dictated a law, by which the future prince was invested with an authority equal to his own, over the provinces and the armies 32. Thus Vefpasian subdued the generous mind of his eldeft fon. Titus was adored by the eastern legions, which, under his command, had recently atchieved the conquest of Judæa. His power was dreaded, and, as his virtues were clouded by the intemperance of youth, his defigns were fuspected. Instead of listening to fuch unworthy fuspicions, the prudent monarch affociated Titus to the full powers of the Imperial dignity; and the grateful fon ever approved himfelf the humble and faithful minister of so indulgent a father 33.

The race of the Cæfars and the Flavian family.

The good fense of Vespasian engaged him indeed to embrace every measure that might confirm his recent and precarious elevation. The military oath, and the fidelity of the troops, had been confecrated by the habits of an hundred years, to the name and family of the Cæfars: and although that family had been continued only by the fictitious rite of adoption, the Romans still revered, in the person of Nero, the grandfon of Germanicus, and the lineal fuccessor of Augustus. It was not without reluctance and remorfe, that the Prætorian guards had been perfuaded to abandon the cause of the tyrant 14. The rapid downfal of Galba, Otho, and Vitellius, taught the armies to confider the emperors as the creatures of their will, and the inftruments of their licence. The birth of Vespasian was mean: his grandfather had been a private foldier, his father a petty officer of the revenue 15; his own merit had raifed him, in an CHAP. advanced age to the empire; but his merit was rather useful than shining, and his virtues were difgraced by a strict and even fordid parfimony. Such a prince confulted his true interest by the affociation of a fon, whose more splendid and amiable character might turn the public attention, from the obscure origin, to the future glories of the Flavian house. Under the mild administration of Titus, the Roman world enjoyed a transient felicity, and his beloved memory ferved to protect, above fifteen years, the vices of his brother Domitian.

Hift. Natur.

<sup>34</sup> This idea is frequently and firongly 32 Velleius Paterculus, I. ii. c. 121. Sueton. inculcated by Tacitus. See Hist. i. 5. 16. in Tiber. c. 20. 33 Sueton. in Tit. c. 6. Plin, in Præfat. ii. 76.

Nerva had scarcely accepted the purple from the assassins of Do- A.D. 96. mitian, before he discovered that his feeble age was unable to stem and character the torrent of public diforders, which had multiplied under the long of Trajan. tyranny of his predecessor. His mild disposition was respected by the good; but the degenerate Romans required a more vigorous character, whose justice should strike terror into the guilty. Though he had feveral relations, he fixed his choice on a stranger. He adopted Trajan, then about forty years of age, and who commanded a powerful army in the Lower Germany; and immediately, by a decree of the fenate, declared him his colleague and fucceffor in the empire 36. It is fincerely to be lamented, that whilft we are fatigued with the difguftful relation of Nero's crimes and follies, we are reduced to collect the actions of Trajan from the glimmerings of an abridgment, or the doubtful light of a panegyric. There remains, however, one panegyric far removed beyond the fuspicion of flattery. Above two hundred and fifty years after the death of Trajan, the fenate, in pouring out the customary acclamations on the accession of a new emperor, wished that he might furpass the felicity of Augustus, and the virtue of Trajan 37.

<sup>35</sup> The emperor Vefpasian, with his usual good fense, laughed at the Genealogists, who in Panegyric. deduced his family from Flavius, the founder of 37 Felicion Augusto, MELIOR TRAJANO. Reate (his native country), and one of the com- Eutrop. viii. 5. panions of Hercules. Suet. in Vespasian. c. 12.

<sup>36</sup> Dion, I. Ixviii. p. 1121. Plin. Secund.

C H A P. III. A. D. 117. Of Hadrian.

We may readily believe, that the father of his country hefitated whether he ought to intrust the various and doubtful character of his kinfman Hadrian with fovereign power. In his last moments, the arts of the empress Plotina either fixed the irresolution of Trajan, or boldly supposed a fictitious adoption 38; the truth of which could not be fafely disputed, and Hadrian was peaceably acknowledged as his lawful fuccessor. Under his reign, as has been already mentioned, the empire flourished in peace and prosperity. He encouraged the arts, reformed the laws, afferted military discipline, and visited all his provinces in person. His vast and active genius was equally fuited to the most enlarged views, and the minute details of civil policy. But the ruling passions of his foul were curiosity and vanity. As they prevailed, and as they were attracted by different objects, Hadrian was, by turns, an excellent prince, a ridiculous fophift, and a jealous tyrant. The general tenor of his conduct deferved praife for its equity and moderation. Yet in the first days of his reign, he put to death four confular fenators, his personal enemies, and men who had been judged worthy of empire; and the tediousness of a painful illness rendered him, at last, peevish and cruel. The fenate doubted whether they should pronounce him a god or a tyrant; and the honours decreed to his memory were granted to the prayers of the pious Antoninus 39.

Adoption of the elder and younger Verus.

The caprice of Hadrian influenced his choice of a successor. After revolving in his mind feveral men of diffinguished merit, whom he effeemed and hated, he adopted Ælius Verus, a gay and voluptuous nobleman, recommended by uncommon beauty to the lover of Antinous 40. But whilft Hadrian was delighting himfelf with whole to have been a fiction, on the authority of his father, who being governor of the province where Trajan died, had very good opportunities of fifting this mysterious transaction. Yet Dodwell (Prælect. Camden. xvii.) flatues, temples, city, oracles, and conftelwith his own applause, and the acclamations of the foldiers, whose CHAP. confent had been fecured by an immense donative, the new Cæsar 41 C was ravished from his embraces by an untimely death. He left only one fon. Hadrian commended the boy to the gratitude of the Antonines. He was adopted by Pius; and, on the accession of Marcus, was invested with an equal share of sovereign power. Among the many vices of this younger Verus, he possessed one virtue; a dutiful reverence for his wifer colleague, to whom he willingly abandoned the ruder cares of empire. The philosophic emperor diffembled his follies, lamented his early death, and cast a decent veil over his memory.

38 Dion (l. lxix. p. 1249.) affirms the has maintained, that Hadrian was called to the certain hope of the empire, during the lifetime of Trajan.

<sup>39</sup> Dion (l. lxx. p. 1171.). Aurel. Victor. 40 The deification of Antinous, his medals, lation.

As foon as Hadrian's passion was either gratified or disappointed, Adoption of he resolved to deserve the thanks of posterity, by placing the most the two Antonines. exalted merit on the Roman throne. His difcerning eye eafily discovered a fenator about fifty years of age, blameless in all the offices of life, and a youth of about feventeen, whose riper years opened the fair prospect of every virtue: the elder of these was declared the fon and fuccessor of Hadrian, on condition, however, that he himself should immediately adopt the younger. The two Antonines (for it is of them that we are now speaking) governed the Roman world forty-two years, with the same invariable spirit of A.D. 138wisdom and virtue. Although Pius had two fons 12, he preferred 180. the welfare of Rome to the interest of his family, gave his daughter Faustina in marriage to young Marcus, obtained from the senate the tribunitian and proconfular powers, and with a noble difdain, or rather ignorance of jealoufy, affociated him to all the labours of lation, are well known, and still dishonour the memory of Hadrian. Yet we may re- in Epitom. mark, that of the first fifteen emperors, Clau- 42 Without the help of medals and indius was the only one whose taste in love was fcriptions, we should be ignorant of this entirely correct. For the honours of Anti- fact, so honourable to the memory of nous, see Spanheim, Commentaire sur les Pius. Czefars de Julien, p. 80.

41 Hift. August. p. 13. Aurelius Victor

government.

CHAP. government. Marcus, on the other hand, revered the character of his benefactor, loved him as a parent, obeyed him as his fovegeign 43, and after he was no more, regulated his own administration by the example and maxims of his predecessor. Their united reigns are possibly the only period of history in which the happiness of a great people was the fole object of government.

Character and reign of Pius.

Titus Antoninus Pius has been justly denominated a second Numa. The fame love of religion, juffice, and peace, was the diffinguishing characteristic of both princes. But the situation of the latter opened a much larger field for the exercise of those virtues. Numa could only prevent a few neighbouring villages from plundering each other's harvests. Antoninus diffused order and tranquillity over the greatest part of the earth. His reign is marked by the rare advantage of furnishing very few materials for history; which is, indeed, little more than the register of the crimes, follies and misfortunes of mankind. In private life, he was an amiable, as well as a good man. The native simplicity of his virtue was a stranger to vanity or affectation. He enjoyed, with moderation, the conveniencies of his fortune, and the innocent pleasures of fociety 44; and the benevolence of his foul displayed itself in a cheerful ferenity of temper.

Of Marcus.

The virtue of Marcus Aurelius Antoninus was of a feverer and more laborious kind 45. It was the well-earned harvest of many a reign, Marcus was only two nights absent from the palace, and even those were at different times. Hift. August. p. 25.

44 He was fond of the theatre and not infenfible to the charms of the fair fex. Marcus Antoninus, i. 16. Hift. August. p. 20, 21. Julian in Clefar.

45 The enemies of Marcus charged him with hypocrify, and with a want of that fimplicity which distinguished Pius and even 43 During the twenty-three years of Pius's Verus (Hift, Aug. 6, 34.). This fuspicion, unjust as it was, may ferve to account for the fuperior applause bestowed upon personal qualifications, in preference to the focial virtues. Even Marcus Antoninus has been called a hypocrite; but the wildest scepticism never infinuated that Cæfar might poshibly be a coward, or Tully a fool. Wit and valour are qualifications more eafily afcertained, than humanity or the love of justice.

learned conference, of many a patient lecture, and many a midnight CHAP. lucubration. At the age of twelve years he embraced the rigid fystem of the Stoics, which taught him to submit his body to his mind, his passions to his reason; to consider virtue as the only good, vice as the only evil, all things external, as things indifferent 46. His meditations, composed in the tumult of a camp, are still extant; and he even condescended to give lessons of philofophy, in a more public manner, than was perhaps confiftent with the modesty of a sage, or the dignity of an emperor 47. But his life was the nobleft commentary on the precepts of Zeno. He was fevere to himfelf, indulgent to the imperfection of others, just and beneficent to all mankind. He regretted that Avidius Cassius, who excited a rebellion in Syria, had difappointed him, by a voluntary death, of the pleasure of converting an enemy into a friend, and he justified the fincerity of that fentiment, by moderating the zeal of the fenate against the adherents of the traitor 48. War he detested, as the difgrace and calamity of human nature; but when the necesfity of a just defence called upon him to take up arms, he readily exposed his person to eight winter campaigns, on the frozen banks of the Danube, the feverity of which was at last fatal to the weakness of his constitution. His memory was revered by a grateful posterity, and above a century after his death, many persons preferved the image of Marcus Antoninus among those of their household gods 49.

words, the principles of the portico: Doc- lofophy to the Roman people, during three tores fapientiæ fecutus est, qui fola bona quæ days. He had already done the fame in the honesta, mala tantum quæ turpia; potentiam, nobilitatem, cæteraque extra animum, neque bonis neque malis adnumerant. Tacit. Hift, iv. 5.

<sup>4.</sup> Before he went on the fecond expedition

<sup>46</sup> Tacitus has characterized, in a few against the Germans, he read lectures of phicities of Greece and Afia. Hift. August. in Caffio, c. 3.

<sup>43</sup> Dion, 1. lxxi. p. 1190. Hift. August. in Avid. Caffio.

<sup>49</sup> Hift, August, in Marc. Antonin. c. 18.

C H A P. III. Happiness of the Romans. If a man were called to fix the period in the history of the world, during which the condition of the human race was most happy and prosperous, he would, without hesitation, name that which elapsed from the death of Domitian to the accession of Commodus. The vast extent of the Roman empire was governed by absolute power, under the guidance of virtue and wisdom. The armies were restrained by the firm but gentle hand of four successive emperors, whose characters and authority commanded involuntary respect. The forms of the civil administration were carefully preserved by Nerva, Trajan, Hadrian, and the Antonines, who delighted in the image of liberty, and were pleased with considering themselves as the accountable ministers of the laws. Such princes deserved the honour of restoring the republic, had the Romans of their days been capable of enjoying a rational freedom.

Its precarious

The labours of these monarchs were over-paid by the immense reward that inseparably waited on their success; by the honest pride of virtue, and by the exquifite delight of beholding the general happiness of which they were the authors. A just, but melancholy reflection embittered, however, the nobleft of human enjoyments. They must often have recollected the instability of a happiness which depended on the character of a single man. The fatal moment was perhaps approaching, when fome licentious youth, or fome jealous tyrant, would abuse, to the destruction, that absolute power, which they had exerted for the benefit of their people. The ideal restraints of the senate and the laws might ferve to display the virtues, but could never correct the vices, of the emperor. The military force was a blind and irrefiftible inflrument of oppression; and the corruption of Roman manners would always supply flatterers eager to applaud, and minifters prepared to serve, the fear or the avarice, the lust or the cruelty, of their masters.

Thefe

CHAP.

Memory of Domitian.

These gloomy apprehensions had been already justified by the experience of the Romans. The annals of the emperors exhibit a strong and various picture of human nature, which we should vainly seek among the mixed and doubtful characters of modern history. In the Nero, and conduct of those monarchs we may trace the utmost lines of vice and virtue; the most exalted perfection, and the meanest degeneracy of our own species. The golden age of Trajan and the Antonines had been preceded by an age of iron. It is almost superfluous to enumerate the unworthy fuccessors of Augustus. Their unparalleled vices, and the splendid theatre on which they were acted, have faved them from oblivion. The dark unrelenting Tiberius, the furious Caligula, the feeble Claudius, the profligate and cruel Nero, the beaftly Vitellius 50, and the timid inhuman Domitian, are condemned to everlasting infamy. During fourfcore years (excepting only the fhort and doubtful respite of Vespasian's reign 51) Rome groaned beneath an unremitting tyranny, which exterminated the ancient families of the republic, and was fatal to almost every virtue, and every talent, that arose in that unhappy period.

Under the reign of these monsters, the slavery of the Romans Peculiar miwas accompanied with two peculiar circumstances, the one occasioned by their former liberty, the other by their extensive con-der their tyquefts, which rendered their condition more completely wretched than that of the victims of tyranny in any other age or country. From these causes were derived, 1. The exquisite sensibility of the fery of the Romans un-

VOL. I.

&quot; Vitellius confumed in mere eating, at " tia, futura, pari oblivione dimiferat. Atque leaft fix millions of our money, in about feven months. It is not easy to expreis his vices with dignity, or even decency. Tacitus fairly calls him a hog; but it is by substituting to a coarfe word a very fine image. "At " Vitellius, umbraculis hortorum abditus, " ut ignava animalia, quibus fi cibum fug-" geras jacent torpentque, præterita, instan-

&quot; illum nemore Aricino defidem et marcen-" tem, &c." Tacit. Hift. iii. 36, ii. 05.

Sueton. in Vitell. c. 13. Dion Cassius, 1. lxv. p. 1062.

<sup>51</sup> The execution of Helvidius Prifeus, and of the virtuous Epoaina, difgraced the reign of Vespasian.

CHAP. Ш.

of the Orientals.

fufferers; and, 2. the impossibility of escaping from the hand of the oppressor.

I. When Perfia was governed by the descendants of Sefi, a race of princes, whose wanton cruelty often stained their divan, their table, and their bed, with the blood of their favourites, there is a faving recorded of a young nobleman, That he never departed from the fultan's prefence, without fatisfying himfelf whether his head was still on his shoulders. The experience of every day might almost justify the scepticism of Rustan 52. Yet the fatal sword sufpended above him by a fingle thread, feems not to have diffurbed the flumbers, or interrupted the tranquillity, of the Persian. The monarch's frown, he well knew, could level him with the duft; but the stroke of lightning or apoplexy might be equally fatal; and it was the part of a wife man, to forget the inevitable calamities of human life in the enjoyment of the fleeting hour. He was dignified with the appellation of the king's flave; had, perhaps, been purchased from obscure parents, in a country which he had never known; and was trained up from his infancy in the fevere discipline of the feraglio 53. His name, his wealth, his honours, were the gift of a master, who might, without injustice, resume what he had bestowed. Rustan's knowledge, if he possessed any, could only ferve to confirm his habits by prejudices. His language afforded not words for any form of government, except absolute monarchy. The history of the east informed him, that fuch had ever been the condition of mankind 54. The Koran, and the interpreters of that divine book, inculcated to him, that the fultan was the descendant miferable countries of Georgia and Circaffia office.

<sup>52</sup> Voyage de Chardin en Persc, vol. iii. supply rulers to the greatest part of the east.

<sup>54</sup> Chardin fays, that European travel-53 The practice of raising slaves to the great lers have disfused among the Persians some offices of flate is still more common among ideas of the freedom and mildness of our gothe Turks than among the Persians. The vernments. They have done them a very ill of the prophet, and the vicegerent of Heaven; that patience was CHAP. the first virtue of a Musliulman, and unlimited obedience the great duty of a subject.

The minds of the Romans were very differently prepared for Knowledge flavery. Oppressed beneath the weight of their own corruption rit of the and of military violence, they for a long while preferved the fentiments, or at least the ideas, of their freeborn ancestors. The education of Helvidius and Thrasea, of Tacitus and Pliny, was the fame as that of Cato and Cicero. From Grecian philosophy, they had imbibed the justest and most liberal notions of the dignity of human nature, and the origin of civil fociety. The history of their own country had taught them to revere a free, a virtuous, and a victorious commonwealth; to abhor the fuccessful crimes of Cæsar and Augustus; and inwardly to despise those tyrants whom they adored with the most abject flattery. As magistrates and senators, they were admitted into the great council, which had once dictated laws to the earth, whose name still gave a fanction to the acts of the monarch, and whose authority was so often prostituted to the vilest purposes of tyranny. Tiberius, and those emperors who adopted his maxims, attempted to difguife their murders by the formalities of justice, and perhaps enjoyed a secret pleasure in rendering the fenate their accomplice, as well as their victim. By this affembly, the last of the Romans were condemned for imaginary crimes and real virtues. Their infamous accusers assumed the language of independent patriots, who arraigned a dangerous citizen before the tribunal of his country; and the public fervice was rewarded by riches and honours 55. The fervile judges professed

55 They alleged the example of Scipio and Hift, iv. 43. Dialog. de Orator. c. 8. For Cato. (Tacit. Annal. iii. 66.) Marcellus one accufation, Regulus, the just object of Eprius and Crifpus Vibius had acquired two Pliny's fatire, received from the fenate the millions and a half under Nero. Their confular ornaments, and a prefent of fixty wealth, which aggravated their crimes, prothouland pounds. tected them under Vefpasian. See Tacit.

CHAP. to affert the majefty of the commonwealth, violated in the person of its first magistrate 56, whose clemency they most applauded when they trembled the most at his inexorable and impending cruelty 57. The tyrant beheld their baseness with just contempt, and encountered their fecret fentiments of detestation with fincere and avowed hatred for the whole body of the fenate.

Extent of their empire left them no place of refuge.

II. The division of Europe into a number of independent states, connected, however, with each other, by the general refemblance of religion, language, and manners, is productive of the most beneficial confequences to the liberty of mankind. A modern tyrant, who should find no refistance either in his own breast, or in his people, would foon experience a gentle restraint from the example of his equals, the dread of present censure, the advice of his allies, and the apprehension of his enemies. The object of his displeasure, escaping from the narrow limits of his dominions, would easily obtain, in a happier climate, a fecure refuge, a new fortune adequate to his merit, the freedom of complaint, and perhaps the means of revenge. But the empire of the Romans filled the world, and when that empire fell into the hands of a fingle person, the world became a fafe and dreary prison for his enemies. The flave of Imperial despotism, whether he was condemned to drag his gilded chain in Rome and the fenate, or to wear out a life of exile on the barren rock of Seriphus, or the frozen banks of the Danube, expected his fate in filent despair 58. To refift was fatal, and it was impossible 56 The crime of majeffy was formerly a his elemency. She had not been publickly ftrangled; nor was the body drawn with a hook to the Gemoniæ, where those of common malefactors were exposed. See Tacit. Annal. vi. 25. Sueton. in Tiberio, c. 53.

treasonable offence against the Roman people. As tribunes of the people, Augustus and Tiberius applied it to their own persons, and extended it to an infinite latitude.

<sup>57</sup> After the virtuous and unfortunate widow of Germanicus had been put to death,

<sup>58</sup> Seriphus was a fmall rocky island in the Ægean Sea, the inhabitants of which were Tiberius received the thanks of the fenate for despised for their ignorance and obscurity.

impossible to fly. On every side he was encompassed with a vast CHAP. extent of fea and land, which he could never hope to traverse without being discovered, seized, and restored to his irritated master. Beyond the frontiers, his anxious view could discover nothing, except the ocean, inhospitable deserts, hostile tribes of barbarians, of fierce manners and unknown language, or dependent kings, who would gladly purchase the emperor's protection by the sacrifice of an obnoxious fugitive 59. "Wherever you are," faid Cicero to the exiled Marcellus, " remember that you are equally within the " power of the conqueror "" feem, that he only received an order to leave himself to Tomi. Guards and gaolers were unnecessary.

59 Under Tiberius, a Roman knight at-

The place of Ovid's exile is well known, by tempted to fly to the Parthians. He was flopt his just, but unmanly lamentations. It should in the Streights of Sicily; but so little danger did there appear in the example, that Rome in fo many days, and to transport the most jealous of tyrants disdained to punish it. Tacit. Annal. vi. 14.

60 Cicero ad Familiares, iv. 7.

CHAP. IV.

The cruelty, follies, and murder of Commodus. - Election of Pertinax-his attempts to reform the State-his assassination by the Prætorian Guards.

IV. Indulgence of Marcus,

CHAP. HE mildness of Marcus, which the rigid discipline of the Stoics was unable to eradicate, formed, at the fame time, the most amiable, and the only defective, part of his character. His excellent understanding was often deceived by the unsuspecting goodness of his heart. Artful men, who study the passions of princes, and conceal their own, approached his person in the disguise of philosophic fanctity, and acquired riches and honours by affecting to despise them '. His excessive indulgence to his brother, his wife, and his fon, exceeded the bounds of private virtue, and became a public injury, by the example and confequences of their vices.

to his wife Fautlina;

Faustina, the daughter of Pius and the wife of Marcus, has been as much celebrated for her gallantries as for her beauty. The grave fimplicity of the philosopher was ill-calculated to engage her wanton levity, or to fix that unbounded passion for variety, which often discovered personal merit in the meanest of mankind 2. The Cupid of the ancients was, in general, a very fenfual deity; and the amours of an empress, as they exact on her fide the plainest advances, are feldom fusceptible of much fentimental delicacy.

<sup>2</sup> Faustinam satis constat apud Cayetam, Hist. August. p. 102.

Hist. August. p. 45. These are, it is true, elegisse. Hist. August. p. 30. Lampridius the complaints of faction; but even faction explains the fort of merit which Faultina chose, and the conditions which she exacted.

Marcus

* See the complaints of Avidius Cassius, conditiones sibi et nauticas et gladiatorias, exaggerates, rather than invents.

Mareus was the only man in the empire who feemed ignorant or CHAP. insensible of the irregularities of Faustina; which, according to the prejudices of every age, reflected fome difgrace on the injured hufband. He promoted feveral of her lovers to pofts of honour and profit 1, and during a connexion of thirty years, invariably gave her proofs of the most tender confidence, and of a respect which ended not with her life. In his Meditations, he thanks the gods, who had bestowed on him a wife, so faithful, so gentle, and of fuch a wonderful fimplicity of manners *. The obsequious senate, at his earnest request, declared her a goddess. She was represented in her temples, with the attributes of Juno, Venus, and Ceres; and it was decreed, that, on the day of their nuptials, the youth of either fex should pay their vows before the altar of their chaste patroness 5.

The monftrous vices of the fon have caft a shade on the purity to his fon of the father's virtues. It has been objected to Marcus, that he facrificed the happiness of millions to a fond partiality for a worthless boy; and that he chose a successor in his own family, rather than in the republic. Nothing, however, was neglected by the anxious father, and by the men of virtue and learning whom he fummoned to his affiftance, to expand the narrow mind of young Commodus, to correct his growing vices, and to render him worthy of the throne, for which he was defigned. But the power of instruction is seldom of much efficacy, except in those happy dispositions where it is almost superfluous. The distasteful lesson of a grave philosopher was, in a moment, obliterated by the whisper of a profligate favourite; and Marcus himself blasted the fruits of this the credulity of Marcus; but Madam Dacier fur les Cæfars de Julien, p. 289. The deifiaffures us (and we may credit a lady), that cation of Faustina is the only defect which Juthe husband will always be deceived, if the lian's criticism is able to discover in the allwife condescends to dissemble.

<sup>3</sup> Hift. August. p. 34.

<sup>5</sup> Dion Cassius, 1. 1xxi. p. 1195. Hist. 4 Meditat. 1. i. The world has laughed at August. p. 33. Commentaire de Spanheim accomplished character of Marcus.

104

CHAP. laboured education, by admitting his fon, at the age of fourteen or fifteen, to a full participation of the Imperial power. He lived but four years afterwards; but he lived long enough to repent a rash measure, which raised the impetuous youth above the restraint of reason and authority.

Accession of the emperor Commodus.

Most of the crimes which disturb the internal peace of society, are produced by the restraints which the necessary, but unequal laws of property, have imposed on the appetites of mankind, by confining to a few the possession of those objects that are coveted by many. Of all our passions and appetites, the love of power is of the most imperious and unfociable nature, fince the pride of one man requires the submission of the multitude. In the tumult of civil discord, the laws of fociety lofe their force, and their place is feldom fupplied by those of humanity. The ardor of contention, the pride of victory, the despair of success, the memory of past injuries, and the fear of future dangers, all contribute to inflame the mind, and to filence the voice of pity. From fuch motives almost every page of history has been stained with civil blood; but these motives will not account for the unprovoked cruelties of Commodus, who had nothing to wifh, and every thing to enjoy. The beloved fon of Marcus fucceeded to his father, amidst the acclamations of the fenate and armies 6, and when he ascended the throne, the happy youth faw round him neither competitor to remove, nor enemies to punish. In this calm elevated station, it was furely natural, that he should prefer the love of mankind to their detestation, the mild glories of his five predecessors, to the ignominious fate of Nero and Domitian.

Character of Commodus.

A. D. 180.

Yet Commodus was not, as he has been reprefented, a tiger born with an infatiate thirst of human blood, and capable, from his infancy, of the most inhuman actions 7. Nature had formed him of a weak, rather than a wicked disposition. His simplicity and timidity rendered him the flave of his attendants, who gradually corrupted his mind. His cruelty, which at first obeyed the dictates of others, degenerated into habit, and at length became the ruling passion of the foul 8.

<sup>6</sup> Commodus was the first Port byrecentres dals date by the years of his life; as if they (both lace his fath r's accellion to the throne). were 1 ponymous to those of his reign. Tille-By a new strain of statery, the Eg, ptian mem. Hist. des Empereurs, tom. ii. p. 752. infancy,

CHAP.

Upon the death of his father, Commodus found himself embar- Hereturns raffed with the command of a great army, and the conduct of a difficult war against the Quadi and Marcomanni %. The servile and profligate youths whom Marcus had banished, soon regained their station and influence about the new emperor. They exaggerated the hardships and dangers of a campaign in the wild countries beyond the Danube; and they affured the indolent prince, that the terror of his name and the arms of his lieutenants would be fufficient to complete the conquest of the difmayed barbarians; or to impose such conditions, as were more advantageous than any conquest. By a dextrous application to his fenfual appetites, they compared the tranquillity, the splendour, the refined pleasures of Rome, with the tumult of a Pannonian camp, which afforded neither leisure nor materials for luxury 10. Commodus liftened to the pleafing advice; but whilft he hefitated between his own inclination, and the awe which he still retained for his father's counsellors, the summer infenfibly elapsed, and his triumphal entry into the capital was deferred till the autumn. His graceful person ", popular address, and imagined virtues, attracted the public favour; the honourable peace which he had recently granted to the barbarians, diffused an uni-

VOL. I.

<sup>7</sup> Hift. August. p. 46.

Dion Caffius, I. lxxii. p. 1203.

<sup>9</sup> According to Tertullian (Apolog. c. 25.) he died at Sirmium. But the fituation of Vindobona or Vienna, where both the Victors place his death, is better adapted to the operations of the war against the Marcomanni and Quadi.

<sup>19</sup> Herodian, 1. i. p. 12. 11 Herodian, 1. i. p. 16.

C H A P. versal joy 12; his impatience to revisit Rome was fondly ascribed to the love of his country; and his diffolute course of amusements was faintly condemned in a prince of nineteen years of age.

During the three first years of his reign, the forms, and even the spirit, of the old administration was maintained by those faithful counsellors, to whom Marcus had recommended his son, and for whose wisdom and integrity Commodus still entertained a reluctant efteem. The young prince and his profligate favourites revelled in all the licence of fovereign power; but his hands were yet unflained with blood; and he had even displayed a generofity of fentiment, which might perhaps have ripened into folid virtue 13. A fatal incident decided his fluctuating character.

Is wounded by an affaffin. A. D. 183.

One evening as the emperor was returning to the palace through a dark and narrow portico in the amphitheatre 14, an affaffin, who waited his passage, rushed upon him with a drawn sword, loudly exclaiming, "The fenate fends you this." The menace prevented the deed; the affaffin was feized by the guards, and immediately revealed the authors of the conspiracy. It had been formed, not in the flate, but within the walls of the palace. Lucilla, the emperor's fifter, and widow of Lucius Verus, impatient of the fecond rank, and jealous of the reigning empress, had armed the murderer against her brother's life. She had not ventured to communicate the black defign to her fecond hufband Claudius Pompeianus, a fenator of diffinguished merit and unshaken loyalty; but among the crowd of her lovers (for the imitated the manners of Faustina) the found men of desperate fortunes and wild ambition, who were prepared to ferve her more violent, as well as her tender passions.

<sup>12</sup> This univerfal joy is well described lain concealed several years. The emperor (from the medals as well as historians) by nobly relieved the public anxiety by refusing Mr. Wotton, Hift. of Rome, p. 192, 193. Avidus Cassius, was discovered after he had to fee him, and burning his papers without 13 Manilius the confidential fecretary of opening them. Dion Cassius, l. lxxii. p. 1209. 14 See Maffei degli Amphitheatri, p. 126.

The conspirators experienced the rigor of justice, and the aban- CHAP. doned princess was punished first with exile, and afterwards with death 15.

Commodus

But the words of the affaffin funk deep into the mind of Com- Hatred and modus, and left an indelible impression of fear and hatred against cruelty of the whole body of the fenate. Those whom he had dreaded as im- towards the portunate ministers, he now suspected as secret enemies. The Delators, a race of men discouraged, and almost extinguished, under the former reigns, again became formidable, as foon as they difcovered that the emperor was defirous of finding difaffection and treason in the senate. That assembly, whom Marcus had ever confidered as the great council of the nation, was composed of the most distinguished of the Romans; and distinction of every kind foon became criminal. The possession of wealth stimulated the diligence of the informers; rigid virtue implied a tacit censure of the irregularities of Commodus; important fervices implied a dangerous fuperiority of merit, and the friendship of the father always enfured the aversion of the son. Suspicion was equivalent to proof. Trial to condemnation. The execution of a confiderable fenator was attended with the death of all who might lament or revenge his fate; and when Commodus had once tafted human blood, he became incapable of pity or remorfe.

Of these innocent victims of tyranny, none died more lamented The Quintithan the two brothers of the Quintilian family, Maximus and lian brothers, Condianus; whose fraternal love has faved their names from oblivion, and endeared their memory to posterity. Their studies and their occupations, their pursuits and their pleasures, were still the fame. In the enjoyment of a great estate, they never admitted the idea of a separate interest; some fragments are now extant of a treatife which they composed in common; and in every action of

<sup>15</sup> Dion, l. lxxii. p. 1205. Herodian, l. i. p. 16. Hist. August. p. 46.

CHAP. life it was observed, that their two bodies were animated by one foul. The Antonines, who valued their virtues, and delighted in their union, raifed them, in the same year, to the consulship; and Marcus afterwards intrufted to their joint care, the civil administration of Greece, and a great military command, in which they obtained a fignal victory over the Germans. The kind cruelty of Commodusunited them in death 16.

The minister Perennis.

The tyrant's rage, after having shed the noblest blood of the senate, at length recoiled on the principal instrument of his cruelty. Whilft Commodus was immerfed in blood and luxury, he devolved. the detail of the public business on Perennis; a fervile and ambitious minister, who had obtained his post by the murder of his predecessor, but who possessed a considerable share of vigour and ability. By acts of extortion, and the forfeited estates of the nobles sacrificed to his avarice, he had accumulated an immense treasure. The Prætorian guards were under his immediate command; and his fon, who already discovered a military genius, was at the head of the Illyrian legions. Perennis aspired to the empire; or what, in the eyes of Commodus, amounted to the fame crime, he was capable of aspiring to it, had he not been prevented, surprised, and put to The fall of a minister is a very trifling incident in the general history of the empire; but it was hastened by an extraordinary circumstance, which proved how much the nerves of difcipline were already relaxed. The legions of Britain, discontented with the administration of Perennis, formed a deputation of fifteen hundred felect men, with instructions to march to Rome, and lay their complaints before the emperor. These military petitioners, by their own determined behaviour, by inflaming the divisions of the guards, by exaggerating the strength of the British army, and by alarming the fears of Commodus, exacted and obtained the mi-

A. D. 186.

16 In a note upon the Augustan History, lars concerning these celebrated brothers. See Cafaubon has collected a number of particu- p. 96 of his learned commentary.

nister's

nister's death, as the only redress of their grievances 17. This CHAP. prefumption of a diffant army, and their discovery of the weakness of government, was a fure prefage of the most dreadful convultions.

The negligence of the public administration was betrayed foon Revolt of afterwards, by a new diforder which arose from the smallest beginnings. A spirit of desertion began to prevail among the troops; and the deferters, instead of feeking their fafety in flight or concealment, infested the highways. Maternus, a private foldier, of a daring boldness above his station, collected these bands of robbers into a little army, fet open the prisons, invited the flaves to affert their freedom, and plundered with impunity the rich and defenceless cities of Gaul and Spain. The governors of the provinces, who had long been the spectators, and perhaps the partners, of his depredations, were, at length, roufed from their fupine indolence by the threatning commands of the emperor. Maternus found that he was encompassed, and foresaw that he must be overpowered. A great effort of despair was his last resource. He ordered his followers to disperse, to pass the Alps in small parties and various disguises, and to assemble at Rome, during the licentious tumult of the festival of Cybele 18. To murder Commodus, and to ascend the vacant throne, was the ambition of no vulgar robber. His measures were so ably concerted, that his concealed troops already filled the fireets of Rome. The envy of an accomplice discovered and ruined this fingular enterprise, in the moment when it was ripe for execution 19.

much less odious character of Perennis, than the other historians. His moderation is almost a pledge of his veracity.

<sup>18</sup> During the fecond Punic war, the Romans imported from Afia the worship of the mother of the gods. Her festival, the Mega-

&lt;sup>27</sup> Dion, l. lxxii. p. 1210. Herodian, l. i. lesia, began on the fourth of April, and lasted. p. 22. Hist. August. p. 48. Dion gives a fix days. The streets were crowded with mad processions, the theatres with spectators; and the public tables with unbidden guests. Order and police were fuspended, and pleasure was the only ferious business of the city. See Ovid de Fastis, 1. iv. 189, &c.

<sup>19</sup> Herodian, l. i. p. 23. 28.

CHAP. IV. The minister Cleander.

His avarice and cruelty.

Sufpicious princes often promote the last of mankind from a vain perfuafion, that those who have no dependence, except on their favour, will have no attachment, except to the person of their benefactor. Cleander, the fucceffor of Perennis, was a Phrygian by birth; of a nation, over whose stubborn, but fervile temper, blows only could prevail 20. He had been fent from his native country to Rome, in the capacity of a flave. As a flave he entered the Imperial palace, rendered himself useful to his master's paffions, and rapidly afcended to the most exalted station which a fubject could enjoy. His influence over the mind of Commodus was much greater than that of his predecessor; for Cleander was devoid of any ability or virtue which could inspire the emperor with envy or distrust. Avarice was the reigning passion of his soul, and the great principle of his administration. The rank of Conful, of Patrician, of Senator, was exposed to public fale; and it would have been confidered as difaffection, if any one had refused to purchase these empty and disgraceful honours with the greatest part of his fortune 21. In the lucrative provincial employments, the minifter shared with the governor the spoils of the people. The execution of the laws was venal and arbitrary. A wealthy criminal might obtain, not only the reverfal of the fentence by which he was juftly condemned; but might likewise inflict whatever punishment he pleafed on the accuser, the witnesses, and the judge.

By these means, Cleander, in the space of three years, had accumulated more wealth than had ever yet been poffeffed by any freedman 22. Commodus was perfectly fatisfied with the magnificent presents which the artful courtier laid at his feet in the most no freedman had poffeffed riches equal to those of Cleander. The fortune of Pallas, amounthundred thousand pounds; Ter millies, feafonable

2º Cicero pro Flacco, c. 27.

<sup>21</sup> One of these dear-bought promotions occasioned a current bon mot, that Julius ed, however, to upwards of five and twenty Solon was bunified into the fenate.

<sup>22</sup> Dion (l. lxxii. p. 12, 13.) observes, that

feasonable moments. To divert the public envy, Cleander, under CHAP. the emperor's name, erected baths, porticos, and places of exercife, for the use of the people 23. He flattered himself that the Romans, dazzled and amused by this apparent liberality, would be less affected by the bloody scenes which were daily exhibited; that they would forget the death of Byrrhus, a fenator to whose fuperior merit the late emperor had granted one of his daughters; and that they would forgive the execution of Arrius Antoninus, the last representative of the name and virtues of the Antonines. The former, with more integrity than prudence, had attempted to disclose to his brother-in-law, the true character of Cleander-An equitable fentence pronounced by the latter, when Proconful of Asia, against a worthless creature of the favourite, proved fatal to him 24. After the fall of Perennis, the terrors of Commodus had, for a fhort time, assumed the appearance of a return to virtue. He repealed the most odious of his acts, loaded his memory with the public execration, and afcribed to the pernicious counfels of that wicked minister, all the errors of his inexperienced youth. But his repentance lasted only thirty days; and, under Cleander's tyranny, the administration of Perennis was often regretted.

Peffilence and famine contributed to fill up the measure of the Sedition and calamities of Rome 25. The first could be only imputed to the ander. just indignation of the gods; but a monopoly of corn, supported by the riches and power of the minister, was considered as the immediate cause of the second. The popular discontent, after it had long circulated in whifpers, broke out in the affembled circus. The people quitted their favourite amusements, for the more delicious pleasure of revenge, rushed in crowds towards a palace in the death of Cle-A. D. 189-

&lt;sup>23</sup> Dion, l. lxxii. p. 12, 13. Herodian, l. i. <sup>25</sup> Herodian, l. i. p. 28. Dion, l. lxxii. p. 29. Hift. August. p. 52. These baths were p. 1215. The latter says, that two thousand fituated near the Porta Capena. See Nardini persons died every day at Rome, during a Roma Antica, p. 79.

<sup>24</sup> Hift. August. p. 48.

confiderable length of time.

CHAP. fuburbs, one of the emperor's retirements, and demanded, with angry clamours, the head of the public enemy. Cleander, who commanded the Prætorian guards 26, ordered a body of cavalry to fally forth, and disperse the seditious multitude. The multitude fled with precipitation towards the city; feveral were flain, and many more were trampled to death: but when the cavalry entered the streets, their pursuit was checked by a shower of stones and darts from the roofs and windows of the houses. The foot guards 27, who had been long jealous of the prerogatives and infolence of the Prætorian cavalry, embraced the party of the people. The tumult became a regular engagement, and threatened a general -massacre. The Prætorians, at length, gave way, oppressed with numbers; and the tide of popular fury returned with redoubled violence against the gates of the palace, where Commodus lay, diffolved in luxury, and alone unconscious of the civil war. It was death to approach his person with the unwelcome news. He would have perished in this supine security, had not two women, his eldest fister Fadilla, and Marcia, the most favoured of his concubines, ventured to break into his presence. Bathed in tears, and with diffievelled hair, they threw themselves at his feet; and with all the pressing eloquence of fear, discovered to the affrighted emperor, the crimes of the minister, the rage of the people, and the impending ruin, which, in a few minutes, would burst over his palace and person. Commodus started from his dream of pleasure, and commanded that the head of Cleander should be thrown out to 17 Οι της πύλεως πέζα ερατιώτα. Herodian, 1. i. p. 31. It is doubtful whether he means the Prætorian infantry, or the cohortes urbanæ, a body of fix thousand men, but whose rank and discipline were not equal to their numbers. Neither Tillement nor Wotton chuse to decide this question.

<sup>26</sup> Tuncque primum tres præfecti prætorio to have talked very idly upon this passage. fuere: inter quos libertinus. From fome remains of modesty, Cleander declined the title, whilst he assumed the powers, of Prætorian præfect. As the other freedmen were styled, from their feveral departments, a rationibus, ab epistolis; Cleander called himself a pugione, as intrusted with the defence of his mafler's person. Salmasius and Casaubon seem

the people. The defired spectacle instantly appealed the tumult; CHAP. and the fon of Marcus might even yet have regained the affection and confidence of his fubjects 28.

pleafures of

But every fentiment of virtue and humanity was extinct in the Diffolute mind of Commodus. Whilft he thus abandoned the reins of em- Commodus. pire to these unworthy favourites, he valued nothing in sovereign power, except the unbounded licence of indulging his fenfual appetites. His hours were spent in a seraglio of three hundred beautiful women, and as many boys, of every rank, and of every province; and, wherever the arts of feduction proved ineffectual, the brutal lover had recourse to violence. The ancient historians 29 have expatiated on these abandoned scenes of proflitution, which scorned every restraint of nature or modesty; but it would not be easy to translate their too faithful descriptions into the decency of modern language. intervals of lust were filled up with the basest amusements. The His ignoinfluence of a polite age, and the labour of an attentive education, low sports. had never been able to infuse into his rude and brutish mind, the least tincture of learning; and he was the first of the Roman emperors totally devoid of tafte for the pleafures of the understanding. Nero himself excelled, or affected to excel, in the elegant arts of music and poetry; nor should we despise his pursuits, had he not converted the pleasing relaxation of a leisure hour into the serious business and ambition of his life. But Commodus, from his earliest infancy, discovered an aversion to whatever was rational or liberal, and a fond attachment to the amusements of the populace; the fports of the circus and amphitheatre, the combatants of gladiators, and the hunting of wild beafts. The masters in every branch of dian, l. i. p. 32. Hist. August. p. 48. miâ, omni parte corporis atque ore in 29 Sororibus suis constupratis. Ipsas con-utrumque pollutus. Hist. Aug. p. 47. mia, omni parte corporis atque ore in fexum learning,

VOL. I.

<sup>28</sup> Dion Cassius, 1. lxxii. p. 1215. Hero- Nec irruentium in se juvenum carebat infa-cubinas fuas fub oculis fuis stuprari jubebat.

CHAP. learning, whom Marcus provided for his fon, were heard with inattention and difgust; whilft the Moors and Parthians, who taught him to dart the javelin and to shoot with the bow, found a disciple who delighted in his application, and foon equalled the most skilful of his inftructors, in the fleadiness of the eye, and the dexterity of the hand.

Hunting of wild beafts.

The fervile crowd, whose fortune depended on their master's vices, applauded these ignoble pursuits. The perfidious voice of flattery reminded him, that by exploits of the same nature, by the defeat of the Nemæan lion, and the flaughter of the wild boar of Erymanthus, the Grecian Hercules had acquired a place among the gods, and an immortal memory among men. They only forgot to observe, that in the first ages of society, when the fiercer animals often dispute with man the possession of an unsettled country, a fuccefsful war against those savages is one of the most innocent and beneficial labours of heroifm. In the civilized flate of the Roman empire, the wild beafts had long fince retired from the face of man, and the neighbourhood of populous cities. To furprize them in their folitary haunts, and to transport them to Rome, that they might be flain in pomp by the hand of an emperor, was an enterprife equally ridiculous for the prince, and oppressive for the people 3°. Ignorant of these distinctions, Commodus eagerly embraced the glorious refemblance, and stiled himself (as we still read on his medals 31) the Roman Hercules. The club and the lion's hide were placed by the fide of the throne, amongst the enfigns of fo-hunger, infested the open villages and cultivated country; and they infested them with finally repealed by Justinian. Codex Theoimpunity. The royal beaft was referved for dof. tom. v. p. 92, et Comment. Gothofred. the pleasures of the emperor and the capital; and the unfortunate peafant, who killed one tom. ii. p. 493. of them, though in his own defence, incurvereignty; and statues were erected, in which Commodus was CHAP. represented in the character, and with the attributes, of the god, whose valour and dexterity he endeavoured to emulate in the daily course of his ferocious amusements 32.

<sup>30</sup> The African lions, when preffed by red a very heavy penalty. This extraordinary game-law was mitigated by Honorius, and 38 Spanheim de Numismat. Dissert. xii.

displays his amphithe-

Elated with these praises, which gradually extinguished the in- Commodus nate fense of shame, Commodus resolved to exhibit, before the eyes skill in the of the Roman people, those exercises, which till then he had decently arre. confined within the walls of his palace, and to the presence of a few favourites. On the appointed day, the various motives of flattery, fear, and curiofity, attracted to the amphitheatre an innumerable multitude of spectators; and some degree of applause was defervedly bestowed on the uncommon skill of the Imperial performer. Whether he aimed at the head or heart of the animal, the wound was alike certain and mortal. With arrows, whose point was shaped into the form of a crescent, Commodus often intercepted the rapid career, and cut afunder the long bony neck of the offrich ". A panther was let loofe; and the archer waited till he had leaped upon a trembling malefactor. In the fame inftant the shaft flew, the beast dropt dead, and the man remained unhurt. The dens of the amphitheatre difgorged at once a hundred lions; a hundred darts from the unerring hand of Commodus laid them dead as they ran raging round the Arena. Neither the huge bulk of the elephant, nor the fealy hide of the rhinoceros, could defend them from his stroke. Æthiopia and India yielded their most extraordinary productions; and feveral animals were flain in the amphitheatre, which had been feen only in the representations of art, or perhaps of fancy 34. In all these exhibitions, the securest precautions

<sup>32</sup> Dion, I. lxxii. p. 1216. Hift. August. p. 49. composed of seventeen vertebræ. See Buffon the most gentle, and the most useless of the Hift. Naturelle.

<sup>34</sup> Commodus killed a camelopardalis or 32 The offrich's neck is three feet long, and Giraffe, (Dion, l. lxxii. p. 1211.) the talleft, large quadrupeds. This fingular animal, a Q 2

C H A P. tions were used to protect the person of the Roman Hercules from the desperate spring of any savage; who might possibly difregard the dignity of the emperor, and the fanctity of the god ".

Acts as a gladiator.

But the meanest of the populace were affected with shame and indignation when they beheld their fovereign enter the lifts as a gladiator, and glory in a profession, which the laws and manners of the Romans had branded with the justest note of infamy 36. He chose the habit and arms of the Secutor, whose combat with the Retiarius formed one of the most lively scenes in the bloody sports of the amphitheatre. The Secutor was armed with an helmet, fword, and buckler; his naked antagonist had only a large net and a trident; with the one he endeavoured to entangle, with the other to difpatch, his enemy. If he missed the first throw, he was obliged to fly from the pursuit of the Secutor, till he had prepared his net for a fecond cast 37. The emperor fought in this character seven hundred and thirty-five feveral times. These glorious atchievements were carefully recorded in the public acts of the empire; and that he might omit no circumstance of infamy, he received from the common fund of gladiators a stipend so exorbitant, that it became a new and most ignominious tax upon the Roman people 38. It may be eafily supposed, that in these engagements the master of the world was always fuccessful: in the amphitheatre his victories were not of letters, and though M. de Buffon (Hift. Naturelle, tom. xiii.) has endeavoured to defcribe, he has not ventured to delineate, the Giraffe.

35 Herodian, 1. i. p. 37. Hift. August. p. 50.

36 The virtuous and even the wife princes, forbade the fenators and knights to embrace this feandalous profession, under pain of infamy, or what was more dreaded by those profligate wretches, of exile. The tyrants native only of the interior parts of Africa, allured them to dishonour by threats and rehas not been feen in Europe fince the revival wards. Nero once produced, in the Arena, forty fenators and fixty knights. See Lipfius Saturnalia, 1. ii. c. 2. He has happily corrected a passage of Suetonius, in Nerone, > 37 Lipfius, l. ii. c. 7, 8. Juvenal, in the eighth fatire, gives a picturesque description of this combat.

> 38 Hist. Aug. p. 50. Dion, l. lxxii. p. 1220. He received, for each time, decies, about 8000 l.

> > often

often fanguinary; but when he exercised his skill in the school of CHAP. gladiators, or his own palace, his wretched antagonists were frequently honoured with a mortal wound from the hand of Commodus, and obliged to feal their flattery with their blood 39. He now His infamy disdained the appellation of Hercules. The name of Paulus, a cele-gance, brated Secutor, was the only one which delighted his ear. It was inscribed on his coloffal statues, and repeated in the redoubled acclamations 40 of the mournful and applauding fenate 41. Claudius Pompeianus, the virtuous hufband of Lucilla, was the only fenator who afferted the honour of his rank. As a father, he permitted his fons to confult their fafety by attending the amphitheatre. As a Roman, he declared, that his own life was in the emperor's hands, but that he would never behold the fon of Marcus proftituting his person and dignity. Notwithstanding his manly resolution, Pompeianus escaped the refentment of the tyrant, and, with his honour, had the good fortune to preferve his life 42.

Commodus had now attained the fummit of vice and infamy. Amidst the acclamations of a flattering court, he was unable to difguife, from himfelf, that he had deferved the contempt and hatred of every man of fense and virtue in his empire. His ferocious spirit was irritated by the consciousness of that hatred, by the envy of every kind of merit, by the just apprehension of danger, and by the habit of flaughter, which he contracted in his daily amusements. History has preserved a long lift of consular fenators facri- Conspiracy of his domestics.

+

<sup>39</sup> Victor tells us that Commodus only allowed his antagonists a leaden weapon, dreading most probably the consequences of their

<sup>40</sup> They were obliged to repeat fix hundred and twenty-fix times, Paulus first of the Secutors, &cc.

his own baseness and danger.

<sup>42</sup> He mixed however fome prudence with his courage, and passed the greatest part of his time in a country retirement; alleging his advanced age, and the weakness of his eyes. " I never faw him in the fenate, fays Dion, " except during the fhort reign of Pertinax." All his infirmities had fuddenly left him, and 41 Dion, 1. lxxii. p. 1221. He speaks of they returned as suddenly upon the murder of that excellent prince. Dion, l. lxxiii. p. 1227.

CHAP. ficed to his wanton fuspicion, which fought out, with peculiar anxiety, those unfortunate persons connected, however remotely, with the family of the Antonines, without sparing even the ministers of his crimes or pleasures 43. His cruelty proved at last fatal to himself. He had shed with impunity the noblest blood of Rome: he perished as soon as he was dreaded by his own domestics. Marcia, his favourite concubine, Eclectus his chamberlain, and Lætus his Prætorian præfect, alarmed by the fate of their companions and predecessors, resolved to prevent the destruction which every hour hung over their heads, either from the mad caprice of the tyrant, or the fudden indignation of the people. Marcia feized the occasion of presenting a draught of wine to her lover, after he had fatigued himself with hunting some wild beafts. Commodus retired to sleep; but whilft he was labouring with the effects of poifon and drunkennefs, a robust youth, by profession a wrestler, entered his chamber, and strangled him without refissance. The body was fecretly conveyed out of the palace, before the least fuspicion was entertained in the city, or even in the court, of the emperor's death. Such was the fate of the fon of Marcus, and fo eafy was it to destroy a hated tyrant, who by the artificial powers of government had oppreffed, during thirteen years, fo many millions of subjects, each of whom was equal to their mafter in perfonal ftrength and perfonal abilities 44.

Death of Commodus. A. D. 192. 31st December.

Choice of Pertinax for emperor.

The measures of the conspirators were conducted with the deliberate coolness and celerity which the greatness of the occasion required. They refolved inftantly to fill the vacant throne with an emperor, whose character would justify and maintain the action that had been committed. They fixed on Pertinax, præfect of the city, an ancient

fenator

<sup>43</sup> The præfects were changed almost ed chamberlains. Hist. August. p. 46. 51. hourly or daily; and the caprice of Com- 44 Dion, l. lxxii. p. 1222. Herodian, l. i. modus was often fatal to his most favour- p. 43. Hist. August. p. 52.

fenator of confular rank, whose conspicuous merit had broke through CHAP. the obscurity of his birth, and raised him to the first honours of the flate. He had fucceffively governed most of the provinces of the empire; and in all his great employments, military as well as civil, he had uniformly diffinguished himself by the firmness, the prudence, and the integrity of his conduct 45. He now remained almost alone of the friends and ministers of Marcus; and when, at a late hour of the night, he was awakened with the news, that the chamberlain and the præfect were at his door, he received them with intrepid refignation, and defired they would execute their mafter's orders. Instead of death, they offered him the throne of the Roman world. During some moments he distrusted their intentions and assurances. Convinced at length of the death of Commodus, he accepted the purple with a fincere reluctance, the natural effect of his knowledge both of the duties and of the daugers of the supreme rank 46.

Lætus conducted without delay his new emperor to the camp of He is acthe Prætorians, diffusing at the same time through the city a season- by the Prætoable report that Commodus died fuddenly of an apoplexy; and that the virtuous Pertinax had already succeeded to the throne. guards were rather furprifed than pleafed with the fufpicious death of a prince, whose indulgence and liberality they alone had experienrian guards,

45 Pertinax was a native of Alba Pompeia, in Piedmont, and fon of a timber merchant. The order of his employments (it is marked by Capitolinus) well deferves to be fet down as expressive of the form of government and manners of the age. 1. He was a centurion. 2. Præfect of a cohort in Syria, in the Parthian war, and in Britain. 3. He obtained an Ala, or fquadron of horse, in Mæsia. 4. He was commissary of provisions on the Æmilian way. 5. He commanded the fleet upon the Rhine. 6. He was procurator of Dacia, with a falary of about 1600l. a year. 7. He commanded the Veterans of a legion. 8. He

10. With the command of the first legion in Rhætia and Noricum. 11. He was conful about the year 175. 12. He attended Marcus into the east. 13. He commanded an army on the Danube. 14. He was confular legate of Mæfia. 15. Of Dacia. 16. Of Syria. 17. Of Britain. 18. He had the care of the public provisions at Rome. 19. He was proconful of Africa. 20. Præfect of the city. Herodian (1. i. p. 48.) does justice to his difinterested fpirit; but Capitolinus, who collected every popular rumour, charges him with a great fortune acquired by bribery and corruption.

46 Julian, in the Cæfars, taxes him with obtained the rank of fenator. 9. Of prator, being accessary to the death of Commodus.

C II A P. ced; but the emergency of the occasion, the authority of their præfect, the reputation of Pertinax, and the clamours of the people, obliged them to stifle their fecret discontents, to accept the donative promifed of the new emperor, to fwear allegiance to him, and with joyful acclamations and laurels in their hands to conduct him to the fenate-house, that the military confent might be ratified by the civil authority.

and by the fenate. A. D. 193. all January.

This important night was now far fpent; with the dawn of day, and the commencement of the new year, the fenators expected a fummons to attend an ignominious ceremony. In spite of all remonftrances, even of those of his creatures, who yet preserved any regard for prudence or decency, Commodus had refolved to pass the night in the gladiators school, and from thence to take possession of the confulfhip, in the habit and with the attendance of that infamous crew. On a fudden, before the break of day, the fenate was called together in the temple of Concord, to meet the guards, and to ratify the election of a new emperor. For a few minutes they fat in filent fuspence, doubtful of their unexpected deliverance, and fuspicious of the cruel artifices of Commodus; but when at length they were affured that the tyrant was no more, they refigned themfelves to all the transports of joy and indignation. Pertinax, who modefly represented the meannels of his extraction, and pointed out feveral noble fenators more deferving than himself of the empire, was constrained by their dutiful violence to afcend the throne, and received all the titles of Imperial power, confirmed by the most fincere vows of fidelity. The memory of Commodus was branded with eternal infamy. The names of tyrant, of gladiator, of public enemy, refounded in every corner of the house. They decreed in tumultuous votes, that his honours should be reversed, his titles erased from the public monuments, his statues thrown down, his body dragged with a hook into the stripping room of the gladiators, to fatiate the public fury; and they expressed some indignation CHAP. against those officious servants who had already presumed to screen his remains from the justice of the fenate. But Pertinax could not refuse those last rites to the memory of Marcus, and the tears of his first protector Claudius Pompeianus, who lamented the cruel fate of his brother-in-law, and lamented ftill more that he had deferved it 47.

The memory of Commo-dus declared infamous.

These effusions of impotent rage against a dead emperor, whom Legal juristhe fenate had flattered when alive with the most abject fervility, fenate over betrayed a just but ungenerous spirit of revenge. he legality of these decrees was however supported by the principles of the Imperial constitution. To censure, to depose, or to punish with death, the first magistrate of the republic, who had abused his delegated trust, was the ancient and undoubted prerogative of the Roman senate 48; but that feeble affembly was obliged to content itself with inflicting on a fallen tyrant that public juffice, from which, during his life and reign, he had been shielded by the strong arm of military despotism.

Pertinax found a nobler way of condemning his predeceffor's me- Virtues of mory; by the contrast of his own virtues, with the vices of Commodus. On the day of his accession, he refigned over to his wife and fon his whole private fortune; that they might have no pretence to folicit favours at the expence of the state. He refused to flatter the vanity of the former with the title of Augusta; or to corrupt the inexperienced youth of the latter by the rank of Cæfar. Accurately diffinguishing between the duties of a parent, and those of a fovereign, he educated his fon with a fevere simplicity, which,

<sup>47</sup> Capitolinus gives us the particulars of 48 The fenate condemned Nero to these tumultuary votes which were moved by be put to death more majorum. one fenator, and repeated, or rather chanted c. 49. by the whole body. Hift. August. p. 52.

CHAP. while it gave him no affured prospect of the throne, might in time have rendered him worthy of it. In public, the behaviour of Pertinax was grave and affable. He lived with the virtuous part of the senate (and in a private station, he had been acquainted with the true character of each individual), without either pride or jealoufy; confidered them as friends and companions, with whom he had shared the dangers of the tyranny, and with whom he wished to enjoy the fecurity of the present time. He very frequently invited them to familiar entertainments, the frugality of which was ridiculed by those, who remembered and regretted the luxurious prodigality of Commodus 49.

He endeavours to reform the flate.

To heal, as far as it was possible, the wounds inflicted by the hand of tyranny, was the pleafing, but melancholy, task of Pertinax. The innocent victims, who yet furvived, were recalled from exile, released from prison, and restored to the full possession of their honours and fortunes. The unburied bodies of murdered fenators (for the cruelty of Commodus endeavoured to extend itself beyond death) were deposited in the sepulchres of their ancestors; their memory was justified; and every confolation was bestowed on their ruined and afflicted families. Among these consolations one of the most grateful was the punishment of the Delators; the common enemies of their master, of virtue, and of their country. Yet even in the inquisition of these legal affassins, Pertinax proceeded with a steady temper, which gave every thing to justice, and nothing to popular prejudice and refentment.

fil regula-

The finances of the flate demanded the most vigilant care of the emperor. Though every measure of injustice and extortion had been adopted, which could collect the property of the fubject into the coffers of the prince; the rapaciousness of Commodus had been CHAP. fo very inadequate to his extravagance, that, upon his death, no more than eight thousand pounds were found in the exhausted treafury 50, to defray the current expences of government, and to difcharge the pressing demand of a liberal donative, which the new emperor had been obliged to promise to the Prætorian guards. Yet under these distressed circumstances, Pertinax had the generous sirmness to remit all the oppressive taxes, invented by Commodus, and to cancel all the unjust claims of the treasury; declaring in a decree of the fenate, " that he was better fatisfied to administer a poor re-" public with innocence, than to acquire riches by the ways of ty-" ranny and dishonour." Occonomy and industry he considered as the pure and genuine fources of wealth; and from them he foon derived a copious supply for the public necessities. The expence of the household was immediately reduced to one half. All the instruments of luxury, Pertinax exposed to public auction 51, gold and filver plate, chariots of a fingular conftruction, a fuperfluous wardrobe of filk and embroidery, and a great number of beautiful flaves of both fexes; excepting only, with attentive humanity, those who were born in a state of freedom, and had been ravished from the arms of their weeping parents. At the same time that he obliged the worthless favourites of the tyrant to refign a part of their illgotten wealth, he fatisfied the just creditors of the state, and unexpectedly discharged the long arrears of honest services. He removed the oppressive restrictions which had been laid upon commerce, and granted all the uncultivated lands in Italy and the provinces, to those

<sup>49</sup> Dion (l. Ixxiii. p. 1223.) speaks of August. p. 58.) like a slave, who had rethese entertainments, as a senator who had ceived his intelligence from one of the sculsupped with the emperor. Capitolinus (Hift. lions.

<sup>50</sup> Decies. The blameless occonomy of useless ornaments into money, Dion (l. lxxiii. Pius left his fuccessors a treasure of wicits step-ties millies, above two and twenty millions sterling. Dion, l. lxxiii. p. 1231.

Pius left his fuccessors a treasure of wicits step-tinax. He wished to expose the vices of Commodus, and to discover by the purchasers 51 Befides the defign of converting thefe those who most resembled him.

CHAP. who would improve them; with an exemption from tribute, during the term of ten years 52.

and popularity.

Such an uniform conduct had already fecured to Pertinax the nobleft reward of a fovereign, the love and effect of his people. Those who remembered the virtues of Marcus were happy to contemplate in their new emperor the features of that bright original; and flattered themselves, that they should long enjoy the benign influence of his administration. A hasty zeal to reform the corrupted state, accompanied with less prudence than might have been expected from the years and experience of Pertinax, proved fatal to himself and to his country. His honest indiscretion united against him the fervile crowd, who found their private benefit in the public diforders, and who preferred the favour of a tyrant to the inexorable equality of the laws 51.

Discontent of the Prætorians.

Amidst the general joy, the fullen and angry countenance of the Prætorian guards betrayed their inward diffatisfaction. They had reluctantly submitted to Pertinax; they dreaded the strictness of the ancient discipline, which he was preparing to restore; and they regretted the license of the former reign. Their discontents were secretly fomented by Lætus their præfect, who found, when it was too late, that his new emperor would reward a fervant, but would not be ruled by a favourite. On the third day of his reign the foldiers feized on a noble fenator, with a defign to carry him to the camp, and to invest him with the Imperial purple. Instead of being dazzled by the dangerous honour, the affrighted victim escaped A conspiracy from their violence, and took refuge at the feet of Pertinax. A fhort time afterwards Sofius Falco, one of the confuls of the year, prevented.

<sup>52</sup> Though Capitolinus has picked up rodian in admiring his public conduct. many idle tales of the private life of 53 Leges, rem furdam, inexorabilem effe. Pertinax, he joins with Dion and He- T. Liv. ii. 3.

a rash youth 54, but of an ancient and opulent family, listened to the CHAP. voice of ambition; and a confpiracy was formed during a fhort absence of Pertinax, which was crushed by his sudden return to Rome, and his resolute behaviour. Falco was on the point of being juftly condemned to death, as a public enemy, had he not been faved by the earnest and fincere intreaties of the injured emperor: who conjured the fenate, that the purity of his reign might not be stained by the blood even of a guilty senator.

These disappointments served only to irritate the rage of the Præ- Murder of torian guards. On the twenty-eighth of March, eighty-fix days the Pratoonly after the death of Commodus, a general fedition broke out in A.D. 193. the camp, which the officers wanted either power or inclination to March 28th. suppress. Two or three hundred of the most desperate soldiers marched at noon-day, with arms in their hands, and fury in their looks, towards the Imperial palace. The gates were thrown open by their companions upon guard; and by the domestics of the old court, who had already formed a fecret conspiracy against the life of the too virtuous emperor. On the news of their approach, Pertinax disdaining either slight or concealment advanced to meet his assassins; and recalled to their minds his own innocence, and the fanctity of their recent oath. For a few moments they flood in filent suspense, ashamed of their atrocious design, and awed by the venerable aspect and majestic firmness of their sovereign, till at length the despair of pardon reviving their fury, a barbarian of the country of Tongres 55

levelled the first blow against Pertinax, who was instantly dispatched

Pertinax by difficult) Falco behaved with the most petulant dutchy of Gueldres and the neighbourhood, indecency to Pertinax, on the day of his ac- and were diffinguished by their valour, and foldier probably belonged to the Batavian 1, i. c. 4.

54 If we credit Capitolinus (which is rather horfe-guards, who were mostly raised in the cession. The wife emperor only admonished by the boldness with which they swam their him of his youth and inexperience. Hift, horses across the broadest and most rapid ugust. p. 55.
rivers. Tacit. Hist. iv. 12. Dion, l. iv.
55 The modern bishopric of Liege. This p. 797. Lipsus de magnitudine Romana, CHAP. with a multitude of wounds. His head separated from his body, and placed on a lance, was carried in triumph to the Prætorian camp, in the fight of a mournful and indignant people, who lamented the unworthy fate of that excellent prince, and the transient bleffings of a reign, the memory of which could ferve only to aggravate their approaching misfortunes 56.

> 56 Dion, I. Ixxiii. p. 1232. Herodian, in Epitom. & in Cafarib. Eutropius, 1. ii. p. 60. Hift. August. p. 58. Victor viii. 16.

CHAP. V.

Public sale of the Empire to Didius Julianus by the Pratorian Guards .- Clodius Albinus in Britain, Pescennius Niger in Syria, and Septimius Severus in Pannonia, declare against the murderers of Pertinax.—Civil wars and victory of Severus over his three rivals.—Relaxation of discipline .- New maxims of government.

HE power of the fword is more fenfibly felt in an exten- CHAP. five monarchy, than in a finall community. It has been calculated by the ablest politicians, that no state, without being soon exhausted, can maintain above the hundredth part of its members in force, to the arms and idleness. But although this relative proportion may be the people. uniform, the influence of the army over the rest of the society will vary according to the degree of its positive strength. The advantages of military science and discipline cannot be exerted, unless a proper number of foldiers are united into one body, and actuated by one foul. With a handful of men, fuch an union would be ineffectual; with an unwieldy hoft, it would be impracticable; and the powers of the machine would be alike deflroyed by the extreme minuteness, or the excessive weight, of its springs. To illustrate this observation we need only reflect, that there is no superiority of natural strength, artificial weapons, or acquired skill, which could enable one man to keep in conftant subjection one hundred of his fellow-creatures: the tyrant of a fingle town, or a finall diffrict, would foon difcover that an hundred armed followers were a weak defence against ten thousand peasants or citizens; but an hundred thousand

Proportion of the military

C H A P. thousand well-disciplined foldiers will command, with despotic sway, ten millions of fubjects; and a body of ten or fifteen thousand guards will strike terror into the most numerous populace that ever crowded the streets of an immense capital.

The Prætorian guards.

Their inftitution.

The Prætorian bands, whose licentious fury was the first symptom and cause of the decline of the Roman empire, scarcely amounted to the last mentioned number '. They derived their institution from Augustus. That crafty tyrant, sensible that laws might colour, but that arms alone could maintain, his usurped dominion, had gradually formed this powerful body of guards in constant readiness to protect his person, to awe the senate, and either to prevent or to crush the first motions of rebellion. He distinguished these favoured troops by a double pay, and superior privileges; but, as their formidable afpect would at once have alarmed and irritated the Roman people, three cohorts only were flationed in the capital; whilft the remainder was dispersed in the adjacent towns of Italy 2. But after fifty years of peace and fervitude, Tiberius ventured on a decifive measure, which for ever rivetted the fetters of his country. Under the fair pretences of relieving Italy from the heavy burden of military quarters, and of introducing a stricter discipline among the guards, he affembled them at Rome, in a permanent camp', which was fortified with skilful care 4, and placed on a commanding fituation 5.

Their strength and confidence.

Their camp.

Such formidable fervants are always necessary, but often fatal to the throne of despotism. By thus introducing the Prætorian guards,

1 They were originally nine or ten thoufand men (for Tacitus and Dion are not agreed upon the subject), divided into as many cohorts. Vitellius increafed them to fixteen thousand, and as far as we can learn from infcriptions, they never afterwards funk much below that number. See Lipfius de magnitudine Romana, i. 4.

<sup>2</sup> Sueton. in August. c. 49.

3 Tacit. Annal. iv. 2. Sueton. in Donatus de Roma Antiqua, p. 46.

Tiber. c. 37. Dion Cassius, 1. Ivii. p. 867. 4 In the civil war between Vitellius and Vefpafian, the Prætorian camp was attacked and defended with all the machines used in the fiege of the best fortified cities. Tacit. Hift. iii. 84.

5 Close to the walls of the city, on the broad fummit of the Quirinal and Viminal hills. See Nardini Roma Antica, p. 174.

as it were, into the palace and the fenate, the emperors taught them CHAP. to perceive their own firength, and the weakness of the civil government; to view the vices of their masters with familiar contempt, and to lay afide that reverential awe, which distance only, and mystery, can preserve, towards an imaginary power. In the luxurious idleness of an opulent city, their pride was nourished by the fense of their irrefistible weight; nor was it possible to conceal from them, that the person of the sovereign, the authority of the fenate, the public treasure, and the seat of empire, were all in their hands. To divert the Prætorian bands from these dangerous reflections, the firmest and best established princes were obliged to mix blandishments with commands, rewards with punishments, to flatter their pride, indulge their pleasures, connive at their irregularities, and to purchase their precarious faith by a liberal donative; which, fince the elevation of Claudius, was exacted as a legal claim, on the accession of every new emperor 6.

The advocates of the guards endeavoured to justify by arguments, Their spethe power which they afferted by arms; and to maintain that, according to the purest principles of the constitution, their consent was effentially necessary in the appointment of an emperor. The election of confuls, of generals, and of magistrates, however it had been recently usurped by the fenate, was the ancient and undoubted right of the Roman people 7. But where was the Roman people to be found? Not furely amongst the mixed multitude of slaves and cious claims.

<sup>6</sup> Claudius, raifed by the foldiers to the amount of these sums, by Hadrian's comc. 10.): when Marcus, with his colleague fterling. Lucius Verus, took quiet possession of the throne he gave vicena, 160 l. to each of the guards. Hist August p. 25. (Dion, lxxiii. licarnassus, shew the authority of the people, p. 1231.) We may form some idea of the even in the election of the kings.

empire, was the first who gave a donative. plaint, that the promotion of a Cæsar had He gave quina dena, 1201. (Sueton. in Claud. cost him ter millies, two millions and a half CHAP. strangers that filled the streets of Rome; a servile populace, as devoid of spirit as destitute of property. The defenders of the state, felected from the flower of the Italian youth 8, and trained in the exercise of arms and virtue, were the genuine representatives of the people, and the best entitled to elect the military chief of the republic. These affertions, however defective in reason, became unanswerable, when the fierce Prætorians increased their weight, by throwing, like the barbarian conqueror of Rome, their fwords into the fcale 9.

They offer the empire to fale.

The Prætorians had violated the fanctity of the throne, by the atrocious murder of Pertinax; they dishonoured the majesty of it, by their fubsequent conduct. The camp was without a leader, for even the præfect Lætus, who had excited the tempest, prudently declined the public indignation. Amidst the wild disorder Sulpicianus, the emperor's father-in-law, and governor of the city, who had been fent to the camp on the first alarm of mutiny, was endeavouring to calm the fury of the multitude, when he was filenced by the clamorous return of the murderers, bearing on a lance the head of Pertinax. Though history has accustomed us to observe every principle and every passion yielding to the imperious dictates of ambition, it is scarcely credible that, in these moments of horror, Sulpicianus should have aspired to ascend a throne polluted with the recent blood of fo near a relation, and fo excellent a prince. He had already begun to use the only effectual argument, and to treat for the Imperial dignity; but the more prudent of the Prætorians, apprehensive that, in this private contract, they should not obtain a just price for so valuable a commodity, ran out upon the ramparts;

<sup>8</sup> They were originally recruited in La- of Italia Alumni, Romana vere juventus. tium, Etruria, and the old colonies (Tacit. Tacit. Hift. i. 84.

Annal. iv. 5.). The emperor Otho compli 9 In the fiege of Rome by the Gauls. See ments their vanity, with the flattering titles Livy, v. 48. Plutarch. in Camill. p. 143.

and, with a loud voice, proclaimed that the Roman world was to CHAP. be disposed of to the best bidder by public auction 10.

This infamous offer, the most infolent excess of military licence, It is purchasdiffused a universal grief, shame, and indignation throughout the city. It reached at length the ears of Didius Julianus, a wealthy fenator, who, regardless of the public calamities, was indulging himfelf in the luxury of the table ". His wife and his daughter, his freedmen and his paralites, eafily convinced him that he deserved the throne, and earnefly conjured him to embrace so fortunate an opportunity. The vain old man haftened to the Prætorian camp, where Sulpicianus was still in treaty with the guards; and began to bid against him from the foot of the rampart. The unworthy negociation was transacted by faithful emissaries, who passed alternately from one candidate to the other, and acquainted each of them with the offers of his rival. Sulpicianus had already promised a donative of five thousand drachms (above one hundred and fixty pounds) to each foldier; when Julian, eager for the prize, rofe at once to the fum of fix thousand two hundred and fifty drachms, or upwards of two hundred pounds sterling. The gates of the camp were infantly thrown open to the purchaser; he was declared emperor, and received an oath of allegiance from the foldiers, who retained humanity enough to flipulate that he should pardon and forget the competition of Sulpicianus.

ed by Julian, A. D. 193. March 28th.

It was now incumbent on the Prætorians to fulfil the conditions Julian is acof the fale. They placed their new fovereign, whom they ferved by the fenate, and despised, in the centre of their ranks, surrounded him on every fide with their shields, and conducted him in close order of battle through the deferted ftreets of the city. The fenate was commanded

<sup>10</sup> Dion, I. Ixxiii. p. 1234. Herodian, 1. ii. p. 63. Hift. August. p. 60. Though the three historians agree that it was in fact an auction, Herodian alone affirms, that it was proclaimed as fuch by the foldiers. 11 Spartianus foftens the most edious parts of the character and elevation of Julian.

CHAP. to affemble, and those who had been the distinguished friends of Pertinax, or the personal enemies of Julian, found it necessary to affect a more than common share of satisfaction at this happy revolution 12. After Julian had filled the senate-house with armed foldiers, he expatiated on the freedom of his election, his own eminent virtues, and his full affurance of the affections of the fenate. The obsequious affembly congratulated their own and the public felicity; engaged their allegiance, and conferred on him all the feveral branches of the Imperial power 13. From the fenate Julian was conducted by the fame military procession, to take possession of the palace. The first objects which struck his eyes, were the abandoned trunk of Pertinax, and the frugal entertainment prepared for his fupper. The one he viewed with indifference; the other with contempt. A magnificent feast was prepared by his order, and he amused himself till a very late hour, with dice, and the performances of Pylades, a celebrated dancer. Yet it was observed, that after the crowd of flatterers dispersed, and lest him to darkness, solitude, and terrible reflection, he paffed a fleepless night; revolving most probably in his mind his own rash folly, the fate of his virtuous predecessor, and the doubtful and dangerous tenure of an empire, which had not been acquired by merit, but purchased by money 14.

Takes posseffion of the palace.

The public difcontent.

He had reason to tremble. On the throne of the world he found himself without a friend, and even without an adherent. The guards themselves were ashamed of the prince whom their avarice had perfuaded them to accept; nor was there a citizen who did not confider his elevation with horror, as the last infult on the Roman

p. 1235.

new emperor, whatever had been his birth, the two writers.

<sup>12</sup> Dion Casius, at that time prator, had was immediately aggregated to the number of Patrician familie.

<sup>14</sup> Dion, I. Imiii. p. 1235. Hift. August. 13 Hift. August. p. 61. We larn from p. 61. I have endeavoured to blend into one thence one curious circumftance, that the confident flory the feeming contradictions of name. The nobility, whose conspicuous flation and ample possessions C H A P. exacted the strictest caution, dissembled their fentiments, and met the affected civility of the emperor with fmiles of complacency and professions of duty. But the people, secure in their numbers and obscurity, gave a free vent to their passions. The streets and public places of Rome refounded with clamours and imprecations. The enraged multitude affronted the person of Julian, rejected his liberality, and, conscious of the impotence of their own resentment, they called aloud on the legions of the frontiers to affert the violated majesty of the Roman empire.

The public discontent was soon diffused from the centre to the The armies frontiers of the empire. The armies of Britain, of Syria, and of Illyricum, lamented the death of Pertinax, in whose company, or Pannonia deunder whose command, they had so often fought and conquered. Julian. They received with furprife, with indignation, and perhaps with envy, the extraordinary intelligence, that the Prætorians had disposed of the empire by public auction; and they sternly refused to ratify the ignominious bargain. Their immediate and unanimous revolt was fatal to Julian, but it was fatal at the fame time to the public peace; as the generals of the respective armies, Clodius Albinus, Pefcennius Niger, and Septimius Severus, were still more anxious to fucceed than to revenge the murdered Pertinax. Their forces were exactly balanced. Each of them was at the head of three legions's, with a numerous train of auxiliaries; and however different in

clare against

Clodius Albinus, governor of Britain, furpassed both his compe- Clodius Altitors in the nobility of his extraction, which he derived from fome tain. of the most illustrious names of the old republic 16. But the branch from whence he claimed his descent, was funk into mean circumtheir characters, they were all foldiers of experience and capacity.

former of whom was raifed to the confulfhip,

<sup>15</sup> Dion, 1. lxxiii. p. 1235.

The Posthumian and the Cejonian; the in the fifth year after its inflication.

CHAP. stances, and transplanted into a remote province. It is difficult to form a just idea of his true character. Under the philosophic cloak of aufterity, he ftands accused of concealing most of the vices which degrade human nature 17. But his accusers are those venal writers who adored the fortune of Severus, and trampled on the ashes of an unfuccessful rival. Virtue, or the appearances of virtue, recommended Albinus to the confidence and good opinion of Marcus; and his preferving with the fon the fame interest which he had acquired with the father, is a proof at least that he was possessed of a very flexible disposition. The favour of a tyrant does not always suppose a want of merit in the object of it; he may, without intending it, reward a man of worth and ability, or he may find fuch a man useful to his own fervice. It does not appear that Albinus ferved the fon of Marcus, either as the minister of his cruelties, or even as the affociate of his pleafures. He was employed in a diftant honourable command, when he received a confidential letter from the emperor, acquainting him of the treasonable designs of fome discontented generals, and authorizing him to declare himself the guardian and fuccessor of the throne, by assuming the title and enfigns of Cæfar 18. The governor of Britain wifely declined the dangerous honour, which would have marked him for the jealoufy, or involved him in the approaching ruin, of Commodus. courted power by nobler, or, at least, by more specious arts. On a premature report of the death of the emperor, he affembled his troops; and, in an eloquent discourse, deplored the inevitable mischiefs of despotism, described the happiness and glory which their ancestors had enjoyed under the confular government, and declared his firm resolution to reinstate the senate and people in their legal authority.

mixes up all the virtues, and all the vices gustan history. that enter into the human composition, and bestows them on the same object. Such, in-authority. This popular harangue was answered by the loud accla- C H A P. mations of the British legions, and received at Rome with a secret murmur of applause. Safe in the possession of his little world, and in the command of an army less distinguished indeed for discipline than for numbers and valour 19, Albinus braved the menaces of Commodus, maintained towards Pertinax a flately ambiguous referve, and inftantly declared against the usurpation of Julian. The convulfions of the capital added new weight to his fentiments, or rather to his professions of patriotism. A regard to decency induced him to decline the lofty titles of Augustus and Emperor; and he imitated perhaps the example of Galba, who, on a fimilar occasion, had styled himself the Lieutenant of the senate and people 20.

<sup>*7</sup> Spartianus, in his undigested collections, deed, are many of the characters in the Au-

<sup>16</sup> Hift. August. p. 80. 84.

Personal merit alone had raised Pescennius Niger from an obscure Pescennius birth and flation, to the government of Syria; a lucrative and im- Syria. portant command, which in times of civil confusion gave him a near prospect of the throne. Yet his parts seem to have been better fuited to the fecond than to the first rank; he was an unequal rival, though he might have approved himself an excellent lieutenant, to Severus, who afterwards displayed the greatness of his mind by adopting feveral useful institutions from a vanquished enemy 21. In his government, Niger acquired the efteem of the foldiers, and the love of the provincials. His rigid discipline fortified the valour and confirmed the obedience of the former, whilst the voluptuous Syrians were less delighted with the mild firmness of his administration, than with the affability of his manners, and the apparent pleasure with which he attended their frequent and pompous festivals 22. As soon as the

<sup>19</sup> Pertinax, who governed Britain a few years before, had been left for dead, in a mutiny of the foldiers. Hift. August. p. 54. Yet they loved and regretted him; admirantibus eam virtutem cui irafcebantur.

<sup>29</sup> Suston. in Galb. c. 10.

<sup>21</sup> Hift. August. p. 76.

<sup>22</sup> Herod. 1. ii. p. 68. The chronicle of John Malala, of Antioch, shews the zealous attachment of his countrymen to these festivals, which at once gratified their fuperftition, and their love of pleafure.

CHAP. intelligence of the atrocious murder of Pertinax had reached Antioch, the wifhes of Afia invited Niger to assume the Imperial purple and revenge his death. The legions of the eastern frontier embraced his cause; the opulent but unarmed provinces from the frontiers of Æthiopia 23 to the Hadriatic, cheerfully submitted to his power; and the kings beyond the Tigris and the Euphrates congratulated his election, and offered him their homage and fervices. The mind of Niger was not capable of receiving this fudden tide of fortune; he flattered himself that his accession would be undisturbed by competition, and unstained by civil blood; and whilst he enjoyed the vain pomp of triumph, he neglected to fecure the means of victory. Instead of entering into an effectual negociation with the powerful armies of the west, whose resolution might decide, or at least must balance, the mighty contest; instead of advancing without delay towards Rome and Italy, where his prefence was impatiently expected 24, Niger trifled away in the luxury of Antioch those irretrievable moments which were diligently improved by the decifive activity of Severus 25.

Pannonia and Dalma-

The country of Pannonia and Dalmatia, which occupied the space between the Danube and the Hadriatic, was one of the last and most difficult conquests of the Romans. In the defence of national freedom, two hundred thousand of these barbarians had once appeared in the field, alarmed the declining age of Augustus, and exercised the vigilant prudence of Tiberius at the head of the collected force of the empire 26. The Pannonians yielded at length to and, indeed, as a perfonal friend of Niger. If Spartianus is not, as I strongly suspect, mistaken, he has brought to light a dynasty of tributary princes totally unknown to hif-

<sup>2+</sup> Dion, l. lxxiii. p. 1238. Herod. l. ii. P. 67.. A verse in every one's mouth at that

<sup>23</sup> A king of Thebes, in Egypt, is men- time, feems to express the general opinion of the three rivals; Optimy ell Niger, bonus Afer, peffimus Albus. Hift. August. p.

<sup>25</sup> Herodian, 1. ii. p. 71.

<sup>26</sup> See an account of that memorable war in Velleius Paterculus, ii. 110, &c. who ferved

the arms and inflitutions of Rome. Their recent subjection, how- CHAP. ever, the neighbourhood, and even the mixture, of the unconquered tribes, and perhaps the climate, adapted, as it has been observed, to the production of great bodies and flow minds 27, all contributed to preferve some remains of their original ferocity, and under the tame and uniform countenance of Roman provincials, the hardy features of the natives were still to be discerned. Their warlike youth afforded an inexhaustible supply of recruits to the legions stationed on the banks of the Danube, and which, from a perpetual warfare against the Germans and Sarmatians, were defervedly esteemed the best troops in the fervice.

The Pannonian army was at this time commanded by Septi- Septimius mius Severus, a native of Africa, who, in the gradual afcent of private honours, had concealed his daring ambition, which was never diverted from its fleady course by the allurements of pleasure, the apprehension of danger, or the feelings of humanity 28. On the first news of the murder of Pertinax, he affembled his troops, painted in the most lively colours the crime, the insolence, and the weakness of the Prætorian guards, and animated the legions to arms and to revenge. He concluded (and the peroration was thought extremely eloquent) with promifing every foldier about four hundred pounds; an honourable donative, double in value to the infamous bribe with which Julian had purchased the empire 29. The acclamations of the declared emarmy immediately faluted Severus with the names of Augustus, Perti-Pannonian nax, and Emperor; and he thus attained the lofty station to which legions.

A. D. 193. April 13th.

<sup>27</sup> Such is the reflection of Herodian, l. ii. py his place. Hith. August. p. So. p. 74. Will the modern Auftrians allow the influence?

fured his conduct, and withed to occu- 66. Comment. p. 115.

29 Pannonia was too poor to supply such a fum. It was probably promifed in the <sup>18</sup> In the letter to Albinus, already camp, and paid at Rome, after the victory, mentioned, Commodus accuses Severus, as In fixing the sum, I have adopted the conone of the ambitious generals who cen- jecture of Cafaubon. See Hist. August. p.

VOL. I.

he

C H A P. he was invited by conscious merit and a long train of dreams and omens, the fruitful offspring either of his superstition or policy ".

> The new candidate for empire faw and improved the peculiar advantage of his fituation. His province extended to the Julian Alps, which gave an eafy access into Italy; and he remembered the faying of Augustus, That a Pannonian army might in ten days appear in fight of Rome 31. By a celerity proportioned to the greatness of the occasion, he might reasonably hope to revenge Pertinax, punish Julian, and receive the homage of the senate and people, as their lawful emperor, before his competitors, separated from Italy by an immense tract of sea and land, were apprized of his success, or even of his election. During the whole expedition, he fearcely allowed himself any moments for sleep or food; marching on foot, and in complete armour, at the head of his columns, he infinuated himfelf into the confidence and affection of his troops, preffed their diligence, revived their spirits, animated their hopes, and was well fatisfied to share the hardships of the meanest foldier, whilst he kept in view the infinite fuperiority of his reward.

Advances towards Rome.

The wretched Julian had expected, and thought himself prepared, to dispute the empire with the governor of Syria; but in the invincible and rapid approach of the Pannonian legions, he faw his inevitable ruin. The hafty arrival of every messenger, increased his just apprehensions. He was successively informed, that Severus had passed the Alps; that the Italian cities, unwilling or unable to oppose his progress, had received him with the warmest professions of 30 Herodian, I. ii. p. 78. Severus was general only, has not confidered this transnube, either at Carnuntum, according to Spartianus (Hift. August. p. 65.), or else at Sabaria, according to Victor. Mr. Hume, in supposing that the birth and dignity of Severus were too much inferior to the Imperial crown, and that he marched into Italy as declared emperor on the banks of the Da- action with his usual accuracy (Essay on the original contract).

31 Velleius Paterculus, I. ii. c. 3. We must reckon the march from the nearest verge of Pannonia, and extend the fight of the city, as far as two hundred miles.

joy and duty; that the important place of Ravenna had furrendered CHAP. without refistance, and that the Hadriatic fleet was in the hands of the conqueror. The enemy was now within two hundred and fifty miles of Rome; and every moment diminished the narrow span of life and empire allotted to Julian.

He attempted, however, to prevent, or at least to protract, his Distress of ruin. He implored the venal faith of the Prætorians, filled the city with unavailing preparations for war, drew lines round the fuburbs, and even strengthened the fortifications of the palace; as if those last intrenchments could be defended without hope of relief against a victorious invader. Fear and shame prevented the guards from deferting his standard; but they trembled at the name of the Pannonian legions, commanded by an experienced general, and accustomed to vanquish the barbarians on the frozen Danube 32. They quitted, with a figh, the pleasures of the baths and theatres, to put on arms, whose use they had almost forgotten, and beneath the weight of which they were oppressed. The unpractised elephants, whose uncouth appearance, it was hoped, would strike terror into the army of the north, threw their unskilful riders; and the awkward evolutions of the marines, drawn from the fleet of Mifenum, were an object of ridicule to the populace; whilst the senate enjoyed, with fecret pleasure, the distress and weakness of the ufurper 33.

Every motion of Julian betrayed his trembling perplexity. He His uncerinfifted that Severus should be declared a public enemy by the senate. He intreated that the Pannonian general might be affociated to the empire. He fent public ambaffadors of confular rank to ne-

<sup>32</sup> This is not a puerile figure of rhetoric, p. 81. There is no furer proof of the milibut an allusion to a real fact recorded by tary skill of the Romans, than their first fur-Dion, l. lxxi. p. 1181. It probably hap- mounting the idle terror, and afterwards

Dion, l. lxxiii. p. 1233. Herodian, l. ii. war.

difdaining the dangerous use, of elephants in

CHAP. gociate with his rival; he dispatched private assassins to take away his life. He defigned that the Vestal virgins, and all the colleges of priefls, in their facerdotal habits, and bearing before them the facred pledges of the Roman religion, should advance, in solemn procession, to meet the Pannonian legions; and, at the same time, he vainly tried to interrogate, or to appeale, the fates, by magic ceremonies, and unlawful facrifices 34.

Is deferted by the Prætorians,

Severus, who dreaded neither his arms nor his enchantments, guarded himself from the only danger of secret conspiracy, by the faithful attendance of fix hundred chosen men, who never quitted his person or their cuirasses, either by night or by day, during the whole march. Advancing with a fleady and rapid course, he paffed, without difficulty, the defiles of the Apennine, received into his party the troops and ambaffadors fent to retard his progress, and made a fhort halt at Interamnia, about feventy miles from Rome. His victory was already secure; but the despair of the Prætorians might have rendered it bloody; and Severus had the laudable ambition of afcending the throne without drawing the fword 35. His emissaries, dispersed in the capital, assured the guards, that provided they would abandon their worthless prince, and the perpetrators of the murder of Pertinax, to the justice of the conqueror, he would no longer confider that melancholy event as the act of the whole body. The faithless Prætorians, whose refiftance was supported only by fullen obstinacy, gladly complied with the easy conditions, seized the greatest part of the assassins, and fignified to the fenate, that they no longer defended the cause of Julian. That affembly, convoked by the conful, unanimoufly acknowledged Severus as lawful emperor, decreed divine honours to

Molle, unknown to the better and more an-

Pertinax.

<sup>34</sup> Hift, August. p. 62, 63.

<sup>35</sup> Victor and Eutropius, viii. 17. mention cient writers.

<sup>2</sup> combat near the Milvian bridge, the Ponte

Pertinax, and pronounced a fentence of deposition and death against CHAP. his unfortunate fuccessor. Julian was conducted into a private apartment of the baths of the palace, and beheaded as a common criminal, after having purchased, with an immense treasure, an anxious and precarious reign of only fixty-fix days 16. The almost incredible fenate. expedition of Severus, who, in fo short a space of time, conducted a numerous army from the banks of the Danube to those of the Tyber, proves at once the plenty of provisions produced by agriculture and commerce, the goodness of the roads, the discipline of the legions, and the indolent subdued temper of the provinces 37.

and condemned and A. D. 193. June 2.

the Pratorian

The first cares of Severus were bestowed on two measures, the Disgrace of one dictated by policy, the other by decency; the revenge, and the guards. honours, due to the memory of Pertinax. Before the new emperor entered Rome, he issued his commands to the Prætorian guards, directing them to wait his arrival on a large plain near the city, without arms, but in the habits of ceremony, in which they were accustomed to attend their fovereign. He was obeyed by those haughty troops, whose contrition was the effect of their just terrors. A chosen part of the Illyrian army encompassed them with levelled spears. Incapable of flight or refistance, they expected their fate in filent consternation. Severus mounted the tribunal, sternly reproached them with perfidy and cowardice, difmissed them with ignominy from the trust which they had betrayed, despoiled them of their splendid ornaments, and banished them, on pain of death, to the distance of an hundred miles from the deduct fixteen, as Pertinax was murdered on the 28th of March, and Severus most probably elected on the 13th of April (see Hift. August. p. 65. and Tillemont Hist. des Empereurs, tom. iii. p. 393. Note 7.). We fion.

35 Dion, I. Ixxiii. p. 1240. Herodian, cannot allow less than ten days after his elec-1. ii. p. 83. Hift. August. p. 63.

tion, to put a numerous army in motion. 37 From these fixty-fix days, we must first Forty days remain for this rapid march, and as we may compute about eight hundred miles from Rome to the neighourhood of Vienna, the army of Severus marched twenty miles every day, without halt or intermif-capital.

CHAP. capital. During the transaction, another detachment had been fent to feize their arms, occupy their camp, and prevent the hafty consequences of their despair 18.

Funeral and apotheofis of Pertinax.

The funeral and confecration of Pertinax was next folemnized with every circumstance of fad magnificence 39. The senate, with a melancholy pleasure, performed the last rites to that excellent prince, whom they had loved, and still regretted. The concern of his fucceffor was probably lefs fincere. He esteemed the virtues of Pertinax, but those virtues would for ever have confined his ambition to a private flation. Severus pronounced his funeral oration with studied eloquence, inward satisfaction, and well acted forrow; and by this pious regard to his memory, convinced the credulous multitude that he alone was worthy to supply his place. Sensible, however, that arms, not ceremonies, must affert his claim to the empire, he left Rome at the end of thirty days, and, without fuffering himself to be clated by this easy victory, prepared to encounter his more formidable rivals.

Success of Severus against Niger, and against Al-

The uncommon abilities and fortune of Severus have induced an elegant historian to compare him with the first and greatest of the Cæfars 4°. The parallel is, at least, imperfect. Where shall we find, in the character of Severus, the commanding superiority of foul, the generous clemency, and the various genius, which could reconcile and unite the love of pleasure, the thirst of knowledge, and the fire of ambition 41? In one inftance only, they may be compared, with some degree of propriety, in the celerity of their mo-intention of Lucan, to exalt the character of Cæfar, yet the idea he gives of that hero, in the tenth book of the Pharfalia, where he defcribes him, at the fame time, making love to Cleopatra, fustaining a siege against the power of Egypt, and conversing with the fages of the country, is, in reality, the nobleft pa-

tions,

<sup>39</sup> Dion (I. lxxiv. p. 1241.). Herodian, 1. ii. p. 84. 39 Dion (l. lxxiv. p. 1244.), who affifted at the ceremony as a fenator, gives a most pompous description of it.

<sup>4</sup>º Herodian, l. iii. p. 112.

<sup>41</sup> Though it is not, most assuredly, the negyric.

tions, and their civil victories. In less than four years 42, Severus C H A P. fubdued the riches of the eaft, and the valour of the west. He vanquished two competitors of reputation and ability, and defeated 193-197. numerous armies, provided with weapons and discipline equal to his own. In that age, the art of fortification, and the principles of tactics, were well understood by all the Roman generals; and the constant superiority of Severus was that of an artist, who uses the fame inftruments with more skill and industry than his rivals. I shall not, however, enter into a minute narrative of these military operations; but as the two civil wars against Niger and against Albinus, were almost the same in their conduct, event, and consequences, I shall collect into one point of view, the most firiking circumflances, tending to develope the character of the conqueror, and the flate of the empire.

Falsehood and infincerity, unfuitable as they feem to the dignity Conduct of of public transactions, offend us with a less degrading idea of mean- wars. ness, than when they are found in the intercourse of private life, verus In the latter, they discover a want of courage; in the other, only a defect of power: and, as it is impossible for the most able statesmen to fubdue millions of followers and enemies by their own perfonal ftrength, the world, under the name of policy, feems to have granted them a very liberal indulgence of craft and diffimulation. Yet the arts of Severus cannot be justified by the most ample privileges of flate reason. He promised only to betray, he flattered only to ruin, and however he might occasionally bind himself by oaths and treaties, his confcience, obsequious to his interest, always released him from the inconvenient obligation 43.

If his two competitors, reconciled by their common danger, had towards advanced upon him without delay, perhaps Severus would have Niger;

42 Reckening from his election, April 19, 197. See Tillemont's Chronology. 13, 193, to the death of Albinus, February 43 Herodian, 1. ii. p. 85.

funk

CHAP. funk under their united effort. Had they even attacked him, at the fame time, with feparate views and feparate armies, the contest might have been long and doubtful. But they fell, fingly and fucceffively, an eafy prey to the arts as well as arms of their fubtle enemy, lulled into fecurity by the moderation of his professions, and overwhelmed by the rapidity of his action. He first marched against Niger, whose reputation and power he the most dreaded: but he declined any hostile declarations, suppressed the name of his antagonist, and only fignified to the senate and people, his intention of regulating the eaftern provinces. In private he spoke of Niger, his old friend and intended fucceffor 44, with the most affectionate regard, and highly applauded his generous defign of revenging the murder of Pertinax. To punish the vile usurper of the throne, was the duty of every Roman general. To perfevere in arms, and to refift a lawful emperor, acknowledged by the fenate, would alone render him criminal 45. The fons of Niger had fallen into his hands among the children of the provincial governors, detained at Rome as pledges for the loyalty of their parents 46. As long as the power of Niger inspired terror, or even respect, they were educated with the most tender care, with the children of Severus himself: but they were soon involved in their father's ruin, and removed, first by exile, and afterwards by death, from the eye of public compassion 47.

towards Albinus.

Whilft Severus was engaged in his eaftern war, he had reason to apprehend that the governor of Britain might pass the sea and <sup>41</sup> Whilft Severus was very dangeroufly ill, it was industriously given out, that he intended to appoint Niger and Albinus his fucceffors. As he could not be fincere with respect to both, he might not be fo with regard to either. Yet Severus carried his hypocrify fo far, as to profefs that intention in the memoirs of his own life.

<sup>45</sup> Hift. August. p. 65.

<sup>46</sup> This practice, invented by Commodus, proved very useful to Severus. He found, at Rome, the children of many of the principal adherents of his rivals; and he employed them more than once to intimidate, or feduce the

<sup>47</sup> Herodian, 1. iii. p. 96. Hift. August. p. 67, 68.

the Alps, occupy the vacant feat of empire, and oppose his return CHAP. with the authority of the fenate and the forces of the west. The ambiguous conduct of Albinus, in not affuming the Imperial title, left room for negociation. Forgetting, at once, his professions of patriotism, and the jealousy of sovereign power, he accepted the precarious rank of Cæfar, as a reward for his fatal neutrality. Till the first contest was decided, Severus treated the man whom he had doomed to destruction, with every mark of esteem and regard. Even in the letter, in which he announced his victory over Niger, he ftyles Albinus the brother of his foul and empire, fends him the affectionate falutations of his wife Julia, and his young family, and intreats him to preferve the armies and the republic faithful to their common interest. The messengers charged with this letter, were instructed to accost the Cæsar with respect, to defire a private audience, and to plunge their daggers into his heart 48. The conspiracy was discovered, and the too credulous Albinus, at length, passed over to the continent, and prepared for an unequal contest with his rival, who rushed upon him at the head of a veteran and victorious army.

The military labours of Severus feem inadequate to the import- Event of the ance of his conquests. Two engagements, the one near the Hellespont, the other in the narrow defiles of Cilicia, decided the fate of his Syrian competitor; and the troops of Europe afferted their ufual afcendant over the effeminate natives of Afia 49. The battle of Lyons, where one hundred and fifty thousand Romans 50 were engaged, was equally fatal to Albinus. The valour of the British army maintained, indeed, a sharp and doubtful contest, with the hardy discipline of the Illyrian legions. The same and person of rted this curious letter at full length. fius.

4) Confult the third book of Herodian, 50 Dion, l. lxxv. p. 1260.

VOL. I. U Severus

<sup>48</sup> Hift. August. p. 84. Spartianus has in- and the seventy-fourth book of Dion Casferted this curious letter at full length.

C H A P. Severus appeared, during a few moments, irrecoverably loft, till that warlike prince rallied his fainting troops, and led them on to a decifive victory 51. The war was finished by that memorable day.

decided by one or two battles.

The civil wars of modern Europe have been diffinguished, not only by the fierce animofity, but likewife by the obstinate perseverance, of the contending factions. They have generally been juftified by fome principle, or, at leaft, coloured by fome pretext, of religion, freedom, or loyalty. The leaders were nobles of independent property and hereditary influence. The troops fought like men interested in the decision of the quarrel; and as military spirit and party zeal were strongly diffused throughout the whole community, a vanquished chief was immediately supplied with new adherents, eager to shed their blood in the same cause. But the Romans, after the fall of the republic, combated only for the choice of mafters. Under the flandard of a popular candidate for empire, a few enlifted from affection, fome from fear, many from interest, none from principle. The legions, uninflamed by party zeal, were allured into civil war by liberal donatives, and still more liberal promifes. A defeat, by difabling the chief from the performance of his engagements, diffolved the mercenary allegiance of his followers; and left them to confult their own fafety, by a timely defertion of an unfuccefsful cause. It was of little moment to the provinces, under whose name they were oppressed or governed; they were driven by the impulsion of the present power, and as foon as that power yielded to a fuperior force, they hastened to implore the clemency of the conqueror, who, as he had an immense debt to discharge, was obliged to sacrifice the most guilty countries to the avarice of his foldiers. In the vast extent of the

<sup>51</sup> Dion, l. lxxv. p. 1261. Herodian, l. iii. four leagues from Lyons. See Tillemont, p. 110. Hift. August. p. 68. The battle tom. iii. p. 406, Note 18. was fought in the plain of Trevoux, three or Roman empire there were few fortified cities, capable of protecting CHAP. a routed army; nor was there any person, or family, or order of men, whose natural interest, unsupported by the powers of government, was capable of restoring the cause of a finking party 52.

Yet, in the contest between Niger and Severus, a fingle city deserves Siege of an honourable exception. As Byzantium was one of the greatest paffages from Europe into Afia, it had been provided with a strong garrison, and a fleet of five hundred vessels was anchored in the harbour 53. The impetuofity of Severus disappointed this prudent scheme of defence; he left to his generals the siege of Byzantium, forced the less guarded passage of the Hellespont, and, impatient of a meaner enemy, pressed forward to encounter his rival. Byzantium, attacked by a numerous and increasing army, and afterwards by the whole naval power of the empire, sustained a siege of three years, and remained faithful to the name and memory of Niger. The citizens and foldiers (we know not from what cause) were animated with equal fury; feveral of the principal officers of Niger, who despaired of, or who disdained, a pardon, had thrown themselves into this last refuge: the fortifications were esteemed impregnable, and, in the defence of the place, a celebrated engineer displayed all the mechanic powers known to the ancients 54. Byzantium, at length, furrendered to famine. The magistrates and foldiers were put to the fword, the walls demolished, the privileges suppressed, and the destined capital of the east subsisted only as an open village, subject to the insulting jurisdiction of Perinthus. The historian Dion, who had admired the flourishing, and lamented the desolate, state of Byzantium, ac-deur, et la Decadence des Romains, c. xii.

 $U_2$

<sup>54</sup> The engineer's name was Prifcus. His tom. i. p. 76.

<sup>52</sup> Montesquieu Considerations sur la Gran- skill saved his life, and he was taken into the fervice of the conqueror. For the particular 51 Most of these, as may be supposed, were facts of the siege consult Dion Cassius (1. 1xxv. fmall open veffels, some, however, were gal- p. 1251.), and Herodian (l. iii. p. 95.): for lies of two, and a few of three ranks of the theory of it, the fanciful chevalier de Folard may be looked into. See Polybe,

C H A P. cufed the revenge of Severus, for depriving the Roman people of the strongest bulwark against the barbarians of Pontus and Asia 55. The truth of this observation was but too well justified in the fucceeding age, when the Gothic fleets covered the Euxine, and passed through the undefended Bosphorus into the centre of the Mediterranean.

Deaths of Cruel confequences of the civil wars.

Both Niger and Albinus were discovered and put to death in their flight from the field of battle. Their fate excited neither furprise nor compassion. They had staked their lives against the chance of empire, and fuffered what they would have inflicted; nor did Severus claim the arrogant superiority of suffering his rivals to live in a private station. But his unforgiving temper, stimulated by avarice, indulged a spirit of revenge, where there was no room for apprehension. The most considerable of the provincials, who, without any diflike to the fortunate candidate, had obeyed the governor, under whose authority they were accidentally placed, were punished by death, exile, and especially by the confiscation of their estates. Many cities of the east were stript of their ancient honours, and obliged to pay, into the treasury of Severus, four times the amount of the sums contributed by them for the fervice of Niger 56.

Animofity of Severus against the fenate.

Till the final decifion of the war, the cruelty of Severus was, in fome measure, restrained by the uncertainty of the event, and his pretended reverence for the fenate. The head of Albinus, accompanied with a menacing letter, announced to the Romans, that he was refolved to spare none of the adherents of his unfortunate competitors. He was irritated by the just suspicion, that he had never possessed the affections of the senate, and he concealed his old malevolence under the recent discovery of some treasonable correspond- CHAP. ences. Thirty-five fenators, however, accused of having favoured the party of Albinus, he freely pardoned; and, by his subsequent behaviour, endeavoured to convince them, that he had forgotten, as well as forgiven, their supposed offences. But, at the same time, he condemned forty-one 57 other fenators, whose names history has recorded; their wives, children, and clients, attended them in death, and the noblest provincials of Spain and Gaul were involved in the same ruin. Such rigid justice, for so he termed it, was, in the opinion of Severus, the only conduct capable of enfuring peace to the people, or flability to the prince; and he condescended slightly to lament, that, to be mild, it was necessary that he should first be cruel 58.

<sup>55</sup> Notwithstanding the authority of Spar- zantium, many years after the death of Setianus and fome modern Greeks, we may be verus, lay in ruins. affured, from Dion and Herodian, that By- 56 Dion, I. lxxiv. p. 1250.

that of his people. Their numbers, their wealth, their order, and his governtheir fecurity, are the best and only foundations of his real greatness; and were he totally devoid of virtue, prudence might fupply its place, and would dictate the fame rule of conduct. Severus confidered the Roman empire as his property, and had no fooner fecured the possession, than he bestowed his care on the cultivation and improvement, of fo valuable an acquifition. Salutary laws, executed with inflexible firmness, soon corrected most of the abuses with which, fince the death of Marcus, every part of the government had been infected. In the administration of justice, the judgements of the emperor were characterized by attention, difcern-ment, and impartiality; and whenever he deviated from the strict line of equity, it was generally in favour of the poor and oppreffed; not fo much indeed from any fense of humanity, as from the natural

The true interest of an absolute monarch generally coincides with The wisdom and justice of ment.

57 Dion (1. 1xxv. p. 1264.); only 29 fe- Herodian (1. iii. p. 115.) speaks in general

propenfity

nators are mentioned by him, but 41 are of the cruelties of Severus. named in the Augustan History, p. 69. among whom were fix of the name of Pefcennius.

<sup>58</sup> Aurelius Victor.

General peace and prosperity.

CHAP. propenfity of a despot, to humble the pride of greatness, and to fink all his fubjects to the fame common level of absolute dependence. His expensive taste for building, magnificent shows, and above all a constant and liberal distribution of corn and provisions, were the furest means of captivating the affection of the Roman people 59. The misfortunes of civil discord were obliterated. The calm of peace and prosperity was once more experienced in the provinces, and many cities, restored by the muniscence of Severus, affumed the title of his colonies, and attefled by public monuments their gratitude and felicity 60. The fame of the Roman arms was revived by that warlike and fuccessful emperor 61, and he boasted with a just pride, that, having received the empire oppressed with foreign and domestic wars, he left it established in profound, univerfal, and honourable peace 62.

Relaxation of military difcipline.

Although the wounds of civil war appeared completely healed, its mortal poison still lurked in the vitals of the constitution. Severus possessed a considerable share of vigour and ability; but the daring foul of the first Cæsar, or the deep policy of Augustus, were scarcely equal to the task of curbing the insolence of the victorious legions. By gratitude, by misguided policy, by seeming necessity, Severus was induced to relax the nerves of discipline 61. The vanity of his foldiers was flattered with the honour of wearing gold rings; their ease was indulged in the permission of living with their wives in the 59 Dion, I. lxxvi. p. 1272. Hift. August. Icrs Spon and Wheeler, Shaw, Pocock, &c. p. 67. Severus celebrated the fecular games with extraordinary magnificence, and he left in the public granaries a provision of corn for feven years, at the rate of 75,000 modii, or about 2500 quarters per day. I am perfuaded, that the granaries of Severus were fupplied for a long term, but I am not less perfuaded, that policy on one hand, and admiration on the other, magnified the hoard far beyond its true contents.

60 See Spanheim's treatise of ancient medals, the infcriptions, and our learned travelwho, in Africa, Greece, and Afia, have found more monuments of Severue, than of any other Roman emperor whatfoever.

- 61 He carried his victorious arms to Seleucia and Ctefiphon, the capitals of the Parthian monarchy. I shall have occasion to mention this war in its proper place.
- 62 Etiam in Britannis, was his own just and emphatic expression. Hist. August. 73.
- 63 Herodian, 1. iii. p. 115. Hift. August. p. 68.

idleness

idleness of quarters. He increased their pay beyond the example CHAP. of former times, and taught them to expect, and foon to claim, extraordinary donatives on every public occasion of danger or feftivity. Elated by fuccess, enervated by luxury, and raised above the level of fubjects by their dangerous privileges 64, they foon became incapable of military fatigue, oppressive to the country, and impatient of a just subordination. Their officers afferted the superiority of rank by a more profuse and elegant luxury. There is still extant a letter of Severus, lamenting the licentious state of the army, and exhorting one of his generals to begin the necessary reformation from the tribunes themselves; fince, as he justly observes, the officer who has forfeited the efteem, will never command the obedience, of his foldiers 65. Had the emperor pursued the train of reflection, he would have discovered, that the primary cause of this general corruption might be ascribed, not indeed to the example, but to the pernicious indulgence, however, of the commander in chief.

The Prætorians, who murdered their emperor and fold the em- New estapire, had received the just punishment of their treason; but the the Pratorian necessary, though dangerous, institution of guards was foon reflored on a new model by Severus, and increased to four times the ancient number 66. Formerly these troops had been recruited in Italy; and as the adjacent provinces gradually imbibed the fofter manners of Rome, the levies were extended to Macedonia, Noricum, and Spain. In the room of these elegant troops, better adapted to the pomp of courts than to the uses of war, it was established by Severus, that from all the legions of the frontiers, the foldiers most diffinguished for strength, valour, and fidelity, should be occasionally

blishment of

<sup>64</sup> Upon the infolence and privileges of the that it was composed under the reign of Sefoldiers, the 16th fatire, falfely afcribed to verus or that of his fon. Juvenal, may be confulted; the ftyle and circumflances of it would induce me to believe,

<sup>65</sup> Hift. August. p. 73. 66 Herodian, I. iii. p. 131.

C H A P. draughted; and promoted, as an honour and reward, into the more eligible fervice of the guards 67. By this new inflitution, the Italian youth were diverted from the exercise of arms, and the capital was terrified by the strange aspect and manners of a multitude of barbarians. But Severus flattered himself, that the legions would confider these chosen Prætorians as the representatives of the whole military order; and that the prefent aid of fifty thousand men, superior in arms and appointments to any force that could be brought into the field against them, would for ever crush the hopes of rebellion, and fecure the empire to himfelf and his posterity.

The office of Pretorian Præfect.

The command of these favoured and formidable troops soon became the first office of the empire. As the government degenerated into military despotism, the Prætorian præfect, who in his origin had been a fimple captain of the guards, was placed, not only at the head of the army, but of the finances, and even of the law. In every department of administration, he represented the person, and exercised the authority, of the emperor. The first præfect who enjoyed and abused this immense power was Plautianus, the favourite minister of Severus. His reign lasted above ten years, till the marriage of his daughter with the eldest fon of the emperor, which feemed to affure his fortune, proved the occasion of his ruin 68. The animofities of the palace, by irritating the ambition and alarming the fears of Plautianus, threatened to produce a revolution, and obliged the emperor, who still loved him, to confent with reluctance to his death 69. After the fall of Plautianus, an eminent lawyer, eunuchs worthy of an Eastern queen. Dion. l. lxxvi. p. 1271.

<sup>67</sup> Dion, I. lxxiv. p. 1243.

<sup>68</sup> One of his most daring and wanton acts of power, was the castration of an hundred free Romans, some of them married men, and even fathers of families; merely that his daughter, on her marriage with the young emperor, might be attended by a train of the celebrated Papinian, was appointed to execute the motley office C H A P. of Prætorian præfect.

<sup>69</sup> Dion, 1. lxxvi. p. 1274. Herodian, 1. iii. p. 122. 129. The grammarian of Alexandria feems, as it is not unufual, much better acquainted with this mysterious transaction, and more affured of the guilt of Plautianus, than the Roman senator ventures to be.

Till the reign of Severus, the virtue and even the good fense of The senate the emperors had been diftinguished by their zeal or affected reve- military defrence for the fenate, and by a tender regard to the nice frame of civil policy inflituted by Augustus. But the youth of Severus had been trained in the implicit obedience of camps, and his riper years spent in the despotism of military command. His haughty and inflexible fpirit could not discover, or would not acknowledge, the advantage of preferving an intermediate power, however imaginary, between the emperor and the army. He disdained to profess himself the fervant of an affembly that detefted his person and trembled at his frown; he issued his commands, where his request would have proved as effectual; assumed the conduct and style of a sovereign and a conqueror, and exercised, without disguise, the whole legislative oppressed by

The victory over the fenate was eafy and inglorious. Every eye New maxims and every passion were directed to the supreme magistrate, who post- rial prerogafessed the arms and treasure of the state; whilst the senate, neither elected by the people, nor guarded by military force, nor animated by public spirit, rested its declining authority on the frail and crumbling basis of ancient opinion. The fine theory of a republic infenfibly vanished, and made way for the more natural and subflantial feelings of monarchy. As the freedom and honours of Rome were fucceffively communicated to the provinces, in which the old government had been either unknown, or was remembered with abhorrence, the tradition of republican maxims was gradually obliterated. The Greek historians of the age of the Antonines 7° obferve, with a malicious pleasure, that although the sovereign of Rome, in compliance with an obsolete prejudice, abstained from the name 7º Appian in Proem.

VOL. I.

as well as the executive power.

X

C H A P. of king, he possessed the full measure of regal power. In the reign of Severus, the senate was filled with polished and eloquent slaves from the eastern provinces, who justified personal flattery by speculative principles of fervitude. These new advocates of prerogative were heard with pleasure by the court, and with patience by the people, when they inculcated the duty of paffive obedience, and descanted on the inevitable mischiefs of freedom. The lawyers and the historians concurred in teaching, that the Imperial authority was held, not by the delegated commission, but by the irrevocable refignation of the fenate; that the emperor was freed from the restraint of civil laws, could command by his arbitrary will the lives and fortunes of his subjects, and might dispose of the empire as of his private patrimony 71. The most eminent of the civil lawyers, and particularly Papinian, Paulus, and Ulpian, flourished under the house of Severus; and the Roman juriforudence having closely united itself with the fystem of monarchy, was supposed to have attained its full maturity and perfection.

> The contemporaries of Severus, in the enjoyment of the peace and glory of his reign, forgave the cruelties by which it had been introduced. Posterity, who experienced the fatal effects of his maxims and example, juftly confidered him as the principal author of the decline of the Roman empire.

<sup>71</sup> Dion Cassius feems to have written with shew how assiduously the lawyers, on their no other view, than to form these opinions side, laboured in the cause of prerogative. into an historical fystem. The Pandects will

CHAP. VI.

The death of Severus.—Tyranny of Caracalla.—Usurpation of Macrinus. - Follies of Elagabalus. - Virtues of Alexander Severus .- Licentiousness of the army .- General state of the Roman Finances.

THE affent to greatness, however sleep and dangerous, may entertain an active spirit with the consciousness and exercise of its own powers; but the possession of a throne could never yet Greatness afford a lafting fatisfaction to an ambitious mind. This melancholy truth was felt and acknowledged by Severus. Fortune and merit had, from an humble station, elevated him to the first place among mankind. " He had been all things, as he faid himself, and " all was of little value '." Distracted with the care, not of acquiring, but of preserving an empire, oppressed with age and infirmities, careless of fame 2, and satiated with power, all his prospects of life were closed. The defire of perpetuating the greatness of his family, was the only remaining wish of his ambition and paternal tendernefs.

Like most of the Africans, Severus was passionately addicted to His wife the the vain studies of magic and divination, deeply versed in the interpretation of dreams and omens, and perfectly acquainted with the fcience of judicial aftrology; which, in almost every age, except the present, has maintained its dominion over the mind of man. He

Hift. August. p. 71. "Omnia fui et 2 Dion Cassius, I, Ixxvi. p. 1284. nihil expedit."

 $^{
m C}$  II  $^{
m A}$  P. had loft his first wife, whilst he was governor of the Lionnese Gaul '. In the choice of a fecond, he fought only to connect himfelf with fome favourite of fortune; and as foon as he had discovered that a young lady of Emefa in Syria had a royal nativity, he folicited, and obtained her hand 4. Julia Domna (for that was her name) deferved all that the stars could promise her. She possessed, even in an advanced age, the attractions of beauty's, and united to a lively imagination, a firmness of mind, and strength of judgment, seldom beflowed on her fex. Her amiable qualities never made any deep impression on the dark and jealous temper of her husband; but in her fon's reign, the administered the principal affairs of the empire, with a prudence, that supported his authority; and with a moderation, that fometimes corrected his wild extravagancies 6. Julia applied herfelf to letters and philosophy, with some success, and with the most splendid reputation. She was the patroness of every art, and the friend of every man of genius?. The grateful flattery of the learned has celebrated her virtues; but, if we may credit the feandal of ancient history, chastity was very far from being the most confpicuous virtue of the empress Julia 8.

Their two fons, Cara-

Two fons, Caracalla 9 and Geta, were the fruit of this marriage, and the destined heirs of the empire. The fond hopes of the father,

- 3 About the year 186, M. de Tillemont is miserably embarrassed with a passage of Dion, in which the empress Faustina, who died in the year 175, is introduced as having contributed to the marriage of Severus and Julia (l. lxxiv. p. 1243.). The learned compiler forgot, that Dion is relating, not a real fact, but a dream of Severus; and dreams are circumferibed to no limits of time or space. Did M. de Tillemont imagine that marriages were confummated in the temple of Venus at Rome? Hift. des Empcreurs, tom. iii. p. 389. Note 6.
  - 4 Hift. August. p. 65. 5 Hift. August. p. 85.
  - Dion Caffius, 1. lxxvii. p. 1304. 1314.

7 See a Differtation of Menage, at the end of his edition of Diogenes Laertius, de Faminis Philosophis. S Dion, l. lxxvi. p. 1285. Aurelius Vic-

9 Bassianus was his first name, as it had been that of his maternal grandfather. During his reign he assumed the appellation of Antoninus, which is employed by lawyers and ancient historians. After his death, the public indignation loaded him with the nick-names of Tarantus and Caracalla. The first was borrowed from a celebrated Gladiator, the fecond from a long Gallic gown which he diftributed to the people of Rome.

and

and of the Roman world, were foon disappointed by these vain CHAP. youths, who displayed the indolent security of hereditary princes; and a prefumption that fortune would fupply the place of merit and application. Without any emulation of virtue or talents, they difcovered, almost from their infancy, a fixed and implacable antipathy for each other. Their aversion, confirmed by years, and fomented Their mutual by the arts of their interested favourites, broke out in childish, and each other. gradually in more ferious, competitions; and at length divided the theatre, the circus, and the court, into two factions: actuated by the hopes and fears of their respective leaders. The prudent emperor endeavoured, by every expedient of advice and authority, to allay this growing animofity. The unhappy discord of his fons clouded all his prospects, and threatened to overturn a throne raised with fo much labour, cemented with fo much blood, and guarded with every defence of arms and treasure. With an impartial hand he maintained between them an exact balance of favour, conferred on both the rank of Augustus, with the revered name of Antoninus: and for the first time the Roman world beheld three emperors ". Yet Three empeeven this equal conduct ferved only to inflame the contest, whilst the fierce Caracalla afferted the right of primogeniture, and the milder Geta courted the affections of the people and the foldiers. In the anguish of a disappointed father, Severus foretold, that the weaker of his fons would fall a facrifice to the stronger; who, in his turn, would be ruined by his own vices ".

In these circumstances the intelligence of a war in Britain, and of The Caledoan invalion of the province by the barbarians of the North, was re- A. D. 208. ceived with pleasure by Severus. Though the vigilance of his lieutenams might have been fufficient to repel the distant enemy.

<sup>10</sup> The elevation of Caracalla is fixed by "Herodian, I. iii. p. 130. The lives of the accurate M. de Tillemont to the year 198; Caracalla and Geta, in the Augustan Hifthe affociation of Geta, to the year 208. tory.

CHAP, he refolved to embrace the honourable pretext of withdrawing his fons from the luxury of Rome, which enervated their minds and irritated their passions; and of inuring their youth to the toils of war and government. Notwithstanding his advanced age (for he was above three-score), and his gout, which obliged him to be carried in a litter, he transported himself in person into that remote island, attended by his two fons, his whole court, and a formidable army. He immediately passed the walls of Hadrian and Antoninus, and entered the enemy's country, with a defign of completing the long attempted conquest of Britain. He penetrated to the northern extremity of the island, without meeting an enemy. But the concealed ambuscades of the Caledonians, who hung unseen on the rear and flanks of his army, the coldness of the climate, and the feverity of a winter march across the hills and morasses of Scotland, are reported to have cost the Romans above fifty thousand men. The Caledonians at length yielded to the powerful and obflinate attack, fued for peace, and furrendered a part of their arms, and a large tract of territory. But their apparent fubmission lasted no longer than the prefent terror. As foon as the Roman legions had retired, they refumed their hostile independence. Their restless fpirit provoked Severus to fend a new army into Caledonia, with the most bloody orders, not to subdue but to extirpate the natives. They were faved by the death of their haughty enemy 12.

Fingal and his heroes.

This Caledonian war, neither marked by decifive events, nor attended with any important confequences, would ill deferve our attention; but it is supposed, not without a considerable degree of probability, that the invalion of Severus is connected with the most thining period of the British history or fable. Fingal, whose fame, with that of his heroes and bards, has been revived in our language by a recent publication, is faid to have commanded the Caledonians at that memorable juncture, to have eluded the power of Severus, and C H A P. to have obtained a figual victory on the banks of the Carun, in which the fon of the King of the World, Caracul, fled from his arms-along the fields of his pride '3. Something of a doubtful mist still hangs over these Highland traditions; nor can it be entirely dispelled by the most ingenious researches of modern criticism 14: but if we could, Contrast of with fafety, indulge the pleafing supposition that Fingal lived, and the Caledonians and the that Offian fung, the firiking contrast of the fituation and manners Romans. of the contending nations might amuse a philosophic mind. The parallel would be little to the advantage of the more civilized people, if we compared the unrelenting revenge of Severus with the generous elemency of Fingal; the timid and brutal cruelty of Caracalla, with the bravery, the tenderness, the elegant genius of Ossian; the mercenary chiefs who, from motives of fear or interest, ferved under the Imperial standard, with the freeborn warriors who started to arms at the voice of the king of Morven; if, in a word, we contemplated the untutored Caledonians, glowing with the warm virtues of nature, and the degenerate Romans, polluted with the mean vices of wealth and flavery.

<sup>12</sup> Dion, I. lxxvi. p. 1280, &c. Herodian, I. iii. p. 132, &c.

The declining health and last illness of Severus inflamed the wild Ambition of ambition and black passions of Caracalla's foul. Impatient of any delay or division of empire, he attempted, more than once, to fhorten the fmall remainder of his father's days, and endeavoured, but without fuccess, to excite a mutiny among the troops 15. The

Caracalla.

<sup>13</sup> Offian's Poems, vol. i. p. 175.

<sup>14</sup> That the Caracul of Offian is the Caracalla of the Roman history, is, perhaps, the only point of British antiquity, in which Mr. Macpherson and Mr. Whitaker are of the fame opinion; and yet the opinion is not without difficulty. In the Caledonian war, the fon of Severus was known only by the appellation of Antoninus; and it may feem flrange, that the Highland bard should defcribe him by a nick-name, invented four years afterwards, fcarcely used by the Romans till after the death of that emperor, and feldom employed by the most ancient historians. See Dion, l. lxxvii. p. 1317. Hist. August. p. 89. Aurel. Victor. Euseb. in Chron. ad ann. 214.

<sup>15</sup> Dion, I. lxxvi. p. 1282. Hift. August. p. 71. Aurel, Victor.

accession of his two fons.

A. D. 211. 4thFebruary.

CHAP, old emperor had often cenfured the mifguided lenity of Marcus, who, by a fingle act of juffice, might have faved the Romans from the tyranny of his worthless fon. Placed in the same situation, he experienced how eafily the rigour of a judge diffolves away in the tenderness of a parent. He deliberated, he threatened, but he could not punish; and this last and only instance of mercy, was more fa-Death of Se- tal to the empire than a long feries of cruelty 16. 'The disorder of his mind irritated the pains of his body; he wished impatiently for death, and hastened the instant of it by his impatience. He expired at York in the fixty-fifth year of his life, and in the eighteenth of a glorious and fuccessful reign. In his last moments he recommended concord to his fons, and his fons to the army. The falutary advice never reached the heart, or even the understanding, of the impetuous youths; but the more obedient troops, mindful of their oath of allegiance, and of the authority of their deceased master, refisted the folicitations of Caracalla, and proclaimed both brothers emperors of Rome. The new princes foon left the Caledonians in peace, returned to the capital, celebrated their father's funeral with divine honours, and were cheerfully acknowledged as lawful fovereigns by the fenate, the people, and the provinces. Some preeminence of rank feems to have been allowed to the elder brother; but they both administered the empire with equal and independent power 17.

Jealoufy and hatred of the two emperors.

Such a divided form of government would have proved a fource of discord between the most affectionate brothers. It was impossible that it could long fubfift between two implacable enemies, who neither defired nor could trust a reconciliation. It was visible that one only could reign, and that the other must fall; and each of them judging of his rival's defigns by his own, guarded his life with the most

<sup>16</sup> Dion, I. Ixxvi. p. 1283. Hift. August. 1- Dion, I. lxxvi. p. 1284. 'Herodian, p. 89. 1. iii. p. 135.

most jealous vigilance from the repeated attacks of poison or the CHAP. fword. Their rapid journey through Gaul and Italy, during which they never eat at the same table, or slept in the same house, difplayed to the provinces the odious spectacle of fraternal discord. On their arrival at Rome, they immediately divided the vaft extent of the Imperial palace 18. No communication was allowed between their apartments; the doors and passages were diligently fortified, and guards posted and relieved with the same strictness as in a befieged place. The emperors met only in public, in the prefence of their afflicted mother; and each furrounded by a numerous train of armed followers. Even on these occasions of ceremony, the diffimulation of courts could ill difguife the rancour of their bearts 19

This latent civil war already distracted the whole government, Fruitless newhen a scheme was suggested that seemed of mutual benefit to the dividing the hostile brothers. It was proposed, that fince it was impossible to tween them. reconcile their minds, they should separate their interest, and divide the empire between them. The conditions of the treaty were already drawn with fome accuracy. It was agreed, that Caracalla, as the elder brother, should remain in possession of Europe and the western of Herodian (l. iv. p. 139), who, on this Efqueline, the rival brothers were feparated occasion, represents the Imperial palace, as from each other by the distance of several equal in extent to the rest of Rome. The whole region of the Palatine Mount on which filled by the Imperial gardens of Salluft, of it was built, occupied, at most, a circum- Lucullus, of Agrippa, of Domitian, of Caius, ference of eleven or twelve thousand feet &c. all skirting round the city and all con-(See the Notitia and Victor, in Nardini's nected with each other, and with the palace, Roma Antica). But we should recollect that by bridges thrown over the Tyber and the the opulent fenators had almost surrounded the city with their extensive gardens and suburb palaces, the greatest part of which had been gradually conficated by the emperors. If Geta refided in the gardens that bore his name on the Janiculum; and if Caracalla

18 Mr. Hume is justly surprised at a passage inhabited the gardens of Mecanas on the miles; and yet the intermediate space was freets. But this explanation of Herodian would require, though it ill deserves, a particular differtation, illustrated by a map of ancient Rome.

19 Herodian, 1. iv. p. 139.

CHAP. Africa; and that he should relinquish the sovereignty of Asia and Egypt to Geta, who might fix his refidence at Alexandria or Antioch, cities little inferior to Rome itself in wealth and greatness; that numerous armies should be constantly encamped on either side of the Thracian Bosphorus, to guard the frontiers of the rival monarchies; and that the fenators of European extraction should acknowledge the fovereign of Rome, whilst the natives of Asia followed the emperor of the East. The tears of the empress Julia interrupted the negociation, the first idea of which had filled every Roman breast with surprise and indignation. The mighty mass of conquest was so intimately united by the hand of time and policy, that it required the most forcible violence to rend it asunder. The Romans had reason to dread, that the disjointed members would foon be reduced by a civil war under the dominion of one master; but if the feparation was permanent, the division of the provinces must terminate in the diffolution of an empire whose unity had hitherto remained inviolate 20.

Murder of Geta. A. D. 212. 27th February.

Had the treaty been carried into execution, the fovereign of Europe might foon have been the conqueror of Asia; but Caracalla obtained an easier though a more guilty victory. He artfully listened to his mother's entreaties, and confented to meet his brother in her apartment, on terms of peace and reconciliation. In the midft of their conversation, some centurions, who had contrived to conceal themfelves, rushed with drawn swords upon the unfortunate Geta. His diffracted mother strove to protect him in her arms; but, in the unavailing flruggle, she was wounded in the hand, and covered with the blood of her younger fon, while she saw the elder animating and affifting "the fury of the affaffins. As foon as the deed was per-21 Caracalla confecrated, in the temple of 1. lxxvii. p. 1307. Seraris, the fword, with which, as he petrated,

<sup>2</sup> Flerodian, l. iv. p. 144.

boasted, he had slain his brother Geta. Dion, petrated, Caracalla, with hasty steps and horror in his countenance, CII A P. ran towards the Prætorian camp as his only refuge, and threw himfelf on the ground before the statues of the tutelar deities 22. The foldiers attempted to raife and comfort him. In broken and difordered words he informed them of his imminent danger and fortunate escape; infinuating that he had prevented the designs of his enemy, and declared his resolution to live and die with his faithful troops. Geta had been the favourite of the foldiers; but complaint was useless, revenge was dangerous, and they still reverenced the fon of Severus. Their discontent died away in idle murmurs, and Caracalla foon convinced them of the justice of his cause, by diffributing in one lavish donative the accumulated treasures of his father's reign 23. The real fentiments of the foldiers alone were of importance to his power or fafety. Their declaration in his favour, commanded the dutiful professions of the senate. The obsequious affembly was always prepared to ratify the decision of fortune; but as Caracalla wished to assuage the first emotions of public indignation, the name of Geta was mentioned with decency, and he received the funeral honours of a Roman emperor 22. Posterity, in pity to his misfortune, has cast a veil over his vices. We confider that young prince as the innocent victim of his brother's ambition. without recollecting that he himself wanted power, rather than inclination, to confummate the same attempts of revenge and murder.

The crime went not unpunished. Neither business, nor pleasure, Remorfe and nor flattery, could defend Caracalla from the stings of a guilty con- Caracalla.

<sup>22</sup> Herodian, l. iv. p. 147. In every Roman camp there was a fmall chapel near the head-quarters, in which the statues of the tu- p. 1289. telar deities were preferved and adored; and we may remark, that the eagles, and other divus, dum non fit vivus, faid his brother. military enfigns, were in the first rank of these Hist. August. p. 91. Some marks of Gedeities: an excellent inflitution, which con- ta's confecration are flill found upon mefirmed discipline by the fanction of religion. dals.

See Lipfius de Militia Romana, iv. 5. v. 2. 23 Herodian, l. iv. p. 148. Dion, l. lxxvii.

<sup>24</sup> Geta was placed among the gods. Sit CHAP. science; and he confessed, in the anguish of a tortured mind, that his difordered fancy often beheld the angry forms of his father and his brother rifing into life, to threaten and upbraid him 25. The consciousness of his crime should have induced him to convince mankind, by the virtues of his reign, that the bloody deed had been the involuntary effect of fatal necessity. But the repentance of Caracalla only prompted him to remove from the world whatever could remind him of his guilt, or recal the memory of his murdered brother. On his return from the fenate to the palace, he found his mother in the company of feveral noble matrons, weeping over the untimely fate of her younger fon. The jealous emperor threatened them with inftant death; the fentence was executed against Fadilla, the last remaining daughter of the emperor Marcus; and even the afflicted Julia was obliged to filence her lamentations, to suppress her fighs, and to receive the affaffin with fmiles of joy and approbation. It was computed that, under the vague appellation of the friends of Geta, above twenty thousand persons of both sexes suffered death. His guards and freedmen, the ministers of his ferious bufiness, and the companions of his looser hours, those who by his interest had been promoted to any commands in the army or provinces, with the long-connected chain of their dependants, were included in the profcription; which endeavoured to reach every one who had maintained the smallest correspondence with Geta, who lamented his death, or who even mentioned his name 26. Helvius Pertinax, fon to the prince of that name, loft his life by an unfeafonable witticism 27. It was a sufficient crime of Thrasea Priscus, to be descended from a family in which the love of liberty seemed an hereditary quality 28. The particular causes of calumny and suspicion were at length exhausted; and when a senator was accused of being a fecret enemy to the government, the emperor was fatisfied with the general proof that he was a man of property and virtue. From this well-grounded principle he frequently drew the most bloody inferences.

<sup>25</sup> Dion, l. lxxvii. p. 1307.

were confiscated.

<sup>27</sup> Caracalla had assumed the names of 26 Dion, I. Ixxvii. p. 1290. Herodian, feveral conquered nations; Pertinax ob-1. iv. p. 150. Dion (p. 1298) fays, that the ferved, that the name of Geticus (he had comic poets no longer durst employ the name obtained fome advantage of the Goths or of Geta in their plays, and that the estates of Getae) would be a proper addition to Parthose who mentioned it in their testaments, thicus, Alemannicus, &c. Hist. August. p. 89.

CHAP.

The execution of fo many innocent citizens was bewailed by the Death of Pafecret tears of their friends and families. The death of Papinian, the Prætorian præfect, was lamented as a public calamity. During the last seven years of Severus, he had exercised the most important office of the state, and, by his falutary influence, guided the emperor's steps in the paths of justice and moderation. In full assurance of his virtue and abilities, Severus, on his death-bed, had conjured him to watch over the prosperity and union of the Imperial family 29. The honest labours of Papinian served only to inflame the hatred which Caracalla had already conceived against his father's minister. After the murder of Geta, the præfect was commanded to exert the powers of his skill and eloquence in a studied apology for that atrocious deed. The philosophic Seneca had condescended to compose a similar epiftle to the fenate, in the name of the fon and affaffin of Agrippina "; " That it was easier to commit than to justify a parricide," was the glorious reply of Papinian 31, who did not hefitate between the loss of life and that of honour. Such intrepid virtue, which had escaped pure and unfullied from the intrigues of courts, the habits of business, and the arts of his profession, reslects more lustre on the memory of Papinian, than all his great employments, his

<sup>28</sup> Dion, 1. lxxvii. p. 1291. He was probably descended from Helvidius Priscus, and Thrafea Pætus, those patriots whose firm, but useless and unseasonable, virtue has been immortalized by Tacitus.

<sup>29</sup> It is faid, that Papinian was himfelf a relation of the empress Julia.

<sup>30</sup> Tacit. Annal. xiv. ii.

<sup>31</sup> Hift. August. p. 88.

C H A P. numerous writings, and the fuperior reputation as a lawyer, which he has preferved through every age of the Roman jurisprudence "2. It had hitherto been the peculiar felicity of the Romans, and in the worst of times their consolation, that the virtue of the emperors was active, and their vice indolent. Augustus, Trajan, Hadrian, and Marcus, vifited their extensive dominions in person, and

His tyranny over the whole em-> their progress was marked by acts of wisdom and beneficence. The tyranny of Tiberius, Nero, and Domitian, who refided almost constantly at Rome, or in the adjacent villas, was confined to the fenatorial and equestrian orders 33. But Caracalla was the common enemy of mankind. He left the capital (and he never returned to it) about a year after the murder of Geta. The rest of his reign was fpent in the feveral provinces of the empire, particularly those of the East, and every province was by turns the scene of his rapine and cruelty. The fenators, compelled by fear to attend his capricious motions, were obliged to provide daily entertainments at an immense > expence, which he abandoned with contempt to his guards; and to erect, in every city, magnificent palaces and theatres, which he either disdained to visit, or ordered to be immediately thrown down. The most wealthy families were ruined by partial fines and confifcations, and the great body of his fubjects oppressed by ingenious and aggravated taxes 34. In the midft of peace, and upon the flightest provocation, he issued his commands, at Alexandria in Egypt, for a general maffacre. From a fecure post in the temple of Serapis, he viewed and directed the flaughter of many thousand citizens, as well as firangers, without diftinguishing either the number or the crime of the fufferers; fince, as he coolly informed the

A. D. 213.

32 With regard to Papinian, see Hei- made a short journey into Greece. " Et neccius's Historia Juris Romani, 1. 330, laudatorum Principum usus ex aquo quamvis from the neighbourhood of Rome. Nero

c. procul agentibus. Savi proximis ingruunt."

Tiberius and Domitian never moved Tacit. Hift. iv. 75.

34 Dion, l. lxxvii. p. 1294.

fenate.

fenate, all the Alexandrians, those who had perished and those who CHAP. had escaped, were alike guilty 15.

VI.

The wife instructions of Severus never made any lasting impref- Relaxation of fion on the mind of his fon, who, although not destitute of imagination and eloquence, was equally devoid of judgment and humanity 16. One dangerous maxim, worthy of a tyrant, was remembered and abused by Caracalla, "To secure the affections of the " army, and to esteem the rest of his subjects as of little moment 17." But the liberality of the father had been restrained by prudence, and his indulgence to the troops was tempered by firmness and authority. The careless profusion of the son was the policy of one reign, and the inevitable ruin both of the army and of the empire. The vigour of the foldiers, inflead of being confirmed by the fevere difcipline of camps, melted away in the luxury of cities. The exceffive increase of their pay and donatives 38 exhausted the state to enrich the military order, whose modesty in peace, and service in war, is best secured by an honourable poverty. The demeanor of Caracalla was haughty and full of pride; but with the troops he forgot even the proper dignity of his rank, encouraged their info-

<sup>35</sup> Dion, I. lxxvii. p. 1307. Herodian, 1. iv. p. 158. The former reprefents it as a cruel massacre, the latter as a perfidious one too. It feems probable, that the Alexandrians had irritated the tyrant by their railleries, and perhaps by their tumults.

<sup>36</sup> Dion, l. lxxvii. p. 1296.

<sup>37</sup> Dion, l. lxxvi. p. 1284. Mr. Wotton (Hist. of Rome, p. 330.) suspects that this maxim was invented by Caracalla himfelf and attributed to his father.

<sup>38</sup> Dion (l. lxxviii. p. 1343.) informs us that the extraordinary gifts of Caracalla to the army amounted annually to feventy millions of drachmæ (about two millions three hundred and fifty thousand pounds). There is another passage in Dion, concerning the military pay, infinitely curious; were it not obscure, imperfect, and probably corrupt. The best fense feems to be, that the Prætorian guards received twelve hundred and fifty drachmæ (forty pounds) a year. (Dion, l. lxxvii. p. 1307.) Under the reign of Angastus, they were paid at the rate of two drachmæ, or denarii, per day, 720 a year (Tacit. Annal. i. 17.). Domitian, who increafed the foldier's pay one fourth, must have raifed the Prætorians to 960 drachmæ (Gronovius de Pecunia Veteri, 1. iii. c. z.). Thefe fuccessive augmentations ruined the empire, for with the foldier's pay, their numbers too were increased. We have seen the Prætorians alone increased from 10,000 to 50,000 men.

C H A P. lent familiarity, and neglecting the effential duties of a general, affested to imitate the dress and manners of a common foldier.

Murder of Caracalla. A. D. 217 8th March.

It was impossible that such a character, and such a conduct as that of Caracalla, could inspire either love or esteem; but as long as his vices were beneficial to the armies, he was fecure from the danger of rebellion. A fecret conspiracy, provoked by his own jealoufy, was fatal to the tyrant. The Prætorian præfecture was divided between two ministers. The military department was intruffed to Adventus, an experienced rather than an able foldier; and the civil affairs were transacted by Opilius Macrinus, who, by his dexterity in business, had raised himself, with a fair character, to that high office. But his favour varied with the caprice of the emperor, and his life might depend on the flightest suspicion, or the most casual circumstance. Malice or fanaticism had suggested to an African, deeply skilled in the knowledge of futurity, a very dangerous prediction, that Macrinus and his fon were destined to reign over the empire. The report was foon diffused through the province; and when the man was fent in chains to Rome, he still afferted, in the presence of the præfect of the city, the faith of his prophecy. That magistrate, who had received the most pressing instructions to inform himself of the successors of Caracalla, immediately communicated the examination of the African to the Imperial court, which at that time refided in Syria. But notwithflanding the diligence of the public messengers, a friend of Macrinus found means to apprize him of the approaching danger. The emperor received the letters from Rome; and as he was then engaged in the conduct of a chariot race, he delivered them unopened to the Prætorian præfect, directing him to dispatch the ordinary affairs. and to report the more important business that might be contained in them. Macrinus read his fate, and refolved to prevent it. He inflamed the discontents of some inferior officers, and employed the hand hand of Martialis, a desperate foldier, who had been refused the CHAP. rank of centurion. The devotion of Caracalla prompted him to make a pilgrimage from Edessa to the celebrated temple of the Moon at Carrhæ. He was attended by a body of cavalry; but having stopped on the road for some necessary occasion, his guards preferved a respectful distance, and Martialis approaching his person under a pretence of duty, flabbed him with a dagger. The bold assassing and a single and a single as a s guard. Such was the end of a monster whose life disgraced human nature, and whose reign accused the patience of the Romans 19. The grateful foldiers forgot his vices, remembered only his partial liberality, and obliged the fenate to proftitute their own dignity and that of religion by granting him a place among the gods. Whilst he Imitation of was upon earth, Alexander the Great was the only hero whom this god deemed worthy his admiration. He affumed the name and enfigns of Alexander, formed a Macedonian phalanx of guards, perfecuted the disciples of Aristotle, and displayed with a puerile enthusiasm the only sentiment by which he discovered any regard for virtue or glory. We can eafily conceive, that after the battle of Narva, and the conquest of Poland, Charles the Twelfth (though he still wanted the more elegant accomplishments of the son of Philip) might boast of having rivalled his valour and magnanimity: but in no one action of his life did Caracalla express the faintest resemblance of the Macedonian hero, except in the murder of a great number of his own and of his father's friends 40.

After the extinction of the house of Severus, the Roman world remained three days without a master. The choice of the army (for character of Macrinus.

<sup>39</sup> Dion, I. Ixxviii. p. 1312. Herodian, heim, de Usu Numismatum, Dissertat. xii. l. iv. p. 168.

and enfigns of Alexander, is fill preserved with one side of the face like Alexander, and on the medals of that emperor. See Span- the other like Caracalla.

Herodian (l. iv. p. 154.) had feen very ridi-40 The fondness of Caracalla for the name culous pictures, in which a figure was drawn,

C H A P. the authority of a distant and feeble senate was little regarded) hung in anxious fuspence; as no candidate presented himself whose distinguished birth and merit could engage their attachment and unite their fuffrages. The decifive weight of the Prætorian guards elevated the hopes of their præfects, and these powerful ministers began to affert their legal claim to fill the vacancy of the Imperial throne. Adventus, however, the fenior præfect, conscious of his age and infirmities, of his fmall reputation, and his fmaller abilities, refigned the dangerous honour to the crafty ambition of his colleague Macrinus, whose well-diffembled grief removed all fufpicion of his being acceffary to his master's death 41. The troops neither loved nor esteemed his character. They cast their eyes around in fearch of a competitor, and at last yielded with reluctance to his promifes of unbounded liberality and indulgence. A short time after his accession, he conferred on his fon Diadumenianus, at the age of only ten years, the Imperial title and the popular name of Antoninus. The beautiful figure of the youth, affifted by an additional donative, for which the ceremony furnished a pretext, might attract, it was hoped, the favour of the army, and secure the doubtful throne of Macrinus.

A. D. 217. March 11.

Discontent of the fenate,

The authority of the new fovereign had been ratified by the cheerful fubmission of the senate and provinces. They exulted in their unexpected deliverance from a hated tyrant, and it feemed of little confequence to examine into the virtues of the fuccessor of Caracalla. But as foon as the first transports of joy and surprise had subsided, they began to scrutinize the merits of Macrinus with a critical severity, and to arraign the hasty choice of the army. It had hitherto been confidered as a fundamental maxim of the constitution, that the emperor must be always chosen in the senate, and the sovereign power, no longer exercifed by the whole body, was always delegated to one of its members. But Macrinus was not a fenator 4. The CHAP. fudden elevation of the Prætorian præfects betraved the meanness of their origin; and the equestrian order was still in possession of that great office, which commanded with arbitrary fway the lives and fortunes of the fenate. A murmur of indignation was heard, that a man whose obscure 43 extraction had never been illustrated by any fignal fervice, should dare to invest himself with the purple, instead of bestowing it on some distinguished senator, equal in birth and dignity to the splendour of the Imperial station. As soon as the character of Macrinus was surveyed by the sharp eye of discontent, fome vices, and many defects, were eafily discovered. The choice of his ministers was in several instances justly censured, and the disfatisfied people, with their usual candour, accused at once his indolent tameness and his excessive severity 44.

His rash ambition had climbed a height where it was difficult to and the armyfland with firmness, and impossible to fall without instant destruction. Trained in the arts of courts and the forms of civil bufiness, he trembled in the presence of the fierce and undisciplined multitude, over whom he had affumed the command: his military talents were despised, and his personal courage suspected: a whisper that circulated in the camp, disclosed the fatal secret of the conspiracy against <sup>42</sup> Dion, l. lxxxviii. p. 1350. Elagabalus narrowly escaped. His enemics afferted, that reproached his predecessor, with daring to feat himself on the throne; though, as Prætorian præfcct, he could not have been admitted into the senate after the voice of the cryer had cleared the house. The personal favour of Plautianus and Sejanus had broke through the established rule. They rose indeed from the equestrian order; but they virtues and vices of Macrinus, with candour preferved the præfecture with the rank of fenator, and even with the confulfhip.

<sup>43</sup> He was a native of Cæfarea, in Numihousehold of Plautian, from whose ruin he of his predecessor.

he was born a flave, and had exercifed, among other infamous professions, that of Gladiator. The fashion of aspersing the birth and condition of an adversary, seems to have lasted from the time of the Greek orators, to the learned grammarians of the last age,

<sup>44</sup> Both Dion and Herodian fpeak of the and impartiality; but the author of his life, in the Augustan History, seems to have implicitly copied fome of the venal writers, emdia, and began his fortune by ferving in the ployed by Elagabalus, to blacken the memory

C H A P. the late emperor, aggravated the guilt of murder by the baseness of hypocrify, and heightened contempt by deteftation. To alienate the foldiers, and to provoke inevitable ruin, the character of a reformer was only wanting: and fuch was the peculiar hardship of his fate, that Macrinus was compelled to exercife that invidious office. The prodigality of Caracalla had left behind it a long train of ruin and disorder; and if that worthless tyrant had been capable of reflecting on the fure confequences of his own conduct, he would perhaps have enjoyed the dark prospect of the distress and calamities which he bequeathed to his fuccessors.

Macrinus attempts a reformation of the army.

In the management of this necessary reformation, Macrinus proceeded with a cautious prudence, which would have reftored health and vigour to the Roman army, in an easy and almost imperceptible manner. To the foldiers already engaged in the fervice, he was constrained to leave the dangerous privileges and extravagant pay given by Caracalla; but the new recruits were received on the more moderate though liberal establishment of Severus, and gradually formed to modefly and obedience 45. One fatal error destroyed the falutary effects of this judicious plan. The numerous army, affembled in the East by the late emperor, instead of being immediately dispersed by Macrinus through the feveral provinces, was fuffered to remain united in Syria, during the winter that followed his elevation. In the luxurious idleness of their quarters, the troops viewed their strength and numbers, communicated their complaints, and revolved in their minds the advantages of another revolution. The veterans, inflead of being flattered by the advantageous diffinction, were alarmed by the first steps of the emperor, which they considered as the presage of his future intentions. The recruits, with fullen reluctance, entered on a fervice, whose labours were in- C H A F: creafed while its rewards were diminished by a covetous and unwarlike fovereign. The murmurs of the army fwelled with impunity into feditious clamours; and the partial mutinies betrayed a spirit of discontent and disaffection, that waited only for the slightest occasion to break out on every side into a general rebellion. To minds thus disposed, the occasion soon presented itself.

<sup>45</sup> Dion, l. lxxxiii. p. 1336. The fense of by understanding the distinction, not of vetethe author is as clear as the intention of the rans and recruits, but of old and new legions. emperor; but M. Wotton has miltaken both, History of Rome, p. 347.

The empress Julia had experienced all the viciffitudes of fortune. Death of the From an humble station, she had been raised to greatness only to empress Julia. tafte the superior bitterness of an exalted rank. She was doomed pretensions, and revolt of to weep over the death of one of her fons, and over the life of the Elagabalus, other. The cruel fate of Caracalla, though her good fense must Bassianus and have long taught her to expect it, awakened the feelings of a mother and of an empress. Notwithstanding the respectful civility expreffed by the usurper towards the widow of Severus, the descended with a painful ftruggle into the condition of a fubject, and foon withdrew herfelf by a voluntary death from the anxious and humiliating dependence 46. Julia Mæfa, her fifter, was ordered to leave the court and Antioch. She retired to Emela with an immense fortune, the fruit of twenty years favour, accompanied by her two daughters, Sozmias and Mamza, each of whom was a widow, and each had an only fon. Baffianus, for that was the name of the fon of Soæmias, was confecrated to the honourable ministry of high prieft of the Sun; and this holy vocation, embraced either from prudence or superstition, contributed to raise the Syrian youth to the empire of Rome. A numerous body of troops was flationed at Emefa; and, as the fevere discipline of Macrinus had constrained them to pass the winter encamped, they were eager to revenge the cruelty of fuch unaccustomed hardships. The soldiers, who reforted called at first Antoninus.

<sup>46</sup> Dion, l. lxxviii. p. 1330. The ticular, is in this place clearer than the oriabridgment of Xiphilin, though less par- ginal.

CHAP, in crowds to the temple of the Sun, beheld with veneration and delight the elegant dress and figure of the young pontiff: they recognised, or they thought that they recognised, the features of Caracalla, whose memory they now adored. The artful Masa faw and cherished their rising partiality, and readily facrificing her daughter's reputation to the fortune of her grandion, the infinuated that Bassianus was the natural son of their murdered sovereign. The fums distributed by her emissaries with a lavish hand, filenced every objection, and the profusion sufficiently proved the affinity, or at least the resemblance, of Bassianus with the great original. The young Antoninus (for he assumed and polluted that respectable name) was declared emperor by the troops of Emefa, afferted his hereditary right, and called aloud on the armies to follow the standard of a young and liberal prince, who had taken up arms to revenge his father's death and the oppression of the military order 47.

A. D. 218. .May 16.

Defeat and death of Macrinus.

Whilst a conspiracy of women and eunuchs was concerted with prudence, and conducted with rapid vigour, Macrinus, who by a decifive motion might have crushed his infant enemy, floated between the opposite extremes of terror and security, which alike fixed him inactive at Antioch. A spirit of rebellion diffused itself through all the camps and garrifons of Syria, successive detachments murdered their officers 48, and joined the party of the rebels; and the tardy restitution of military pay and privileges was imputed to the acknowledged weakness of Macrinus. At length he marched out

p. 135.), Alexander Severus lived twenty-nine years, three months, and feven days. As he was killed March 19; 235, he was born December 12, 205, and was confequently about this time thirteen years old, as his elder coufin might be about feventeen. This computation fuits much better the history of the young princes, than that of Herodian, (l. v. p. 181.) who represents them as three years younger; whilf, by an 47 According to Lampridius (Hift. August. opposite error of chronology, he lengthens the reign of Elagabalus two years beyond its real duration. For the particulars of the conspiracy, see Dion, l. lxxviii. p. 1339. Herodian, 1. v. p. 184.

> 48 By a most dangerous proclamation of the pretended Antoninus, every foldier who brought in his officer's head, became entitled to his private estate, as well as to his military commission.

of Antioch, to meet the increasing and zealous army of the young CHAP. pretender. His own troops feemed to take the field with faintness and reluctance; but, in the heat of the battle 49, the Prætorian guards, A. D. 218almost by an involuntary impulse, afferted the superiority of their 7th June valour and discipline. The rebel ranks were broken; when the mother and grandmother of the Syrian prince, who, according to their eastern custom, had attended the army, threw themselves from their covered chariots, and, by exciting the compassion of the soldiers, endeavoured to animate their drooping courage. Antoninus himfelf, who in the rest of his life never acted like a man, in this important crifis of his fate approved himself a hero, mounted his horse, and at the head of his rallied troops charged fword in hand among the thickest of the enemy; whilst the eunuch Gannys, whose occupations had been confined to female cares and the foft luxury of Afia, displayed the talents of an able and experienced general. The battle still raged with doubtful violence, and Macrinus might have obtained the victory, had he not betrayed his own cause by a shameful and precipitate flight. His cowardice ferved only to protract his life a few days, and to stamp deserved ignominy on his misfortunes. It is scarcely necessary to add, that his fon Diadumenianus was involved in the fame fate: As foon as the stubborn Prætorians could be convinced that they fought for a prince who had basely deserted them, they surrendered to the conqueror; the contending parties of the Roman army mingling tears of joy and tenderness, united under the banners of the imagined fon of Caracalla, and the East acknowledged with pleasure the first emperor of Asiatic extraction.

The letters of Macrinus had condescended to inform the senate of Elagabalus the flight disturbance occasioned by an impostor in Syria, and a de-writes to the

<sup>4</sup>º Dion, l. lxxviii. p. 1345. Herodian, the village of Immæ, about two and twenty l. v. p. 186. The battle was fought near miles from Antioch.

CHAP, cree immediately passed, declaring the rebel and his family public enemies; with a promife of pardon, however, to fuch of his deluded adherents as should merit it by an immediate return to their duty. During the twenty days that elapfed from the declaration to the victory of Antoninus (for in fo short an interval was the fate of the Roman world decided), the capital and the provinces, more especially those of the East, were distracted with hopes and fears, agitated with tumult, and stained with a nseless effusion of civil blood, since whofoever of the rivals prevailed in Syria, must reign over the empire. The specious letters in which the young conqueror announced his victory to the obedient fenate, were filled with professions of virtue and moderation; the shining examples of Marcus and Augustus, he should ever consider as the great rule of his administration; and he affected to dwell with pride on the firiking refemblance of his own age and fortunes with those of Augustus, who in the earliest youth had revenged by a successful war the murder of his By adopting the style of Marcus Aurelius Antoninus, fon of Antoninus and grandfon of Severus, he tacitly afferted his hereditary claim to the empire; but, by affuming the tribunitian and proconfular powers before they had been conferred on him by a decree of the senate, he offended the delicacy of Roman prejudice. This new and injudicious violation of the conflitution was probably dictated either by the ignorance of his Syrian courtiers, or the fierce disdain of his military followers ".

Picture of Elagabalus. A. D. 219.

As the attention of the new emperor was diverted by the most trifling amusements, he wasted many months in his luxurious progress from Syria to Italy, passed at Nicomedia the first winter after his victory, and deferred till the enfuing fummer his triumphal entry into the capital. A faithful picture, however, which preceded his arrival, and was placed by his immediate order over the altar of Victory in the fenate-house, conveyed to the Romans the just but unworthy CHAP, resemblance of his person and manners. He was drawn in his facerdotal robes of filk and gold, after the loofe flowing fashion of the Medes and Phœnicians; his head was covered with a lofty tiara, his numerous collars and bracelets were adorned with gems of an inestimable value. His eye-brows were tinged with black, and his cheeks painted with an artificial red and white 51. The grave fenators confessed with a figh, that, after having long experienced the flern tyranny of their own countrymen, Rome was at length humbled beneath the effeminate luxury of Oriental despotism.

The Sun was worshipped at Emesa, under the name of Elaga- His superstibalus 52, and under the form of a black conical stone, which, as it was univerfally believed, had fallen from heaven on that facred To this protecting deity, Antoninus, not without fome reason, ascribed his elevation to the throne. The display of superstitious gratitude was the only ferious business of his reign. The triumph of the god of Emesa over all the religions of the earth. was the great object of his zeal and vanity; and the appellation of Elagabalus (for he prefumed as pontiff and favourite to adopt that facred name) was dearer to him than all the titles of Imperial greatnefs. In a folemn procession through the streets of Rome, the way was strewed with gold dust; the black stone, set in precious gems, was placed on a chariot drawn by fix milk-white horses richly caparifoned. The pious emperor held the reins, and supported by his ministers, moved slowly backwards, that he might perpetually enjoy the felicity of the divine presence. In a magnificent temple raised on the Palatine Mount, the facrifices of the god Elagabalus were celebrated with every circumstance of cost and solemnity. The richest

<sup>52</sup> This name is derived by the learned from Wotton's history of Rome, p. 378. two Syriac words, Ela a God, and Gabal to

<sup>51</sup> Dion, I. Ixxix. p. 1363. Herodian, form, the forming, or plastic God, a proper, and even happy epithet for the Sun.

C H A P. wines, the most extraordinary victims, and the rarest aromatics, were profusely confumed on his altar. Around the altar a chorus of Syrian damfels performed their lafcivious dances to the found of barbarian music, whilst the gravest personages of the state and army, clothed in long Phænician tunics, officiated in the meanest functions, with affected zeal and fecret indignation 53.

> To this temple, as to the common centre of religious worship, the Imperial fanatic attempted to remove the Ancilia, the Palladium 5+, and all the facred pledges of the faith of Numa. A crowd of inferior deities attended in various flations the majefty of the god of Emesa; but his court was still impersect, till a semale of distinguished rank was admitted to his bed. Pallas had been first chosen for his confort; but as it was dreaded left her warlike terrors might affright the foft delicacy of a Syrian deity, the Moon, adored by the Africans under the name of Affarte, was deemed a more fuitable companion for the Sun. Her image, with the rich offerings of her temple as a marriage portion, was transported with folemn pomp from Carthage to Rome, and the day of these mystic nuptials was a general festival in the capital and throughout the empire 55.

His profigate and effeminate luxury.

A rational voluptuary adheres with invariable respect to the temperate dictates of nature, and improves the gratifications of fense by focial intercourse, endearing connections, and the foft colouring of tafte and the imagination. But Elagabalus, (I fpeak of the emperor of that name) corrupted by his youth, his country, and his fortune, abandoned himfelf to the groffest pleasures with ungoverned fury, and foon found difgust and fatiety in the midst of his enjoyments.

<sup>53</sup> Herodian, l. v. p. 190.

<sup>54</sup> He broke into the fanctuary of Vesta, and carried away a flatue, which he supposed to be the Palladium; but the veftals boafted, that by a pious fraud, they had imposed a counterfeit image on the profane intruder, Hist. August. p. 103.

<sup>55</sup> Dion, l. lxxix. p. 1360. Herodian, l. v. p. 193. The fubjects of the empire were obliged to make liberal prefents to the new-married couple; and whatever they had promifed during the life of Elagabalus, was carefully exacted under the administration of Mamæa.

The inflammatory powers of art were fummoned to his aid: the CHAP. confused multitude of women, of wines, and of dishes, and the studied variety of attitudes and fauces, served to revive his languid appetites. New terms and new inventions in these sciences, the only ones cultivated and patronifed by the monarch 56, fignalized his reign, and transmitted his infamy to succeeding times. A capricious prodigality supplied the want of taste and elegance; and whilst Elagabalus lavished away the treasures of his people in the wildest extravagance, his own voice and that of his flatterers applauded a spirit and magnificence unknown to the tameness of his predecessors. To confound the order of feafons and climates 57, to fport with the passions and prejudices of his subjects, and to subvert every law of nature and decency, were in the number of his most delicious amusements. A long train of concubines, and a rapid fuccession of wives, among whom was a vestal virgin, ravished by force from her sacred asylum 58, were insufficient to satisfy the impotence of his passions. The mafter of the Roman world affected to copy the drefs and manners of the female fex, preferred the distaff to the sceptre, and dishonoured the principal dignities of the empire by distributing them among his numerous lovers; one of whom was publickly invested with the title and authority of the emperor's, or as he more properly flyled himfelf, of the empress's husband 59.

56 The invention of a new fauce was liberally rewarded; but if it was not relified, the inventor was confined to eat of nothing elfe, till he had discovered another more agreeable to the Imperial palate. Hift. August. p. 111.

57 He never would eat fea-fish except at a great distance from the sea; he then would 58 Dion, l. lxxix. p. 1353. Herodian, l. v. membrorum. Hift. August. p. 105.

59 Hierocles enjoyed that honour; but he would have been supplanted by one Zoticus, had he not contrived, by a potion, to enervate the powers of his rival, who being found on trial unequal to his reputation, was driven with ignominy from the palace. Dion, !. lxxix. p. 1363, 1364. A dancer was made præfect of the city, a charioteer præfect of the distribute vast quantities of the rarest forts, watch, a barber præsect of the provisions. brought at an immense expence, to the pea- These three ministers, with many inferior fants of the inland country. Hist. Aug. p. 109. officers, were all recommended, enormitate Contempt of decency which diffinguifhed the Roman tyrants.

It may feem probable, the vices and follies of Elagabalus have been adorned by fancy, and blackened by prejudice 60. Yet confining ourselves to the public scenes displayed before the Roman people, and attefted by grave and contemporary historians, their inexpreffible infamy furpasses that of any other age or country. The license of an eastern monarch is feeluded from the eye of curiofity by the inaccessible walls of his feraglio. The fentiments of honour and gallantry have introduced a refinement of pleasure, a regard for decency, and a respect for the public opinion, into the modern courts of Europe; but the corrupt and opulent nobles of Rome gratified every vice that could be collected from the mighty conflux of nations and manners. Secure of impunity, carcless of censure, they lived without restraint in the patient and humble society of their slaves and parafites. The emperor, in his turn, viewing every rank of his fubiccts with the fame contemptuous indifference, afferted without control his fovereign privilege of luft and luxury.

Discontents of the army.

The most worthless of mankind are not afraid to condemn in others the same disorders which they allow in themselves; and can readily discover some nice difference of age, character, or station, to justify the partial distinction. The licentious soldiers, who had raised to the throne the dissolute son of Caracalla, blushed at their ignominious choice, and turned with disgust from that monster, to contemplate with pleasure the opening virtues of his cousin Alexander the son of Mamæa. The crastry Mæsa, sensible that her grandfon Elagabalus must inevitably destroy himself by his own vices, had provided another and surer support of her family. Embracing a favourable moment of fondness and devotion, she had persuaded the young emperor to adopt Alexander, and to invest him with the title of Cæsar, that his own divine occupations might be no longer

Alexander Severus declared Cæfar. A. D. 221.

interrupted

in the Augustan History (p. 111.), is inclined gerated.

interrupted by the care of the earth. In the fecond rank that ami- C H A P. able prince foon acquired the affections of the public, and excited the tyrant's jealoufy, who refolved to terminate the dangerous competition, either by corrupting the manners, or by taking away the life, of his rival. His arts proved unfuccefsful; his vain defigns were conftantly discovered by his own loquacious folly, and disappointed by those virtuous and faithful servants whom the prudence of Mamaa had placed about the person of her son. In a hasty fally of passion. Elagabalus resolved to execute by force what he had been unable to compass by fraud, and by a despotic sentence degraded his cousin from the rank and honours of Cafar. The meffage was received in the fenate with filence, and in the camp with fury. The Prætorian guards fwore to protect Alexander, and to revenge the dishonoured majefty of the throne. The tears and promifes of the trembling Elagabalus, who only begged them to spare his life, and to leave him in the possession of his beloved Hierocles, diverted their just indignation; and they contented themselves with empowering their præfects to watch over the fafety of Alexander, and the conduct of the emperor 61.

It was impossible that such a reconciliation should last, or that Sedition of even the mean foul of Elagabalus could hold an empire on fuch and murder humiliating terms of dependence. He foon attempted, by a dangerous experiment, to try the temper of the foldiers. The report A.D. 222. of the death of Alexander, and the natural fuspicion that he had been murdered, inflamed their passions into fury, and the tempest of the camp could only be appealed by the presence and authority of the popular youth. Provoked at this new inftance of their affection for his cousin, and their contempt for his person, the emperor ventured to punish some of the leaders of the mutiny. His unsea-

the guards, of Elagabalus.

10th March.

fonable:

<sup>61</sup> Dion, I. Ixxix. p. 1365. Herodian, I.v. lowed the best authors in his account of the p. 195-201. Hift. August. p. 105. The revolution. last of the three historians seems to have fol-

CHAP. fonable severity proved instantly fatal to his minions, his mother, and himself. Elagabalus was massacred by the indignant Prætorians, his mutilated corpse dragged through the streets of the city, and thrown into the Tyber. His memory was branded with eternal infamy by the fenate; the juffice of whose decree has been ratified by posterity 62.

Accession of Alexander Severus.

In the room of Elagabalus, his cousin Alexander was raised to the throne by the Prætorian guards. His relation to the family of Severus, whose name he assumed, was the same as that of his predeeffor; his virtue and his danger had already endeared him to the Romans, and the eager liberality of the fenate conferred upon him, in one day, the various titles and powers of the Imperial dignity 63. But as Alexander was a modest and dutiful youth, of only feventeen years of age, the reins of government were in the hands of two women, of his mother Mamæa, and of Mæsa, his grandmother. After the death of the latter, who furvived but a short time the elevation of Alexander, Mamaa remained the sole regent of her fon and of the empire.

Power of his mother Mamæa.

In every age and country, the wifer, or at least the stronger, of the two fexes, has usurped the powers of the flate, and confined the other to the cares and pleasures of domestic life. In hereditary monarchies, however, and especially in those of modern Europe, the

62 The æra of the death of Elagabalus, and of the accession of Alexander, has employed the learning and ingenuity of Pagi, Tillemont, Valfecchi, Vignoli, and Torre bishop of Adria. The question is most affuredly intricate: but I still adhere to the authority of Dion: the truth of whose calculations is undeniable, and the purity of whose text is juftified by the agreement of Xiphilin, Zonaras, and Cedrenus. Elagabalus reigned three years, nine months, and four days, from his victory over Macrinus, and was killed March 10, 222. But what shall we reply to the medals, undoubtedly genuine, which reckon the fifth year of his tribunitian power? We shall reply with the learned Valseechi, that the usurpation of Macrinus was annihilated, and that the fon of Caracalla dated his reign from his father's death. After refolving this great difficulty, the fmaller knots of this question may be easily untied, or cut asun-

63 Hift. August. p. 114. By this unusual precipitation, the fenate meant to confound the hopes of pretenders, and prevent the factions of the armies, gallant

gallant spirit of chivalry, and the law of succession, have accustomed CHAP. us to allow a fingular exception; and a woman is often acknowledged the absolute sovereign of a great kingdom, in which she would be deemed incapable of exercifing the smallest employment, civil or military. But as the Roman emperors were still considered as the generals and magistrates of the republic, their wives and mothers, although diffinguished by the name of Augusta, were never affociated to their personal honours; and a female reign would have appeared an inexpiable prodigy in the eyes of those primitive Romans, who married without love, or loved without delicacy and respect 64. The haughty Agrippina aspired, indeed, to share the honours of the empire, which she had conferred on her son: but her mad ambition, detefted by every citizen who felt for the dignity of Rome, was disappointed by the artful firmness of Seneca and Burrhus 65. The good fenfe, or the indifference, of fucceeding princes, restrained them from offending the prejudices of their subjects; and it was referved for the profligate Elagabalus, to difgrace the acts of the fenate, with the name of his mother Sozmias, who was placed by the fide of the confuls, and fubfcribed, as a regular member, the decrees of the legislative affembly. Her more prudent fifter, Mamæa, declined the useless and odious prerogative, and a solemn law was enacted, excluding women for ever from the fenate, and devoting to the infernal gods, the head of the wretch by whom this fanction should be violated 66. The substance, not the pageantry, of power was the object of Mamæa's manly ambition. She maintained an absolute and lasting empire over the mind of her son, and in his affection the mother could not brook a rival. Alexander,

<sup>64</sup> Metellus Numidicus, the cenfor, acknowledged to the Roman people, in a public oration, that had kind Nature allowed us to exist without the help of women, we should be delivered from a very troublesome companion; and he could recommend matrimony, only as the facrifice of private pleasure to public duty. Aulus Gellius, i. 6.

<sup>65</sup> Tacit. Annal. xiii. 5. 66 Hift. August. p. 102. 107.

C HAP. with her consent, married the daughter of a Patrician; but his respect for his father-in-law, and love for the empress, were inconfiftent with the tenderness or interest of Mamaa. The Patrician was executed on the ready accufation of treason, and the wife of Alexander driven with ignominy from the palace, and banished into Africa 67.

Wife and moderate administration.

Notwithstanding this act of jealous cruelty, as well as some inflances of avarice, with which Mamæa is charged; the general tenour of her administration was equally for the benefit of her fon and of the empire. With the approbation of the fenate, she chose fixteen of the wifest and most virtuous fenators, as a perpetual council of state, before whom every public business of moment was debated and determined. The celebrated Ulpian, equally diffinguished by his knowledge of, and his respect for, the laws of Rome, was at their head; and the prudent firmness of this aristoeracy restored order and authority to the government. As soon as they had purged the city from foreign fuperstition and luxury, the remains of the capricious tyranny of Elagabalus, they applied themfelves to remove his worthless creatures from every department of public administration, and to supply their places with men of virtue and ability. Learning, and the love of justice, became the only recommendations for civil offices. Valour, and the love of discipline. the only qualifications for military employments 68.

Education and virtuous temper of Alexander.

But the most important care of Mamæa and her wife counsellors, was to form the character of the young emperor, on whose personal 67 Dion, 1.1xxx. p. 1369. Herodian, 1. 6. p. 206. Hift. August. p. 131. Herodian represents the Patricians as innocent. The Augustan History, on the authority of Dexippus, condemns him, as guilty of a confpiracy against the life of Alexander. It is impossible to pronounce between them: but Dion is an irreproachable witness of the jealoufy and cruelty of Mamæa toward the young empress, whose hard fate Alexander lamented, but durst not oppose.

68 Herodian, 1. vi. p. 203. Hift. August. p. 119. The latter infinuates, that when any law was to be passed, the council was assisted by a number of able lawyers and experienced fenators, whose opinions were separately given, and taken down in writing.

qualities

OF THE ROMAN EMPIRE.

qualities the happiness or misery of the Roman world must ulti- C II A P. mately depend. The fortunate foil affifted, and even prevented, the hand of cultivation. An excellent understanding soon convinced Alexander of the advantages of virtue, the pleasure of knowledge, and the necessity of labour. A natural mildness and moderation of temper preserved him from the affaults of passion and the allurements of vice. His unalterable regard for his mother, and his esteem for the wife Ulpian, guarded his unexperienced youth from the poison of flattery.

The fimple journal of his ordinary occupations exhibits a pleafing Journal of his picture of an accomplished emperor 69, and with some allowance for the difference of manners, might well deferve the imitation of modern princes. Alexander rofe early: the first moments of the day were confecrated to private devotion, and his domestic chapel was filled with the images of those heroes, who, by improving or reforming human life, had deferved the grateful reverence of posterity. But, as he deemed the fervice of mankind the most acceptable worship of the gods, the greatest part of his morning hours was employed in his council, where he discussed public affairs, and determined private causes, with a patience and discretion above his years. The dryness of business was relieved by the charms of literature: and a portion of time was always fet apart for his favourite studies of poetry, history, and philosophy. The works of Virgil and Horace, the republics of Plato and Cicero, formed his tafte, enlarged his understanding, and gave him the noblest ideas of man and government. The exercises of the body succeeded to those of the mind; and Alexander, who was tall, active, and robuft, furpassed most of his equals in the gymnastic arts. Refreshed by the use of the bath and a flight dinner, he refumed, with new

<sup>69</sup> See his life in the Augustan History, these interesting anecdotes under a load of The undistinguishing compiler has buried trivial and unmeaning circumstances.

CHAP. vigour, the business of the day, and, till the hour of supper, the principal meal of the Romans, he was attended by his fecretaries, with whom he read and answered the multitude of letters, memorials, and petitions, that must have been addressed to the master of the greatest part of the world. His table was served with the most frugal fimplicity; and whenever he was at liberty to confult his own inclination, the company confifted of a few felect friends, men of learning and virtue, amongst whom Ulpian was constantly invited. Their conversation was familiar and instructive: and the paufes were occasionally enlivened by the recital of some pleafing composition, which supplied the place of the dancers, comedians, and even gladiators, fo frequently fummoned to the tables of the rich and luxurious Romans 7°. The drefs of Alexander was plain and modest, his demeanor courteous and affable: at the proper hours his palace was open to all his fubjects, but the voice of a crier was heard, as in the Eleusinian mysteries, pronouncing the fame falutary admonition; "Let none enter those holy walls, un-" lefs he is confcious of a pure and innocent mind 71."

General happiness of the Roman world. A. D. 222-235.

Such an uniform tenour of life, which left not a moment for vice or folly, is a better proof of the wisdom and justice of Alexander's government, than all the trifling details preferved in the compilation of Lampridius. Since the accession of Commodus the Roman world had experienced, during a term of forty years, the fuccessive and various vices of four tyrants. From the death of Elagabalus it enjoyed an aufpicious calm of thirteen years. The provinces, relieved from the oppressive taxes, invented by Caracalla and his pretended fon, flourished in peace and prosperity, under the administration of magistrates, who were convinced by experience, that to deferve the love of the subjects, was their best and only method of obtaining the favour of their fovereign. While fome gentle restraints were imposed on the insolent luxury of the Roman peo- C H A P. ple, the price of provisions, and the interest of money, were reduced, by the paternal care of Alexander, whose prudent liberality, without diffreffing the industrious, supplied the wants and amusements of the populace. The dignity, the freedom, the authority of the fenate was restored; and every virtuous senator might approach the person of the emperor, without a fear, and without a blufh.

<sup>70</sup> See the 13th Satire of Juvenal.

<sup>21</sup> Hift. August. p. 119.

The name of Antoninus, ennobled by the virtues of Pius and Alexander Marcus, had been communicated by adoption to the diffolute Verus, and by descent to the cruel Commodus. It became the honourable appellation of the fons of Severus, was bestowed on young Diadumenianus, and at length prostituted to the infamy of the high priest of Emesa. Alexander, though pressed by the studied, and perhaps, fincere importunity of the fenate, nobly refused the borrowed luftre of a name; whilst in his whole conduct he laboured to restore the glories and felicity of the age of the genuine Antonines 72.

toninus.

In the civil administration of Alexander, wisdom was enforced He attempts by power, and the people, fensible of the public felicity, repaid army. their benefactor with their love and gratitude. There still remained a greater, a more necessary, but a more difficult enterprise; the reformation of the military order, whose interest and temper, confirmed by long impunity, rendered them impatient of the restraints of difcipline, and careless of the bleffings of public tranquillity. In the execution of his defign the emperor affected to difplay his love, and to conceal his fear, of the army. The most rigid economy the whole contest between Alexander and the fings of his reign. Before the appellation of fenate, extracted from the journals of that Antoninus was offered him as a title of hoaffembly. It happened on the fixth of March, nour, the fenate waited to fee whether Alex-

<sup>72</sup> See in the Hift. August, p. 116, 117, had enjoyed, almost a twelvemonth, the blefprobably of the year 223, when the Romans ander would not assume it, as a family name.

CHAP. in every other branch of the administration, supplied a fund of gold and filver for the ordinary pay and the extraordinary rewards of the troops. In their marches he relaxed the fevere obligation of carrying feventeen days provision on their shoulders. Amplemagazines were formed along the public roads, and as foon as they entered the enemy's country, a numerous train of mules and camels waited on their haughty laziness. As Alexander despaired of correcting the luxury of his foldiers, he attempted, at leaft, to direct it to objects of martial pomp and ornament, fine horses, splendid armour, and shields enriched with silver and gold. He shared whatever fatigues he was obliged to impose, visited, in person, the fick and wounded, preferved an exact register of their fervices and his own gratitude, and expressed, on every occasion, the warmest regard for a body of men, whose welfare, as he affected to declare, was fo closely connected with that of the state 73. By the most gentle arts he laboured to inspire the fierce multitudewith a fenfe of duty, and to reftore at least a faint image of that discipline to which the Romans owed their empire over so many other nations, as warlike and more powerful than themselves. But his prudence was vain, his courage fatal, and the attempt towards a reformation ferved only to inflame the ills it was meant to cure.

Seditions of the Prætorian guards, and murder of Ulpian,

The Prætorian guards were attached to the youth of Alexander. They loved him as a tender pupil, whom they had faved from a tyrant's fury, and placed on the Imperial throne. That amiable prince was fensible of the obligation, but as his gratitude was reftrained within the limits of reason and justice, they soon were more diffatisfied with the virtues of Alexander, toan they had ever been with the vices of Elagabalus. Their præfect, the wife Ulpian, was the friend of the laws and of the people; he was confidered as the enemy of the foldiers, and to his pernicious councils

<sup>73</sup> It was a favourite faving of the emperors, falus publica in his effet. Hift. August. Se milites magis fervare, quam scipsum ; quod p. 130.

councils every scheme of reformation was imputed. Some trifling CHAP. accident blew up their discontent into a furious mutiny; and a civil war raged, during three days, in Rome, whilft the life of that excellent minister was defended by the grateful people. Terrified, at length, by the fight of fome houses in flames, and by the threats of a general conflagration, the people yielded with a figh, and left the virtuous, but unfortunate, Ulpian to his fate. He was purfued into the Imperial palace, and massacred at the feet of his master, who vainly strove to cover him with the purple, and to obtain his pardon from the inexorable foldiers. Such was the deplorable weakness of government, that the emperor was unable to revenge his murdered friend and his infulted dignity, without stooping to the arts of patience and diffimulation. Epagathus, the principal leader of the mutiny, was removed from Rome, by the honourable employment of præfect of Egypt; from that high rank he was gently degraded to the government of Crete; and when, at length, his popularity among the guards was effaced by time and abfence, Alexander ventured to inflict the tardy, but deferved punishment of his crimes 74. Under the reign of a just and virtuous prince, the tyranny of the army threatened with inftant death his most faithful ministers, who were suspected of an intention to correct their intolerable diforders. The historian Dion Cassius had Danger of commanded the Pannonian legions with the spirit of ancient discipline. Their brethren of Rome, embracing the common cause of military license, demanded the head of the reformer. Alexander, however, inflead of yielding to their feditious clamours, shewed a just fense of his merit and services, by appointing him his colleague in the confulfhip, and defraying from his own treasury the expence of that vain dignity: but as it was justly apprehended that if the foldiers beheld him with the ensigns of his office, they would revenge the insult in his blood, the nominal first magistrate of the state retired, by the emperor's advice, from the city, and spent the greatest part of his consulship at his villas in Campania.

Dion Caffins.

<sup>74</sup> Though the author of the life of Alex- cover a weakness in the administration of his ander (Hift. August. p. 132.) mentions the hero. From this defigned omission, we may fedition raised against Ulpian by the soldiers, judge of the weight and candour of that aube conceals the catastrophe, as it might dif- thor,

C II A P.

Tumults of the legions.

The lenity of the emperor confirmed the infolence of the troops; the legions imitated the example of the guards, and defended their prerogative of licentiousness with the same furious obstinacy. The administration of Alexander was an unavailing struggle against the corruption of his age. In Illyricum, in Mauritania, in Armenia, in Mesopotamia, in Germany, fresh mutinies perpetually broke out; his officers were murdered, his authority was infulted, and his life at last facrificed to the fierce discontents of the army 76. One particular fact well deserves to be recorded, as it illustrates the manners of the troops, and exhibits a fingular inflance of their return to a fense of duty and obedience. Whilft the emperor lay at Antioch, in his Persian expedition, the particulars of which we shall hereafter relate, the punishment of some foldiers, who had been discovered in the baths of women, excited a fedition in the legion to which they belonged. Alexander ascended his tribunal, and with a modest firmness reprefented to the armed multitude, the absolute necessity as well as his inflexible resolution of correcting the vices introduced by his impure predecessor, and of maintaining the discipline, which could not be relaxed without the ruin of the Roman name and empire. Their clamours interrupted his mild exposulation. "Reserve your " fhouts," faid the undaunted emperor, " till you take the field " against the Persians, the Germans, and the Sarmatians. Be filent in the presence of your sovereign and benefactor, who bestows CHAP. " upon you the corn, the clothing, and the money of the provinces. " Be filent, or I shall no longer style you soldiers, but citizens 77, if " those indeed who disclaim the laws of Rome deserve to be ranked " among the meanest of the people." His menaces inflamed the fury of the legion, and their brandished arms already threatened his person. "Your courage," refumed the intrepid Alexander, "would " be more nobly displayed in a field of battle; me you may de-" ftroy, you cannot intimidate; and the severe justice of the republic "would punish your crime and revenge my death," The legion still perfifted in clamorous fedition, when the emperor pronounced, with a loud voice, the decifive fentence, "Citizens! lay down your arms; " and depart in peace to your respective habitations." The tempest was instantly appealed; the foldiers, filled with grief and shame, filently confessed the justice of their punishment and the power of discipline, yielded up their arms and military ensigns, and retired in confusion, not to their camp, but to the feveral inns of the city. Alexander enjoyed, during thirty days, the edifying spectacle of their repentance; nor did he restore them to their former rank in the army, till he had punished with death those tribunes whose connivance had occasioned the mutiny. The grateful legion served the emperor, whilst living, and revenged him when dead 78.

Firmness of the emperor.

<sup>75</sup> For an account of Ulpian's fate and his own danger, fee the mutilated conclusion of 1. lxxxx. p. 1369. Dion's Hiltory, 1. lxxxx. p. 1371.

The resolutions of the multitude generally depend on a moment; Defects of his and the caprice of passion might equally determine the seditious legion reign and characters. to lay down their arms at the emperor's feet, or to plunge them into his breaft. Perhaps, if the fingular transaction had been investigated by the penetration of a philosopher, we should discover the secret causes which on that occasion authorized the boldness of the prince

73 Hift. August. p. 132.

<sup>77</sup> Julius Cafar had appeafed a fedition honourable condition of mere citizens. Tacit. with the fame word Quirites; which thus op- Annal. i. 43. posed to Soldiers, was used in a sense of contempt, and reduced the offenders to the lefs

C H A P. and commanded the obedience of the troops; and perhaps, if it had been related by a judicious historian, we should find this action, worthy of Cæsar himself, reduced nearer to the level of probability and the common standard of the character of Alexander Severus. The abilities of that amiable prince, feem to have been inadequate to the difficulties of his fituation, the firmness of his conduct inferior to the purity of his intentions. His virtues, as well as the vices of Elagabalus, contracted a tincture of weakness and effeminacy from the foft climate of Syria, of which he was a native; though he blushed at his foreign origin, and listened with a vain complacency to the flattering genealogists, who derived his race from the ancient flock of Roman nobility 79. The pride and avarice of his mother cast a shade on the glories of his reign; and by exacting from his riper years the fame dutiful obedience which fhe had juffly claimed from his unexperienced youth, Mamæa exposed to public ridicule both her fon's character and her own 80. The fatigues of the Persian war irritated the military discontent; the unsuccessful event degraded the reputation of the emperor as a general, and even as a foldier. Every cause prepared, and every circumstance hastened, a revolution, which distracted the Roman empire with a long series of intestine calamities.

Digression on the finances of the empire.

The diffolute tyranny of Commodus, the civil wars occasioned by his death, and the new maxims of policy introduced by the house

From the Metelli, Hift. August. p. 119. The choice was judicious. In one fhort period of twelve years, the Metelli could reckon feven confulfhips, and five triumphs. See Velleius Paterculus, ii. 11. and the Fasti.

50 The life of Alexander, in the Augustan History, is the mere idea of a perfect prince, an awkward imitation of the Cyropædia. The account of his reign, as given by Herodian, is rational and moderate, confiftent with the culous avarice of his mother. general history of the age; and, in fome of the most invidious particulars, confirmed by the decifive fragments of Dion. Yet from a very paltry prejudice, the greater number of our modern writers abuse Herodian, and copy the Augustan History. See Mess. de Tillemont and Wotton. From the opposite prejudice, the emperor Julian (in Cafarib. p. 315.) dwells with a visible fatisfaction on the effeminate weakness of the Syrian, and the ridi-

of Severus, had all contributed to increase the dangerous power of CHAP. the army, and to obliterate the faint image of laws and liberty that was flill impressed on the minds of the Romans. This internal change, which undermined the foundations of the empire, we have endeavoured to explain with some degree of order and perspicuity. The personal characters of the emperors, their victories, laws, follies, and fortunes, can interest us no farther than as they are connected with the general history of the Decline and Fall of the monarchy. Our constant attention to that great object, will not suffer us to overlook a most important edict of Antoninus Caracalla, which communicated to all the free inhabitants of the empire the name and privileges of Roman citizens. His unbounded liberality flowed not, however, from the fentiments of a generous mind; it was the fordid refult of avarice, and will naturally be illustrated by some observations on the finances of that state, from the victorious ages of the commonwealth to the reign of Alexander Severus.

The fiege of Veii in Tuscany, the first considerable enterprise of Establishthe Romans, was protracted to the tenth year, much less by the ftrength of the place than by the unskilfulness of the besiegers. The unaccustomed hardships of so many winter campaigns, at the distance of near twenty miles from horae 37, required more than common encouragements; and the fenate wifely prevented the clamours of the people, by the inftitution of a regular pay for the foldiers, which was levied by a general tribute, affeffed according to an equitable proportion on the property of the citizens 82. During more than two hundred years after the conquest of Veii, the victo-

<sup>81</sup> According to the more accurate Diony- has removed Veii from Civita Castellana, to fius, the city itself was only an hundred sta- a little spot called Isola, in the midway bedia, or twelve miles and a half from Rome; tween Rome and the lake Bracciano. though fome out-posts might be advanced 82 See the 4th and 5th books of Livy. farther on the fide of Etruria. Nardini, in a In the Roman Cenfus, property, power, opinion and the authority of two popes, and other.

CHAP. ries of the republic added less to the wealth than to the power of Rome. The states of Italy paid their tribute in military service only, and the vast force both by sea and land, which was exerted in the Punic wars, was maintained at the expence of the Romans themfelves. That high-fpirited people (fuch is often the generous enthufiasm of freedom) cheerfully submitted to the most excessive but voluntary burdens, in the just confidence that they should speedily enjoy the rich harvest of their labours. Their expectations were not disappointed. In the course of a few years, the riches of Syracuse, of Carthage, of Macedonia, and of Asia, were brought in triumph to Rome. The treasures of Perseus alone amounted to near two millions sterling, and the Roman people, the sovereign of so many nations, was for ever delivered from the weight of taxes 83. The increasing revenue of the provinces was found sufficient to defray the ordinary establishment of war and government, and the fuperfluous mass of gold and filver was deposited in the temple of Saturn, and referved for any unforeseen emergency of the state 84.

and abolition of the tribute on Roman citizens.

Tributes of the provinces

History has never perhaps suffered a greater or more irreparable injury, than in the lofs of the curious register bequeathed by Augustus to the senate, in which that experienced prince so accurately balanced the revenues and expences of the Roman empire 85. Deprived of this clear and comprchensive estimate, we are reduced to collect a few imperfect hints from fuch of the ancients as have accidentally turned afide from the splendid to the more useful parts of history. We are informed that, by the conquests of Pompey, the tributes of Asia were raised from sifty to one hundred and thirtyfive millions of drachms; or about four millions and a half sterling 36. Under the last and most indolent of the Ptolemies, the re-

of Afia.

of Egypt,

<sup>33</sup> Plin. Hift, Natur. 1. xxxiii. c. 3. Cicero de Offic, ii, 22. Plutarch, in P. Æmil, p. 275. existed in the time of Appian. 84 See a fine description of this accumulated wealth of ages, in Lucan's Pharf.l.iii.v.155.&c.

<sup>85</sup> Tacit. in Annal. i. 11. It feems to have

<sup>86</sup> Plutarch, in Pompeio, p. 642.

venue of Egypt is faid to have amounted to twelve thousand five hundred talents; a sum equivalent to more than two millions and a half of our money, but which was afterwards considerably improved by the more exact occonomy of the Romans, and the increase of the trade of Æthiopia and India *7. Gaul was enriched by rapine, of Gaul, as Egypt was by commerce, and the tributes of those two great provinces have been compared as nearly equal to each other in value **. The ten thousand Euboic or Phoenician talents, about four millions of Africa, sterling *9, which vanquished Carthage was condemned to pay within the term of fifty years, were a slight acknowledgment of the superiority of Rome 9°, and cannot bear the least proportion with the taxes afterwards raised both on the lands and on the persons of the inhabitants, when the fertile coast of Africa was reduced into a province *1.

Spain, by a very fingular fatality, was the Peru and Mexico of of Spain, the old world. The discovery of the rich western continent by the Phoenicians, and the oppression of the simple natives, who were compelled to labour in their own mines for the benefit of strangers, form an exact type of the more recent history of Spanish America 92. The Phoenicians were acquainted only with the sea-coast of Spain; avarice, as well as ambition, carried the arms of Rome and Carthage into the heart of the country, and almost every part of the soil was found pregnant with copper, filver, and gold. Mention is made of a mine near Carthagena which yielded every day twenty-five thousand drachms of filver, or about three hundred thousand pounds a year 91. Twenty thousand pound weight of gold was annu-

<sup>87</sup> Strabo, L. xvii. p. 798.

Velleius Paterculus, I. ii. c. 39. he feems to give the preference to the revenue of <sup>79</sup> The Euboic, the Phenician, and Alexandrian talents, were double in weight to the Attic. See Hooper of ancient weights and measures, p. iv. c. 5. It i very probable, that the fame talent was carried from Tyre to

<sup>90</sup> Polyb. 1. xv. c. 2.

Appian in Punicis, p. 84.
 Diodorus Siculus, 1.v. Cadiz was built by the Phœnicians a little more than a thoufand years before Chrift. See Vell. Patere. i. 2.

<sup>93</sup> Strabo, l. iii. p. 148.

CHAP.

of the ifle of Gyarus.

ally received from the provinces of Afturia, Gallicia, and Lufitania 94

We want both leifure and materials to purfue this curious inquiry through the many potent states that were annihilated in the Roman empire. Some notion, however, may be formed of the revenue of the provinces where confiderable wealth had been deposited by nature, or collected by man, if we observe the severe attention that was directed to the abodes of folitude and sterility. Augustus once received a petition from the inhabitants of Gyarus, humbly praying that they might be relieved from one-third of their excessive impofitions. Their whole tax amounted indeed to no more than one hundred and fifty drachms, or about five pounds: but Gyarus was a little island, or rather a rock, of the Ægean fea, destitute of fresh water and every necessary of life, and inhabited only by a few wretched fishermen 95.

Amount of the revenue.

From the faint glimmerings of fuch doubtful and scattered lights, we should be inclined to believe, 1st, That (with every fair allowance for the difference of times and circumstances) the general income of the Roman provinces could feldom amount to less than fifteen or twenty millions of our money 96; and, 2dly, That so ample a revenue must have been fully adequate to all the expences of the moderate government inflituted by Augustus, whose court was the modest family of a private fenator, and whose military establishment was calculated for the defence of the frontiers, without any aspiring views of conquest, or any serious apprehension of a foreign invasion.

Taxes on Roman citizens instituted by Augustus.

Notwithstanding the seeming probability of both these conclusions, the latter of them at least is positively disowned by the language mentions likewise a silver mine in Dalmatia, 95 Strabo, 1. x. p. 485. Tacit. Annal. iii.

94 Plin. Hift. Natur. 1. xxxiii. c. 3. He ture of the actual mifery of Gyarus. 95 Lipfius de magnitudine Romana (l. ii. that yielded every day fifty pounds to the flate. c. 3.) computes the revenue at one hundred and fifty millions of gold crowns; but his 69. and iv. 30. See in Tournefort (Voyages whole book, though learned and ingenious, an Levant, Lettre viii.) a very lively pic- betrays a very heated imagination.

and

and conduct of Augustus. It is not easy to determine whether, on CHAP. this occasion, he acted as the common father of the Roman world, or as the oppressor of liberty; whether he wished to relieve the provinces, or to impoverish the fenate and the equestrian order. But no fooner had he assumed the reins of government, than he frequently intimated the infufficiency of the tributes, and the necessity of throwing an equitable proportion of the public burden upon Rome and Italy. In the profecution of this unpopular defign, he advanced, however, by cautious and well-weighed steps. The introduction of customs was followed by the establishment of an excife, and the scheme of taxation was completed by an artful affeffment on the real and personal property of the Roman citizens, who had been exempted from any kind of contribution above a century and a half. I. In a great empire like that of Rome, a natural balance of money The customs.

must have gradually established itself. It has been already observed, that as the wealth of the provinces was attracted to the capital by the strong hand of conquest and power; so a considerable part of it was reflored to the industrious provinces by the gentle influence of commerce and arts. In the reign of Augustus and his successors, duties were imposed on every kind of merchandise, which through a thoufand channels flowed to the great centre of opulence and luxury: and in whatfoever manner the law was expressed, it was the Roman purchaser, and not the provincial merchant, who paid the tax 97. The rate of the customs varied from the eighth to the fortieth part of the value of the commodity; and we have a right to suppose that the variation was directed by the unalterable maxims of policy: that a higher duty was fixed on the articles of luxury than on those of necessity, and that the productions raised or manufactured by the labour of the subjects of the empire, were treated with more indulgence than was shewn to the pernicious, or at least the unpopular, CHAP. commerce of Arabia and India 98. There is fill extant a long but imperfect catalogue of eastern commodities, which about the time of Alexander Severus were subject to the payment of duties; cinnamon, myrrh, pepper, ginger, and the whole tribe of aromatics, a great variety of precious stones, among which the diamond was the most remarkable for its price, and the emerald for its beauty 99: Parthian and Babylonian leather, cottons, filks, both raw and manufactured, ebony, ivory, and eunuchs 100. We may observe that the use and value of those effeminate slaves gradually rose with the decline of the empire.

The excise.

II. The excife, introduced by Augustus after the civil wars, was extremely moderate, but it was general. It feldom exceeded one per cent.; but it comprehended whatever was fold in the markets or by public auction, from the most considerable purchases of lands and houses, to those minute objects which can only derive a value from their infinite multitude and daily confumption. Such a tax, as it affects the body of the people, has ever been the occasion of clamour and discontent. An emperor well acquainted with the wants and refources of the flate, was obliged to declare by a public edict, that the support of the army depended in a great measure on the produce of the excise "o".

Tax on legacies and inheritances.

III. When Augustus resolved to establish a permanent military force for the defence of his government against foreign and domestic enemies, he inflituted a peculiar treasury for the pay of the foldiers, 98 See Pliny (Hift. Natur. I. vi. c. 23. I. xii. c. 18.). His observation, that the Indian commodities were fold at Rome at a hundred times their original price, may give us fome notion of the produce of the customs, fince that original price amounted to more than eight hundred thousand pounds.

99 The ancients were unacquainted with the art of cutting diamonds.

100 M. Bouchaud, in his treatife de l'Impot chez les Romaius, has transcribed this catalogue, from the Digest, and attempts to illustrate it by a very profix commentary.

101 Tacit. Annal. i. 78. Two years afterwards, the reduction of the poor kingdom of Cappadocia gave Tiberius a pretence for diminishing the excise to one half; but the relief was of very flort duration.

the

the rewards of the veterans, and the extraordinary expences of CHAP. war. The ample revenue of the excife, though peculiarly appropriated to those uses, was found inadequate. To supply the deficiency, the emperor fuggested a new tax of five per cent. on all legacies and inheritances. But the nobles of Rome were more tenacious of property than of freedom. Their indignant murmurs were received by Augustus with his usual temper. He candidly referred the whole business to the senate, and exhorted them to provide for the public fervice by some other expedient of a less odious nature. They were divided and perplexed. He infinuated to them, that their obstinacy would oblige him to propose a general land-tax and capitation. They acquiefced in filence 102. The new imposition on legacies and inheritances was however mitigated by some restrictions. It did not take place unless the object was of a certain value, most probably of fifty or an hundred pieces of gold 103; nor could it be exacted from the nearest of kin on the father's fide 'o4. When the rights of nature and poverty were thus fecured, it feemed reasonable, that a stranger, or a distant relation, who acquired an unexpected accession of fortune, should cheerfully resign a twentieth part of it, for the benefit of the state 105.

Such a tax, plentiful as it must prove in every wealthy commu- Suited to the nity, was most happily suited to the situation of the Romans, who manners, could frame their arbitrary wills, according to the dictates of reason or caprice, without any reftraint from the modern fetters of entails and fettlements. From various causes the partiality of paternal affection often lost its influence over the stern patriots of the commonwealth, and the diffolute nobles of the empire; and if the father bequeathed to his fon the fourth part of his effate, he removed all

*c2 Dion Cassius, I. Iv. p. 794. I. Ivi. p. 825. fide, were not called to the succession. This

<sup>163</sup> The fum is only fixed by conjecture.
164 As the Roman Law subsided for many ages, the Cognati, or relations on the mother's 165 The fum is only fixed by conjecture.
166 The fum is only fixed by conjecture.
167 This infitution was gridually undermined by humanity, and finally abolished by Justinian.
168 The fum is only fixed by conjecture.
169 The fum is only fixed by conjecture.
160 The fum is only fixed by conjecture.
161 The fum is only fixed by conjecture.
162 The fum is only fixed by conjecture.
163 The fum is only fixed by conjecture.
164 The fum is only fixed by conjecture.
165 The fum is only

CHAP, ground of legal complaint 106. But a rich childless old man was a domestic tyrant, and his power increased with his years and infirmities. A fervile crowd, in which he frequently reckoned prætors and confuls, courted his fmiles, pampered his avarice, applauded his follies, ferved his passions, and waited with impatience for his death. The arts of attendance and flattery were formed into a most lucrative science, those who professed it acquired a peculiar appellation; and the whole city, according to the lively descriptions of fatire, was divided between two parties, the hunters and their game '07. Yet, while fo many unjust and extravagant wills were every day dictated by cunning, and subscribed by folly, a few were the refult of rational esteem and virtuous gratitude. Cicero, who had so often defended the lives and fortunes of his fellowcitizens, was rewarded with legacies to the amount of an hundred and feventy thousand pounds 108; nor do the friends of the younger Pliny feem to have been less generous to that amidble orator 109. Whatever was the motive of the testator, the treasury claimed, without distinction, the twentieth part of his estate; and in the course of two or three generations, the whole property of the fubject must have gradually passed through the coffers of the state.

Regulations of the emperors.

In the first and golden years of the reign of Nero, that prince, from a defire of popularity, and perhaps from a blind impulse of benevolence, conceived a wish of abolishing the oppression of the customs and excise. The wifest fenators applauded his magnanimity; but they diverted him from the execution of a defign, which would have diffolved the strength and resources of the republic ". Had it indeed been possible to realize this dream of fancy, such princes

Romani, I. ii.

&amp;c. Plin. 1. ii. Epist. 20.

<sup>103</sup> Cicero in Philipp. ii. c. 16. 109 See his cpiftles. Every fuch Will gave Loix, l. xii. c. 19.

<sup>106</sup> See Heineccius in the Antiquit. Juris him an occasion of displaying his reverence to the dead, and his justice to the living. He 107 Horat. I. ii. Sat. v. Petron. c. 116, reconciled both, in his behaviour to a fon who had been difinherited by his mother (v. 1.) 110 Tacit. Annal. xiii. 50. Esprit des as Trajan and the Antonines would furely have embraced with CHAP. ardour the glorious opportunity of conferring fo fignal an obligation on mankind. Satisfied, however, with alleviating the public burden, they attempted not to remove it. The mildness and precision of their laws ascertained the rule and measure of taxation. and protected the fubject of every rank against arbitrary interpretations, antiquated claims, and the infolent vexation of the farmers of the revenue ". For it is fomewhat fingular, that, in every age, the best and wisest of the Roman governors persevered in this pernicious method of collecting the principal branches at least of the excise and customs "12.

Caracalla.

The fentiments, and, indeed, the fituation of Caracalla, were very Edia of different from those of the Antonines. Inattentive, or rather averse to the welfare of his people, he found himself under the necessity of gratifying the infatiate avarice, which he had excited in the army. Of the feveral impolitions introduced by Augustus, the twentieth on inheritances and legacies was the most fruitful, as well as the most comprehensive. As its influence was not confined to Rome or Italy, the produce continually increased with the gradual extension of the ROMAN CITY. The new citizens, though charged, on equal terms 113, with the payment of new taxes, which had not affected them as fubjects, derived an ample compensation from the rank they obtained, the privileges they acquired, and the fair prospect of honours and fortune that was thrown open to their ambition. But the favour, which implied a distinction, was lost The freedom in the prodigality of Caracalla, and the reluctant provincials given to all were compelled to assume the vain title, and the real obliga- cials, for the

the provinpurpose of taxation.

mitted many millions of arrears.

VOL. I.

Dd

tions.

<sup>111</sup> See Pliny's Panegyric, the Augustan 113 The situation of the new citizens is history, and Burman. de Vectigal. passim.

minutely described by Pliny (Panegyric, c. 37, The tributes (properly so called) were 38, 39). Trajan published a law very much not farmed; fince the good princes often re- in their favour.

CHAP. tions, of Roman citizens. Nor was the rapacious fon of Severus contented with fuch a measure of taxation, as had appeared fufficient to his moderate predecessors. Instead of a twentieth, he exacted a tenth of all legacies and inheritances; and during his reign (for the ancient proportion was restored after his death) he crushed alike every part of the empire under the weight of his iron sceptre "4.

Temperary. reduction of the tribute.

When all the provincials became liable to the peculiar impositions of Roman citizens, they feemed to acquire a legal exemption from the tributes which they had paid in their former condition of subjects. Such were not the maxims of government adopted by Caracalla and his pretended fon. The old as well as the new taxes were, at the fame time, levied in the provinces. It was referved for the virtue of Alexander to relieve them in a great measure from this intolerable grievance, by reducing the tributes to a thirtieth part of the fum exacted at the time of his accession "5. It is impossible to conjecture the motive that engaged him to spare so trifling a remnant of the public evil; but the noxious weed, which had not been totally eradicated, again fprang up with the most luxuriant growth, and in the succeeding age darkened the Roman world with its deadly shade. In the course of this history, we shall be too often summoned to explain the land-tax, the capitation, and the heavy contributions of corn, wine, oil, and meat, which were exacted from the provinces, for the use of the court, the army, and the capital.

Confequences of the univerfal freedom of Rome.

As long as Rome and Italy were respected as the centre of government, a national spirit was preserved by the ancient, and insensibly imbibed by the adopted, citizens. The principal commands of the army were filled by men who had received a liberal education, were pieces of gold were coined by Alexander's 115 He who paid ten aurei, the usual tri- order. Hist. August. p. 127, with the com-

well

<sup>*14</sup> Dion, 1. Ixxvii. p. 1295.

bute, was charged with no more than the mentary of Salmasius. third part of an aureus, and proportional well inftructed in the advantages of laws and letters, and who had rifen, by equal fleps, through the regular fuccession of civil and military honours "." To their influence and example we may partly ascribe the modest obedience of the legions during the two first centuries of the Imperial history.

But when the last enclosure of the Roman constitution was trampled down by Caracalla, the separation of professions gradually succeeded to the distinction of ranks. The more polished citizens of the internal provinces were alone qualified to act as lawyers and magistrates. The rougher trade of arms was abandoned to the peasants and barbarians of the frontiers, who knew no country but their camp, no science but that of war, no civil laws, and scarcely those of military discipline. With bloody hands, savage manners, and desperate resolutions, they sometimes guarded, but much oftener subverted the throne of the emperors.

<sup>116</sup> See the lives of Agricola, Vefpafian, and indeed of all the eminent men of those Trajan, Severus, and his three competitors; times.

CHAP. VII.

The elevation and tyranny of Maximin.—Rebellion in Africa and Italy, under the authority of the Senate.

—Civil Wars and Seditions.—Violent Deaths of Maximin and his Son, of Maximus and Balbinus, and of the three Gordians.—Usurpation and secular Games of Philip.

C H A P. VII. The apparent ridicule F the various forms of government, which have prevailed in the world, an hereditary monarchy feems to prefent the fairest feope for ridicule. Is it possible to relate, without an indignant smile, that, on the father's decease, the property of a nation, like that of a drove of oxen, descends to his infant son, as yet unknown to mankind and to himself; and that the bravest warriors and the wisest statemen, relinquishing their natural right to empire, approach the royal cradle with bended knees and protestations of inviolable fidelity? Satire and declamation may paint these obvious topics in the most dazzling colours, but our more ferious thoughts will respect a useful prejudice, that establishes a rule of succession, independent of the passions of mankind; and we shall cheerfully acquiesce in any expedient which deprives the multitude of the dangerous, and indeed, the ideal, power of giving themselves a master.

and folid advantages of hereditary fuccession. In the cool shade of retirement, we may easily devise imaginary forms of government, in which the sceptre shall be constantly beflowed on the most worthy, by the free and incorrupt suffrage of the whole community. Experience overturns these airy fabrics, and teaches us, that, in a large fociety, the election of a monarch CHAP. can never devolve to the wifest, or to the most numerous, part of the people. The army is the only order of men fufficiently united to concur in the same sentiments, and powerful enough to impose them on the rest of their fellow-citizens: but the temper of foldiers, habituated at once to violence and to flavery, renders them very unfit guardians of a legal, or even a civil conflitution. Juffice, humanity, or political wisdom, are qualities they are too little acquainted with in themselves, to appreciate them in others. Valour will acquire their efteem, and liberality will purchase their fuffrage; but the first of these merits is often lodged in the most favage breafts; the latter can only exert itself at the expence of the public: and both may be turned against the possessor of the throne, by the ambition of a daring rival.

and

The superior prerogative of birth, when it has obtained the sanc- Want of it in tion of time and popular opinion, is the plainest and least invidious, the Roman empire proof all distinctions among mankind. The acknowledged right ductive of the extinguishes the hopes of faction, and the conscious security disarms the cruelty of the monarch. To the firm establishment of this idea, we owe the peaceful fuccession, and mild administration, of European monarchies. To the defect of it, we must attribute the frequent civil wars, through which an Afiatic Despot is obliged to cut his way to the throne of his fathers. Yet, even in the East, the sphere of contention is usually limited to the princes of the reigning house, and as foon as the more fortunate competitor has removed his brethren, by the fword and the bow-firing, he no longer entertains any jealoufy of his meaner subjects. But the Roman empire, after the authority of the senate had funk into contempt, was a vast scene of confusion. The royal, and even noble, families of the provinces, had long fince been led in triumph before the car of the haughty republicans. The ancient families of Rome had fuccessively fallen beneath the tyranny of the Cæsars; and whilst greatest cala-

CHAP, those princes were shackled by the forms of a commonwealth, and disappointed by the repeated failure of their posterity', it was impossible that any idea of hereditary succession should have taken root in the minds of their subjects. The right to the throne, which none could claim from birth, every one affumed from merit. The daring hopes of ambition were fet loofe from the falutary restraints of law and prejudice; and the meanest of mankind might, without folly, entertain a hope of being raifed by valour and fortune to a rank in the army, in which a fingle crime would enable him to wrest the sceptre of the world from his feeble and unpopular master. After the murder of Alexander Severus, and the elevation of Maximin, no emperor could think himself safe upon the throne, and every barbarian peafant of the frontier might aspire to that august, but dangerous station.

Birth and fortunes of Maximin.

About thirty-two years before that event, the emperor Severus, returning from an eastern expedition, halted in Thrace, to celebrate, with military games, the birth-day of his younger fon, Geta. The country flocked in crowds to behold their fovereign, and a young barbarian of gigantic stature earnestly solicited, in his rude dialect, that he might be allowed to contend for the prize of wrestling. As the pride of discipline would have been disgraced in the overthrow of a Roman foldier by a Thracian peafant, he was matched with the floutest followers of the camp, fixteen of whom he fuccessively laid on the ground. His victory was rewarded by fome trifling gifts, and a permission to inlist in the troops. The next day, the happy barbarian was diftinguished above a crowd of recruits, dancing and exulting after the fashion of his country. As foon as he perceived that he had attracted the emperor's notice, he inflantly ran up to his horse, and followed him on foot, without the least appearance of fatigue, in a long and rapid career. "Thra- C H A P. "cian," faid Severus, with aftonishment, "art thou disposed to " wreftle after thy race?" Most willingly, Sir, replied the unwearied youth, and, almost in a breath, overthrew feven of the strongest soldiers in the army. A gold collar was the prize of his matchless vigour and activity, and he was immediately appointed to ferve in the horfe-guards who always attended on the person of the fovereign 2.

There had been no example of three fuc- The marriages of the Cæfars (notwithstandceffive generations on the throne; only three ing the permission, and the frequent practice inflances of fons who fucceeded their fathers. of divorces) were generally unfruitful.

Maximin, for that was his name, though born on the territories His military of the empire, descended from a mixed race of barbarians. His honours. father was a Goth, and his mother, of the nation of the Alani. He displayed, on every occasion, a valour equal to his strength; and his native fierceness was soon tempered or disguised by the knowledge of the world. Under the reign of Severus and his fon, he obtained the rank of centurion, with the favour and esteem of both those princes, the former of whom was an excellent judge of merit. Gratitude forbade Maximin to serve under the affaffin of Caracalla. Honour taught him to decline the effeminate infults of Elagabalus. On the accession of Alexander he returned to court, and was placed by that prince, in a station useful to the service, and honourable to himself. The fourth legion, to which he was appointed tribune, foon became, under his care, the best disciplined of the whole army. With the general applause of the soldiers, who bestowed on their favourite hero the names of Ajax and Hercules, he was fuccessively promoted to the first military command, and had not he still retained too much of his favage origin, the emperor might perhaps have given his own fifter in marriage to the fon of Maximin 4.

Inflead

&lt;sup>3</sup> Hift. August. p. 138.

these authors, it should seem, that Maximin of his military promotions. had the particular command of the Triballian . See the original letter of Alexander Sehorse, with the general commission of disci- verus, Hist, August, p. 149.

plining the recruits of the whole army. His <sup>3</sup> Hift. August. p. 140. Herodian, I. vi. Biographer ought to have marked, with more p. 223. Aurelius Victor. By comparing care, his exploits, and the successive steps

C H A P. VII. Conspiracy of Maximin.

Instead of securing his fidelity, these favours served only to inflame the ambition of the Thracian peafant, who decined his fortune inadequate to his merit, as long as he was conftrained to acknowledge a fuperior. Though a stranger to real wisdom, he was not devoid of a felfish cunning, which shewed him, that the emperor had loft the affection of the army, and taught him to improve their discontent to his own advantage. It is easy for faction and calumny to shed their poison on the administration of the best of princes, and to accuse even their virtues, by artfully confounding them with those vices to which they bear the nearest affinity. The troops liftened with pleafure to the emissaries of Maximin. They blushed at their own ignominious patience, which during thirteen years had supported the vexatious discipline imposed by an effeminate Syrian, the timid flave of his mother and of the fenate. It was time they cried, to cast away that useless phantom of the civil power, and to elect for their prince and general a real foldier, educated in camps, exercised in war, who would affert the glory, and distribute among his companions the treasures, of the empire. great army was at that time affembled on the banks of the Rhine, under the command of the emperor himfelf, who, almost immediately after his return from the Persian war, had been obliged to march against the barbarians of Germany. The important care of training and reviewing the new levies was intrufted to Maximin. One day as he entered the field of exercise, the troops, either from a sudden impulse or a formed conspiracy, saluted him emperor, silenced by their loud acclamations his obstinate refusal, and hastened to confummate their rebellion by the murder of Alexander Severus.

A. D. 235. March 19.

Murder of Alexander Severus. The circumstances of his death are variously related. The writers, who suppose that he died in ignorance of the ingratitude and ambition of Maximin, affirm, that, after taking a frugal repast in the fight of the army, he retired to sleep, and that, about the seventh hour of the day, a party of his own guards broke into the Imperial Imperial tent, and, with many wounds, affaffinated their virtuous C H A P. and unfuspecting prince '. If we credit another, and indeed a more probable account, Maximin was invested with the purple by a numerous detachment, at the distance of several miles from the headquarters; and he trusted for success rather to the secret wishes than to the public declarations of the great army. Alexander had fufficient time to awaken a faint fense of loyalty among his troops; but their reluctant professions of fidelity quickly vanished on the appearance of Maximin, who declared himself the friend and advocate of the military order, and was unanimously acknowledged emperor of the Romans by the applauding legions. The fon of Mamæa, betrayed and deferted, withdrew into his tent, defirous at least to conceal his approaching fate from the infults of the multitude. He was foon followed by a tribune and fome centurions, the ministers of death; but, instead of receiving with manly resolution the inevitable stroke, his unavailing cries and entreaties disgraced the last moments of his life, and converted into contempt some portion of the just pity which his innocence and misfortunes must inspire. His mother Mamaa, whose pride and avarice he loudly accused as the cause of his ruin, perished with her son. The most faithful of his friends were facrificed to the first fury of the foldiers. Others were referved for the more deliberate cruelty of the usurper, and those who experienced the mildest treatment were stripped of their employments, and ignominiously driven from the court and army 6.

The former tyrants, Caligula and Nero, Commodus and Caracalla, Tyranny of were all diffolute and unexperienced youths 7, educated in the purple, and corrupted by the pride of empire, the luxury of Rome, and the perfidious voice of flattery. The cruelty of Maximin was derived from a different fource, the fear of contempt. Though he depended on the attachment of the foldiers, who loved him for virtucs like their own, he was conscious that his mean and barbarian origin, his favage appearance, and his total ignorance of the arts and inflitutions of civil life 8, formed a very unfavourable contrast with the amiable manners of the unhappy Alexander. He remembered, that, in his humbler fortune, he had often waited before the door of the haughty nobles of Rome, and had been denied admittance by the infolence of their flaves. He recollected too the friendship of a few who had relieved his poverty, and affifted his rifing hopes. But those who had spurned, and those who had protected the Thracian, were guilty of the same crime, the knowledge of his original obscurity. For this crime many were put to death; and by the execution of feveral of his benefactors, Maximin published, in characters of blood, the indelible history of his baseness and ingratitude 9.

<sup>5</sup> Hist. August. p. 135. I have fostened persuade the disaffected soldiers to commit the fome of the most improbable circumstances of murder. this wretched biographer. From this ill worded narration, it should feem, that the prince's buffoon having accidentally entered the tent, and awakened the flumbering monarch, the fear of punishment urged him to dus nineteen, and Nero no more than seventeen.

<sup>6</sup> Herodian, 1. vi. p. 223-227. <sup>7</sup> Caligula, the eldest of the four, was only twenty-five years of age when he afcended the throne; Caracalla was twenty-three, Commo-

CHAP. VII.

The dark and fanguinary foul of the tyrant, was open to every fuspicion against those among his subjects who were the most diftinguished by their birth or merit. Whenever he was alarmed with the found of treason, his cruelty was unbounded and unrelenting. A conspiracy against his life was either discovered or imagined, and Magnus, a confular fenator, was named as the principal author of it. Without a witness, without a trial, and without an opportunity of defence, Magnus, with four thousand of his supposed accomplices, were put to death; Italy and the whole empire were infested with innumerable fpies and informers. On the flightest acculation, the first of the Roman nobles, who had governed provinces, commanded armies, and been adorned with the confular and triumphal CHAP. ornaments, were chained on the public carriages, and hurried away to the emperor's prefence. Confifcation, exile, or fimple death, were esteemed uncommon instances of his lenity. Some of the unfortunate sufferers he ordered to be fewed up in the hides of slaughtered animals, others to be exposed to wild beafts, others again to be beaten to death with clubs. During the three years of his reign. he disdained to visit either Rome or Italy. His camp, occasionally, removed from the banks of the Rhine to those of the Danube, was the feat of his ftern defpotifm, which trampled on every principle of law and justice, and was supported by the avowed power of the fword 10. No man of noble birth, elegant accomplishments, or knowledge of civil business, was suffered near his person; and the court of a Roman emperor revived the idea of those ancient chiefs of flaves and gladiators, whose favage power had left a deep impression of terror and deteflation ".

<sup>8</sup> It appears that he was totally ignorant of effential part of every liberal education.

<sup>9</sup> Hist. August. p. 141. Herodian, l. vii. the Greek language; which, from its uni- p. 237. The latter of these historians has verfal use in conversation and letters, was an been most unjustly censured for sparing the vices of Maximin.

As long as the cruelty of Maximin was confined to the illustrious Oppression fenators, or even to the bold adventurers, who in the court or army vinces. expose themselves to the caprice of fortune, the body of the people viewed their fufferings with indifference, or perhaps with pleafure. But the tyrant's avarice, stimulated by the infatiate desires of the foldiers, at length attacked the public property. Every city of the empire was possessed of an independent revenue, destined to purchase corn for the multitude, and to supply the expences of the games and entertainments. By a fingle act of authority, the whole mass of wealth was at once confiscated for the use of the Imperia

The wife of Maximin, by infinuating from the medals, that Paullina was the name wife counfels with female gentleness, fometimes brought back the tyrant to the way of of Diva, that the died before Maximin. cellinus, I. xiv. c. 1. where he alludes to the U. et P. N. tom. ii. p. 300. fact which he had more fully related under "He was compared to Spartacus and Athethe reign of the Gordians. We may collect nio. Hift. August. p. 141.

truth and humanity. See Ammianus Mar- (Valefius ad loc. cit. Ammian.) Spanheim de

CHAP. treasury. The temples were stripped of their most valuable offerings of gold and filver, and the statues of gods, heroes, and emperors were melted down and coined into money. These impious orders could not be executed without tumults and massacres, as in many places the people chose rather to die in the defence of their altars. than to behold in the midft of peace their cities exposed to the rapine and cruelty of war. The foldiers themselves, among whom this facrilegious plunder was distributed, received it with a blush; and, hardened as they were in acts of violence, they dreaded the just reproaches of their friends and relations. Throughout the Roman world a general cry of indignation was heard, imploring vengeance on the common enemy of human kind; and at length, by an act of private oppression, a peaceful and unarmed province was driven into rebellion against him 12.

Revolt in Africa. A. D. 237. April.

The procurator of Africa was a fervant worthy of fuch a master, who confidered the fines and confifcations of the rich as one of the most fruitful branches of the Imperial revenue. An iniquitous fentence had been pronounced against some opulent youths of that country, the execution of which would have stripped them of far the greater part of their patrimony. In this extremity, a refolution that must either complete or prevent their ruin, was dictated by despair. A respite of three days, obtained with difficulty from the rapacious treasurer, was employed in collecting from their estates a great number of flaves and peafants, blindly devoted to the commands of their lords, and armed with the ruftic weapons of clubs and axes. The leaders of the conspiracy, as they were admitted to the audience of the procurator, stabbed him with the daggers concealed under their garments, and, by the affiftance of their tumultuary train, feized on the little town of Thysdrus ", and erected 13 In the fertile territory of Byzacium, one and with a fine amphitheatre, which is still in hundred and fifty miles to the fouth of Car- a very perfect state. See Itinerar. Wesseling. thage. This city was decorated, probably p. 59. and Shaw's Travels, p. 117.

<sup>12</sup> Herodian, I.vii. p. 238. Zozim. I.i. p. 15. by the Gordians, with the title of colony, the standard of rebellion against the sovereign of the Roman em- CHAP. pire. They rested their hopes on the hatred of mankind against Maximin, and they judiciously resolved to oppose to that detefted tyrant, an emperor whose mild virtues had already acquired the love and esteem of the Romans, and whose authority over the province would give weight and stability to the enterprise. Gordianus, their proconful, and the object of their choice, refused, with unfeigned reluctance, the dangerous honour, and begged with tears that they would fuffer him to terminate in peace a long and innocent life, without staining his feeble age with civil blood. Their menaces compelled him to accept the Imperial purple, his only refuge indeed against the jealous cruelty of Maximin; fince, according to the reasoning of tyrants, those who have been esteemed worthy of the throne deferve death, and those who deliberate have already rebelled 14.

> and elevations Gordians.

The family of Gordianus was one of the most illustrious of the Character Roman fenate. On the father's fide, he was descended from the of the two Gracchi; on his mother's, from the emperor Trajan. A great estate enabled him to support the dignity of his birth, and, in the enjoyment of it, he displayed an elegant taste and beneficent disposition. The palace in Rome, formerly inhabited by the great Pompey, had been, during feveral generations, in the possession of Gordian's family 15. It was distinguished by ancient trophies of naval victories, and decorated with the works of modern painting. His villa on the road to Præneste, was celebrated for baths of singular beauty and extent. for three stately rooms of an hundred feet in length, and for a magnificent portico, supported by two hundred columns of the four most 14 Herodian, l. vii. p. 239. Hist. August. and even encouraged the rich senators to p. 153.

15 Hift. August. p. 152. The celebrated house of Pompey in carinis, was usurped by Marc Antony, and confequently became, af- house came into the possession of Gordian's ter the Triumvir's death, a part of the Im- great grandfather. perial domain. The emperor Trajan allowed purchase those magnificent and useless palaces (Plin. Panegyric. c. 50.); and it may feem probable, that on this occasion, Pompey's curious

C H A P. curious and coftly forts of marble 16. The public shows exhibited at his expence, and in which the people were entertained with many hundreds of wild beafts and gladiators '7, feem to furpals the fortune of a fubica, and whilft the liberality of other magistrates was confined to a few folemn festivals in Rome, the magnificence of Gordian was repeated, when he was ædile, every month in the year, and extended, during his confulfhip, to the principal cities of Italy. He was twice elevated to the last mentioned dignity, by Caracalla and by Alexander; for he possessed the uncommon talent of acquiring the esteem of virtuous princes, without alarming the jealoufy of tyrants. His long life was innocently spent in the study of letters and the peaceful honours of Rome; and, till he was named proconful of Africa by the voice of the fenate and the approbation of Alexander 18, he appears prudently to have declined the command of armies and the government of provinces. As long as that emperor lived, Africa was happy under the administration of his worthy representative; after the barbarous Maximin had usurped the throne, Gordianus alleviated the miseries which he was unable to prevent. When he reluctantly accepted the purple, he was above fourfcore years olda last and valuable remains of the happy age of the Antonines, whose virtues he revived in his own conduct, and celebrated in an elegant poem of thirty books. With the venerable proconful, his fon, who had accompanied him into Africa as his lieutenant, was rystian, and the Synnadian. The colours of Roman marbles have been faintly described and imperfectly diffinguished. It appears, however, that the Carvilian was a fea green, and that the marble of Synnada was white mixed with oval fpots of purple. See Salmasius ad Hist. August. p. 164.

likewife

<sup>17</sup> Hift. August. p. 151, 152. He sometimes gave five hundred pair of Gladiators, never less than one hundred and fifty. He once gave for the use of the Circus one hun-

<sup>16</sup> The Claudian, the Numidian, the Ca- dred Sicilian, and as many Cappadocian horses. The animals designed for hunting, were chiefly bears, boars, bulls, ftags, elks, wild affes, &c. Elephants and lions feem to have been appropriated to Imperial magnificence.

<sup>18</sup> See the original letter, in the Augustan History, p. 152, which at once shews Alexander's respect for the authority of the senate, and his esteem for the proconful appointed by that affembly.

likewise declared emperor. His manners were less pure, but his CHAP. character was equally amiable with that of his father. Twenty two acknowledged concubines, and a library of fixty-two thousand volumes, attested the variety of his inclinations; and from the productions which he left behind him, it appears that the former as well as the latter were defigned for use rather than for oftentation 19. The Roman people acknowledged in the features of the younger Gordian the refemblance of Scipio Africanus, recollected with pleasure that his mother was the grand-daughter of Antoninus Pius, and rested the public hope on those latent virtues which had hitherto, as they fondly imagined, lain concealed in the luxurious indolence of a private life.

As foon as the Gordians had appealed the first tumult of a popu- They folicit lar election, they removed their court to Carthage. They were received with the acclamations of the Africans, who honoured their authority. virtues, and who, fince the vifit of Hadrian, had never beheld the majesty of a Roman emperor. But these vain acclamations neither strengthened nor confirmed the title of the Gordians. They were induced by principle, as well as interest to folicit the approbation of the fenate; and a deputation of the noblest provincials was fent, without delay, to Rome, to relate and justify the conduct of their countrymen, who, having long fuffered with patience, were at length refolved to act with vigour. The letters of the new princes were modest and respectful, excusing the necessity which had obliged them to accept the Imperial title; but fubmitting their election and their fate to the supreme judgment of the senate 20.

The inclinations of the fenate were neither doubtful nor divided. The fenate The birth and noble alliances of the Gordians, had intimately election of connected them with the most illustrious houses of Rome. Their the Gordians; fortune had created many dependants in that affembly, their merit

<sup>19</sup> By each of his concubines, the younger out, were by no means contemptible. Gordian left three or four children. His and Herodian, I. vii. p. 243. Hift. August. literary productions, though less numer- p. 144. had

CHAP, had acquired many friends. Their mild administration opened the flattering prospect of the restoration, not only of the civil but even of the republican government. The terror of military violence, which had first obliged the senate to forget the murder of Alexander, and to ratify the election of a barbarian peafant ", now produced a contrary effect, and provoked them to affert the injured rights of freedom and humanity. The hatred of Maximin towards the fenate was declared and implacable; the tamest submission had not appealed his fury, the most cautious innocence would not remove his fuspicions; and even the care of their own fafety urged them to share the fortune of an enterprise, of which (if unsuccessful) they were fure to be the first victims. These considerations, and perhaps others of a more private nature, were debated in a previous conference of the confuls and the magistrates. As soon as their resolution was decided, they convoked in the temple of Castor the whole body of the fenate, according to an ancient form of fecrecy 22, calculated to awaken their attention, and to conceal their decrees. " Confcript fathers," faid the conful Syllanus, " the two Gordians, " both of confular dignity, the one your proconful, the other your " lieutenant, have been declared emperors by the general confent " of Africa. Let us return thanks," he boldly continued, " to the " youth of Thysdrus; let us return thanks to the faithful people " of Carthage, our generous deliverers from an horrid monster .-"Why do you hear me thus coolly, thus timidly? Why do you cast "those anxious looks on each other? why hesitate? Maximin " is a public enemy! may his enmity foon expire with him, and " may we long enjoy the prudence and felicity of Gordian the fa-" ther, the valour and constancy of Gordian the son "!" The existimant; inermes armato resistere approbaverunt. Aurelius Victor.

<sup>22</sup> Even the fervants of the house, the

<sup>21</sup> Quod tamen patres dum periculosum are obliged to the Augustan History, p. 150. for preserving this curious example of the old discipline of the commonwealth.

<sup>23</sup> This spirited speech, translated from the fcribes, &c. were excluded, and their office Augustan historian, p. 156, seems transcribed by was filled by the fenators themselves. We him from the original registers of the senate. noble noble ardour of the conful revived the languid spirit of the senate. By an unanimous decree the election of the Gordians was ratified, Maximin, his fon, and his adherents, were pronounced enemies of Maximin a their country, and liberal rewards were offered to whofoever had the courage and good fortune to destroy them.

CHAP. VII.

public ene-

command of

During the Emperor's absence, a detachment of the Prætorian Assumes the guards remained at Rome, to protect or rather to command the Rome and capital. The præfect Vitalianus had fignalized his fidelity to Maximin, by the alacrity with which he had obeyed, and even prevented, the cruel mandates of the tyrant. His death alone could refcue the authority of the senate and the lives of the senators, from a state of danger and suspence. Before their resolves had transpired, a quæstor and fome tribunes were commissioned to take his devoted life. They executed the order with equal boldness and fuccess; and with their bloody daggers in their hands, ran through the ffreets, proclaiming to the people and the foldiers, the news of the happy revolution. The enthusiasm of liberty was seconded by the promise of a large donative, in lands and money; the statues of Maximin were thrown down; the capital of the empire acknowledged, with transport, the authority of the two Gordians and the fenate 24; and the example of Rome was followed by the rest of Italy.

A new spirit had arisen in that assembly, whose long patience had and prepares been infulted by wanton despotism and military licence. fenate assumed the reins of government, and with a calm intrepidity, prepared to vindicate by arms the cause of freedom. Among the consular senators recommended by their merit and services to the favour of the emperor Alexander, it was easy to select twenty, not unequal to the command of an army, and the conduct of a war. To these was the defence of Italy intrusted. Each was appointed to act in his respective department, authorized to enrol and 24 Herodian, I. vii. p. 244.

VOL. I.

Ff

CHAP. discipline the Italian youth; and instructed to fortify the ports and highways, against the impending invasion of Maximin. A number of deputies, chosen from the most illustrious of the fenatorian and equestrian orders, were dispatched at the same time to the governor of the feveral provinces, earneftly conjuring them to fly to the affistance of their country, and to remind the nations of their ancient ties of friendship with the Roman senate and people. The general respect with which these deputies were received, and the zeal of Italy and the provinces in favour of the fenate, fufficiently prove that the fubjects of Maximin were reduced to that uncommon diffress, in which the body of the people has more to fear from oppression than from resistance. The consciousness of that melancholy truth, inspires a degree of persevering fury, seldom to be found in those civil wars which are artificially supported for the benefit of a few factious and defigning leaders 25.

Defeat and death of the two Gordi-A. D. 237. 3d July.

But while the cause of the Gordians was embraced with fuch diffusive ardour, the Gordians themselves were no more. feeble court of Carthage was alarmed with the rapid approach of Capelianus, governor of Mauritania, who, with a small band of Veterans, and a fierce hoft of barbarians, attacked a faithful, but unwarlike province. The younger Gordian fallied out to meet the enemy at the head of a few guards, and a numerous undisciplined multitude, educated in the peaceful luxury of Carthage. His useless valour ferved only to procure him an honourable death, in the field of battle. His aged father, whose reign had not exceeded thirty-fix days, put an end to his life on the first news of the defeat. Carthage, deflitute of defence, opened her gates to the conqueror, and Africa was exposed to the rapacious cruelty of a flave, obliged to fatisfy his unrelenting mafter with a large account of blood and treafure 26,

<sup>25</sup> Herodian, I. vii. p. 247. I. viii. p. 277. 26 Herodian, I. vii. p. 254. Hist. August. Hift. August. p. 156-158. p. 150-160. We may observe, that one month

CHAP. VII. Election of Maximus and Balbinus by the fenate. 9th July.

The fate of the Gordians filled Rome with just, but unexpected terror. The fenate convoked in the temple of Concord, affected to transact the common business of the day; and seemed to decline, with trembling anxiety, the confideration of their own, and the public danger. A filent confternation prevailed on the affembly, till a fenator, of the name and family of Trajan, awakened his brethren from their fatal lethargy. He represented to them, that the choice of cautious dilatory measures had been long fince out of their power; that Maximin, implacable by nature, and exasperated by injuries, was advancing towards Italy, at the head of the military force of the empire; and that their only remaining alternative, was either to meet him bravely in the field, or tamely to expect the tortures and ignominious death referved for unfuccefsful rebellion. "We have loft, continued he, two excellent princes; but " unless we defert ourselves, the hopes of the republic have not " perished with the Gordians. Many are the fenators, whose virtues " have deferved, and whose abilities would fustain, the Imperial " dignity. Let us elect two emperors, one of whom may con-" duct the war against the public enemy, whilst his colleague " remains at Rome to direct the civil administration. I cheerfully " expose myself to the danger and envy of the nomination, and " give my vote in favour of Maximus and Balbinus. Ratify my " choice, confeript fathers, or appoint in their place, others more " worthy of the empire." The general apprehension silenced the whispers of jealousy; the merit of the candidates was universally acknowledged; and the house resounded with the sincere acclamations, of " long life and victory to the emperors Max-" imus and Balbinus. You are happy in the judgment of the month and fix days, for the reign of Gor-dian, is a just correction of Casaubon and the two Gordians perished by a tempest in the Panvinius, instead of the absurd reading of midst of their navigation. A strange ignorance one year and fix months. See Commentar. of history, or a strange abuse of metaphors!

C H A P. VII.

" fenate; may the republic be happy under your administra-

The virtues and the reputation of the new emperors justified the most fanguine hopes of the Romans. The various nature of their talents feemed to appropriate to each his peculiar department of peace and war, without leaving room for jealous emulation. Balbinus was an admired orator, a poet of diftinguished fame, and a wife magistrate, who had exercised with innocence and applause the civil jurisdiction in almost all the interior provinces of the empire. His birth was noble 28, his fortune affluent, his manners liberal and affable. In him, the love of pleasure was corrected by a fense of dignity, nor had the habits of ease deprived him of a capacity for business. The mind of Maximus was formed in a rougher mould. By his valour and abilities he had raifed himfelf from the meanest origin to the first employments of the state and army. His victories over the Sarmatians and the Germans, the aufterity of his life, and the rigid impartiality of his justice, whilst he was præfect of the city, commanded the esteem of a people, whose affections were engaged in favour of the more amiable Balbinus. The two colleagues had both been confuls, (Balbinus had twice enjoyed that honourable office) both had been named among the twenty lieutenants of the fenate, and fince the one was fixty and the other feventy-four years old 19, they had both attained the full maturity of age and experience.

After

<sup>27</sup> See the Augustan History, p. 166, from the registers of the senate; the date is confessedly faulty, but the coincidence of the Apollinarian games enables us to correct it.

<sup>33</sup> He was defeended from Cornelius Balbus, a noble Spaniard, and the adopted fon of Theophanes the Greek hiftorian. Balbus obtained the freedom of Rome by the favour of Pompey, and preferred it by the cloquence of Cicero (fee Orat, pro Cornel, Balbo). The friendship of Caster, (to whom he rendered the moft important fecret fervices in the civil war) raifed him to the confulfilip and the pontificate, honours never yet possessed by a stranger. The nephew of this Balbus triumphed over the Garamantes. See Dictionaire de Bayle au mot Balbus, where he distinguishes the several persons of that name, and restlises, with his usual accuracy, the mistakes of former writers concerning them.

of Cicero (fee Orat, pro Cornel, Balbo). The friendship of Casir, (to whom he rendered pendance is to be had on the authority of a moderate

After the fenate had conferred on Maximus and Balbinus an CHAP. equal portion of the confular and tribunitian powers, the title of Fathers of their Country and the joint office of Supreme Pontiff, they Rome. The ascended to the Capitol, to return thanks to the gods, protectors of Gordian is Rome ". The folemn rites of facrifice were diffurbed by a fedition of the people. The licentious multitude neither loved the rigid Maximus, nor did they fufficiently fear the mild and humane Balbinus. Their increasing numbers furrounded the temple of Jupiter; with obffinate clamours they afferted their inherent right of confenting to the election of their fovereign, and demanded, with an apparent moderation, that, befides the two emperors chosen by the fenate, a third should be added of the family of the Gordians, as a just return of gratitude to those princes who had facrificed their lives for the republic. At the head of the city-guards, and the youth of the equestrian order, Maximus and Balbinus attempted to cut their way through the feditious multitude. The multitude, armed with flicks and stones, drove them back into the Capitol. It is prudent to yield? when the contest, whatever may be the issue of it, must be fatal to both parties. A boy, only thirteen years of age, the grandfon of the elder, and nephew of the younger, Gordian, was produced to

VII. Tumult at declared Cæfar.

Whilft in Rome and Africa revolutions succeeded each other with fuch amazing rapidity, the mind of Maximin was agitated by the attack the femost furious passions. He is said to have received the news of the their empe-prepared to defend Italy against the common enemy.

the people, invested with the ornaments and title of Cæfar. The tumult was appealed by this easy condescension; and the two emperors, as foon as they had been peaceably acknowledged in Rome, > prepares to nate and history of the third century, that he creates feveral imaginary emperors, and confounds those who really existed.

3º Herodian, l. vii. p. 256, supposes that moderate Greek, fo grofsly ignorant of the the fenate was at first convoked in the Capitol, and is very eloquent on the occasion. The Augustan History, p. 116, seems much more authentic.

rebellion.

C II A P. rebellion of the Gordians, and of the decree of the fenate against him, not with the temper of a man, but the rage of a wild beaft; which, as it could not discharge itself on the distant senate, threatened the life of his fon, of his friends, and of all who ventured to approach his person. The grateful intelligence of the death of the Gordians, was quickly followed by the affurance that the fenate, laying afide all hopes of pardon or accommodation, had fubflituted in their room two emperors, with whose merit he could not be unacquainted. Revenge was the only confolation left to Maximin, and revenge could only be obtained by arms. The strength of the legions had been assembled by Alexander from all parts of the empire. Three fuccefsful campaigns against the Germans and the Sarmatians, had raifed their fame, confirmed their discipline, and even increased their numbers, by filling the ranks with the flower of the barbarian youth. The life of Maximin had been spent in war, and the candid feverity of history cannot refuse him the valour of a foldier, or even the abilities of an experienced general ". It might naturally be expected, that a prince of fuch a character, inflead of fuffering the rebellion to gain flability by delay, should immediately have marched from the banks of the Danube to those of the Tyber, and that his victorious army, infligated by contempt for the fenate, and eager to gather the spoils of Italy, should have burned with impatience to finish the easy and lucrative conquest. Yet as far as we can trust to the obscure chronology of that period 32, it appears during the Capitoline games. Herodian, 1. viii. p. 285. The authority of Cenforinus (de Die Natali, c. 18.) enables us to fix thofe games with certainty to the year 238, but leaves us in ignorance of the month or day. 2. The election of Gordian by the fenate, is fixt, with equal certainty, to the 27th of 32 The careleffness of the writers of that May; but we are at a loss to discover, wheage leaves us in a fingular perplexity. 1. We ther it was in the fame or the preceding year. know that Maximus and Balbinus were killed Tillemont and Muratori, who maintain the

<sup>31</sup> In Herodian, 1. vii. p. 249, and in the Augustan History, we have three several orations of Maximin to his army, on the rebellion of Africa and Rome: M. de Tillemont has very juffly observed, that they neither agree with each other, nor with truth. Hiftoire des empereurs, tom. iii. p. 799.

that the operations of some foreign war deferred the Italian expedi- CHAP. tion till the enfuing fpring. From the prudent conduct of Maximin, we may learn that the favage features of his character have been exaggerated by the pencil of party, that his passions, however impetuous, submitted to the force of reason, and that the barbarian possessed fomething of the generous spirit of Sylla, who subdued the enemies of Rome, before he fuffered himself to revenge his private injuries ".

of

When the troops of Maximin, advancing in excellent order, Marches into arrived at the foot of the Julian Alps, they were terrified by the A.D. 238. filence and defolation that reigned on the frontiers of Italy. villages and open towns had been abandoned on their approach by the inhabitants, the cattle was driven away, the provisions removed, or deftroyed, the bridges broke down, nor was any thing left which could afford either shelter or subfishence to an invader. Such had been the wife orders of the generals of the fenate; whose defign was to protract the war, to ruin the army of Maximin by the flow operation of famine, and to confume his strength in the fieges of the principal cities of Italy, which they had plentifully flored with men and provisions from the deferted country. Aquileia Siege of received and withflood the first shock of the invasion. The streams that iffue from the head of the Hadriatic gulf, swelled by the melting of the winter fnows 14, opposed an unexpected obstacle to the arms two opposite opinions, bring into the field a defultory troop of authorities, conjectures, and probabilities. The one feems to draw out, the other to contract the feries of events, between those periods, more than can be well reconciled to reason and history. Yet it is neceffary to chuse between them.

33 Velleius Paterculus, I. ii. c. 24. The prefident de Montesquieu (in his dialogue between Sylla and Eucrates) expresses the fentiments of the dictator, in a spirited and even a fublime manner.

34 Muratori (Annali d'Italia, tom. ii. p. 294.) thinks the melting of the fnows fuits better with the months of June or July, than with those of February. The opinion of a man who passed his life between the Alps and the Apennines, is undoubtedly of great weight; yet I observe, 1. That the long winter, of which Muratori takes advantage, is to be found only in the Latin version, and not in the Greek text of Herodian. 2. That the viciffitude of funs and rains, 'to which the foldiers of Maximin were exposed, (Hero-

CHAP. of Maximin. At length, on a fingular bridge, constructed with art and difficulty, of large hogheads, he transported his army to the opposite bank, rooted up the beautiful vineyards in the neighbourhood of Aquileia, demolished the suburbs, and employed the timber of the buildings in the engines and towers, with which on every fide he attacked the city. The walls, fallen to decay, during the fecurity of a long peace, had been haftily repaired on this fudden emergency; but the firmest defence of Aquileia confisted in the constancy of the citizens; all ranks of whom, instead of being difmayed, were animated by the extreme danger, and their knowledge of the tyrant's unrelenting temper. Their courage was supported and directed by Crispinus and Menophilus, two of the twenty lieutenants of the fenate, who, with a fmall body of regular troops, had thrown themselves into the besieged place. The army of Maximin was repulfed in repeated attacks, his machines destroyed by showers of artificial fire, and the generous enthusiasm of the Aquileians was exalted into a confidence of fuccess, by the opinion, that Belenus, their tutelar deity, combated in person in the defence of his diffressed worshippers 35.

Conduct of Maximus.

The emperor Maximus, who had advanced as far as Ravenna, to fecure that important place, and to hasten the military preparations, beheld the event of the war in the more faithful mirror of reason and policy. He was too sensible, that a single town could not refift the persevering efforts of a great army; and he dreaded, left the enemy, tired with the obstinate resistance of Aquileia, dian, 1 viii. p. 277.) denotes the fpring rather than the fummer. We may observe likewife, that thefe feveral streams, as they melted into one, composed the Timavus, so poetically (in every fense of the word) deferibed by Virgil. They are about twelve miles to the east of Aquileia. See Cluver. Italia Antiqua, tom. i. p. 189, &c.

35 Herodian, I. viii. p. 272. The Celtic deity was supposed to be Apollo, and received under that name the thanks of the fenate. A temple was likewife built to Venus the bald, in honour of the women of Aquileia, who had given up their hair to make ropes for the military engines.

thould

should on a sudden relinquish the fruitless siege, and march directly CHAP. towards Rome. The fate of the empire and the cause of freedom must then be committed to the chance of a battle; and what arms could he oppose to the veteran legions of the Rhine and Danube? Some troops newly levied among the generous but enervated youth of Italy; and a body of German auxiliaries, on whose firmness, in the hour of trial, it was dangerous to depend. In the midst of these just alarms, the stroke of domestic conspiracy punished the crimes of Maximin, and delivered Rome and the fenate from the calamities that would furely have attended the victory of an enraged barbarian.

The people of Aquileia had fcarcely experienced any of the com- Murder of mon miseries of a siege, their magazines were plentifully supplied, his son. and feveral fountains within the walls affured them of an inex- A.D. 233. haustible resource of fresh water. The foldiers of Maximin were, on the contrary, exposed to the inclemency of the season, the contagion of disease, and the horrors of famine. The open country was ruined, the rivers filled with the flain, and polluted with blood. A fpirit of despair and disaffection began to diffuse itself among the troops; and as they were cut off from all intelligence, they eafily believed that the whole empire had embraced the cause of the senate, and that they were left as devoted victims to perish under the impregnable walls of Aquileia. The fierce temper of the tyrant was exasperated by disappointments, which he imputed to the cowardice of his army; and his wanton and ill-timed cruelty, instead of striking terror, inspired hatred and a just defire of revenge. A party of Prætorian guards, who trembled for their wives and children in the camp of Alba, near Rome, executed the fentence of the fenate. Maximin, abandoned by his guards, was flain in his tent, with his fon, (whom he had affociated to the honours of the purple,) Anulinus the præfect, and the principal ministers of his tyranny 36. The sight of their 36 Herodian, I. viii. p. 279. Hift. August, p. 146. The duration of Maximin's may depend on the integrity of the text, as reign has not been defined with much accuracy, except by Eutropius, who allows him verifon of Peanius.

His portrait.

CHAP. heads, borne on the point of spears, convinced the citizens of Aquileia, that the fiege was at an end; the gates of the city were thrown open, a liberal market was provided for the hungry troops of Maximin, and the whole army joined in folemn protestations of fidelity to the fenate and people of Rome, and to their lawful emperors Maximus and Balbinus. Such was the deferved fate of a brutal favage, destitute, as he has generally been represented, of every fentiment that diffinguishes a civilized or even a human being. The body was fuited to the foul. The stature of Maximin exceeded the measure of eight feet, and circumstances almost incredible are related of his matchless strength and appetite 17. Had he lived in a less enlightened age, tradition and poetry might well have described him as one of those monstrous giants, whose supernatural power was constantly exerted for the destruction of mankind.

loy of the world.

It is easier to conceive than to describe the universal joy of the Roman world on the fall of the tyrant, the news of which is faid to have been carried in four days from Aquileia to Rome. The return of Maximus was a triumphal procession, his colleague and young Gordian went out to meet him, and the three princes made their entry into the capital, attended by the ambassadors of almost all the cities of Italy, faluted with the splendid offerings of gratitude and superstition, and received with the unfeigned acclamations of the fenate and people, who perfuaded themselves that a golden age would succeed to an age of iron 38. The conduct of the two emperors corresponded with these expectations. They administered justice in person; and the rigour of the one was tempered by the other's clemency. The oppreffive

<sup>37</sup> Eight Roman feet and one third, which are equal to above eight English feet, as the two measures are to each other in the proportion of 967 to 1000. See Greaves's difcourse on the Roman foot. We are told that Maximin could drink in a day an amphora (or about feven gallons of wine) and eat thirty or forty pounds of meat. He could move a loaded waggon, break a horfe's leg with his fift, crumble flones in his hand, and tear up small trees by the roots. See his life in the Augustan History.

<sup>35</sup> See the congratulatory letter of Claudius Julianus the conful, to the two emperors, in the Augustan History.

taxes with which Maximin had loaded the rights of inheritance and C H A P. fuccession, were repealed, or at least moderated. Discipline was revived, and with the advice of the fenate many wife laws were enacted by their imperial ministers, who endeavoured to restore a civil constitution on the ruins of military tyranny. "What reward may " we expect for delivering Rome from a monster?" was the question asked by Maximus, in a moment of freedom and confidence. Balbinus answered it without hesitation, "The love of the senate, of "the people, and of all mankind." "Alas!" replied his more penetrating colleague, "Alas! I dread the hatred of the foldiers, " and the fatal effects of their resentment 39." His apprehensions were but too well justified by the event.

Whilft Maximus was preparing to defend Italy against the com- Sedition at mon foe, Balbinus, who remained at Rome, had been engaged in scenes of blood and intestine discord. Distrust and jealousy reigned in the fenate; and even in the temples where they affembled, every fenator carried either open or concealed arms. In the midst of their deliberations, two veterans of the guards, actuated either by curiofity or a finister motive, audaciously thrust themselves into the house, and advanced by degrees beyond the altar of Victory. Gallicanus, a confular, and Macenas, a Pratorian fenator, viewed with indignation their infolent intrusion: drawing their daggers they laid the spies, for such they deemed them, dead at the foot of the altar, and then advancing to the door of the fenate, imprudently exhorted the multitude to massacre the Prætorians, as the secret adherents of the tyrant. Those who escaped the first fury of the tumult took refuge in the camp, which they defended with fuperior advantage against the reiterated attacks of the people, affifted by the numerous bands of gladiators, the property of opulent nobles. The civil war lasted many days, with infinite lofs and confusion on both sides. When

CHAP. the pipes were broken that fupplied the camp with water, the Prætorians were reduced to intolerable diffrefs; but in their turn they made desperate sallies into the city, set fire to a great number of houses, and filled the streets with the blood of the inhabitants. The emperor Balbinus attempted, by ineffectual edicts and precarious truces, to reconcile the factions at Rome. But their animofity, though fmothered for a while, burnt with redoubled violence. The foldiers, detefling the fenate and the people, despifed the weakness of a prince who wanted either the spirit or the power to command the obedience of his fubicats 40:

Discontent of the Prattorian guards.

After the tyrant's death, his formidable army had acknowledged, from necessity rather than from choice, the authority of Maximus, who transported himself without delay to the camp before Aquileia. As foon as he had received their oath of fidelity, he addressed them in terms full of mildness and moderation; lamented, rather than arraigned, the wild diforders of the times, and affured the foldiers, that of all their past conduct, the senate would remember only their generous defertion of the tyrant, and their voluntary return to their duty. Maximus enforced his exhortations by a liberal donative, purified the camp by a folemn facrifice of expiation, and then difmiffed the legions to their feveral provinces, impressed, as he hoped, with a lively fense of gratitude and obedience 4". But nothing could reconcile the haughty spirit of the Prætorians. They attended the emperors on the memorable day of their public entry into Rome; but amidft the general acclamations, the fullen dejected countenance of the guards, fufficiently declared that they confidered themselves as the object, rather than the partners, of the triumph. When the whole body was united in their camp, those who had ferved under Maximin, and those who had remained at Rome, infensibly communicated to each other their complaints and apprehensions. The empe- CHAP. rors chosen by the army had perished with ignominy; those elected by the fenate were feated on the throne 42. The long difcord between the civil and military powers was decided by a war, in which the former had obtained a complete victory. The foldiers must now learn a new doctrine of submission to the senate; and whatever elemency was affected by that politic affembly, they dreaded a flow revenge, coloured by the name of discipline, and justified by fair pretences of the public good. But their fate was still in their own hands, and if they had courage to despise the vain terrors of an impotent republic, it was easy to convince the world, that those who were masters of the arms, were masters of the authority, of the state.

<sup>4</sup>º Herodian, 1. viii. p. 258.

<sup>41</sup> Herodian, 1, viii. p. 213.

When the fenate elected two princes, it is probable that, befides Maffacre of the declared reason of providing for the various emergencies of Balbinus. peace and war, they were actuated by the fecret defire of weakening by division the despotism of the supreme magistrate. Their policy was effectual, but it proved fatal both to their emperors and to themselves. The jealousy of power was soon exasperated by the difference of character. Maximus despised Balbinus as a luxurious noble, and was in his turn difdained by his colleague as an obscure foldier. Their filent discord was understood rather than feen 41: but the mutual confciousness prevented them from uniting in any vigorous measures of defence against their common enemies of the Prætorian camp. The whole city was employed in the Capitoline games, and the emperors were left almost alone in the palace. On A.D. 238, a fudden they were alarmed by the approach of a troop of desperate July 15. affaffins. Ignorant of each other's fituation or defigns, for they already occupied very distant apartments, afraid to give or to receive

<sup>42</sup> The observation had been made imprudently enough in the acclamations of the se-nate, and with regard to the soldiers it car-ried the appearance of a wanton insult. Hist from some better writer. August. p. 170.

<sup>43</sup> Difcordiæ tacitæ, et quæ intelligerentur

C H A P. affiftance, they wasted the important moments in idle debates and fruitless recriminations. The arrival of the guards put an end to the vain strife. They seized on these emperors of the senate, for fuch they called them with malicious contempt, stripped them of their garments, and dragged them in infolent triumph through the ffreets of Rome, with a defign of inflicting a flow and cruel death on these unfortunate princes. The fear of a rescue from the faithful Germans of the Imperial guards, fhortened their tortures; and their bodies, mangled with a thousand wounds, were left exposed to the infults or to the pity of the populace 4+.

The third Gordian remains fole emperor.

In the space of a few months, fix princes had been cut off by the fword. Gordian, who had already received the title of Cæfar, was the only person that occurred to the soldiers as proper to fill the vacant throne 45. They carried him to the camp, and unanimoufly faluted him Augustus and emperor. His name was dear to the fenate and people; his tender age promifed a long impunity of military licence; and the submission of Rome and the provinces to the choice of the Prætorian guards, faved the republic, at the expence indeed of its freedom and dignity, from the horrors of a new civil war in the heart of the capital 46.

Innocence and virtues of Gordian.

As the third Gordian was only nineteen years of age at the time of his death, the history of his life, were it known to us with greater accuracy than it really is, would contain little more than the account of his education, and the conduct of the ministers, who by turns abused or guided the simplicity of his unexperienced youth expression of the Augustan History.

44 Herodian, 1. viii. p. 287, 288.

46 Quintus Curtius (l. x. c. q.) pays an elegant compliment to the emperor of the day, for having, by his happy accession, extinguished fo many fire-brands, sheathed so many fwords, and put an end to the evils of a divided government. After weighing with his accurate lift of Roman historians.

attention every word of the passage, I am of 45 Quia non alius erat in præfenti, is the opinion, that it fuits better with the elevation of Gordian, than with any other period of the Roman History. In that cafe, it may ferve to decide the age of Quintus Curtius. Those who place him under the first Casfars, argue from the purity of his style, but are embarraffed by the filence of Quintilian, in

Immediately

Immediately after his accession, he fell into the hands of his mo- CHAP. ther's eunuchs, that pernicious vermin of the East, who, fince the days of Elagabalus, had infested the Roman palace. By the artful conspiracy of these wretches, an impenetrable veil was drawn between an innocent prince and his oppressed subjects, the virtuous disposition of Gordian was deceived, and the honours of the empire fold without his knowledge, though in a very public manner, to the most worthless of mankind. We are ignorant by what fortunate accident the emperor escaped from this ignominious flavery, and devolved his confidence on a minister, whose wife councils had no object except the glory of his fovereign, and the happiness of the people. It should feem that love and learning introduced Misi- A. D. 240. theus to the favour of Gordian. The young prince married the Administradaughter of his master of rhetoric, and promoted his father-in-law theus. to the first offices of the empire. Two admirable letters that passed between them, are still extant. The minister, with the conscious dignity of virtue, congratulates Gordian that he is delivered from the tyranny of the eunuchs 47, and still more that he is sensible of his deliverance. The emperor acknowledges, with an amiable confusion, the errors of his past conduct; and laments, with singular propriety, the misfortune of a monarch, from whom a venal tribe of courtiers perpetually labour to conceal the truth 48.

tion of Misi-

The life of Militheus had been spent in the profession of letters, The Persian not of arms; yet such was the versatile genius of that great man, war. that, when he was appointed Prætorian præfect, he discharged the military duties of his place with vigour and ability. The Persians had invaded Mefopotamia, and threatened Antioch. By the per-

<sup>47</sup> Hift. August. p. 161. From some hints in the two letters, I should expect that the causa eloquentiæ dignum parentela sua putacunuchs were not expelled the palace, with- vit; et prafectum flatim fecit; post quod, out fome degree of gentle violence, and that non puerile jam et contemptibile videbatur young Gordian rather approved of, than con- imperium. fented to, their difgrace.

<sup>48</sup> Duxit uxorem filiam Misithei, quem

CHAP. fuafion of his father-in-law, the young emperor quitted the luxury of Rome, opened, for the last time recorded in history, the temple of Janus, and marched in person into the East. On his approach with a great army, the Perfians withdrew their garrifons from the cities which they had already taken, and retired from the Euphrates to the Tigris. Gordian enjoyed the pleasure of announcing to the fenate the first success of his arms, which he ascribed with a becoming modefly and gratitude to the wisdom of his father and præfect. During the whole expedition, Mifitheus watched over the fafety and discipline of the army; whilst he prevented their dangerous murmurs by maintaining a regular plenty in the camp, and by establiffling ample magazines of vinegar, bacon, straw, barley, and wheat, in all the cities of the frontier 49. But the prosperity of Gordian expired with Militheus, who died of a flux, not without very ftrong suspicions of poison. Philip, his successor in the præfecture, was an Arab by birth, and confequently, in the earlier part of his life, a robber by profession. His rife from so obscure a sta-'tion to the first dignities of the empire, seems to prove that he was a bold and able leader. But his boldness prompted him to aspire to the throne, and his abilities were employed to fupplant, not to ferve, his indulgent mafter. The minds of the foldiers were irritated by an artificial fcarcity, created by his contrivance in the camp; and the diffress of the army was attributed to the youth and incapacity of the prince. It is not in our power to trace the fucceffive steps of the secret conspiracy and open sedition, which were at length fatal to Gordian. A fepulchral monument was erected to his memory on the fpot 50 where he was killed, near the conflux

A. D. 243. Arts of Murder of Gordian. A. D. 244.

> 49 Hist. August. p. 162. Aurelius Victor. ed by the love of knowledge, and by the Porphyrius in Vit. Plotin. ap. Fabricium hope of penetrating as far as India. Biblioth. Gree. I. iv. c. 36. The philoso- 50 About twenty miles from the little town of pher Plotinus accompanied the army, prompt- Circefium, on the frontier of the two empires.

of the Euphrates with the little river Aboras 51. The fortunate CHAP. Philip, raifed to the empire by the votes of the foldiers, found a ready obedience from the fenate and the provinces 52.

We cannot forbear transcribing the ingenious, though somewhat Form of a fanciful description, which a celebrated writer of our own times public, has traced of the military government of the Roman empire. "What in that age was called the Roman empire, was only an " irregular republic, not unlike the Aristocracy " of Algiers ", where "the militia, poffeffed of the fovereignty, creates and depofes a " magistrate, who is styled a Dey. Perhaps, indeed, it may be laid "down as a general rule, that a military government is, in fome " respects, more republican than monarchical. Nor can it be faid "that the foldiers only partook of the government by their dif-" obedience and rebellions. The speeches made to them by the " emperors, were they not at length of the fame nature as those " formerly pronounced to the people by the confuls and the tri-"bunes? And although the armies had no regular place or forms " of affembly; though their debates were short, their action sudden, " and their refolves feldom the refult of cool reflection, did they not " dispose, with absolute sway, of the public fortune? What was " the emperor, except the minister of a violent government elected " for the private benefit of the foldiers?

"When the army had elected Philip, who was Prætorian " præfect to the third Gordian; the latter demanded, that he 51 The infeription (which contained a very fingular pun) was erased by the order of Licinius, who claimed fome degree of relationfhip to Philip (Hift. August. p. 165.); but the tumulus or mound of earth which formed the fepulchre, fill subfifted in the time of Julian. See Ammian. Marcellin. xxiii. 5.

52 Aurelius Victor, Eutrop. ix. 2. Orofius, vii. 20. Ammianus Marcellinus, xxiii. 5. Zofimus, l. i. p. 19. Philip, who was a native of Bostra, was about forty years of age.

54 The military republic of the Mamalukes in Egypt, would have afforded M. de Montesquicu (see Considerations sur la Grandeur et la Decadence des Romains, c. 16.) a juster and more noble parallel.

VOL. I.

Hh

" might

<sup>53</sup> Can the epithet of Ariflocracy be applied, with any propriety, to the government of Algiers? Every military government floats between the extremes of abiolute monarchy and wild democracy.

CHAP. "might remain fole emperor; he was unable to obtain it. "He requested, that the power might be equally divided between " them; the army would not liften to his speech. He consented " to be degraded to the rank of Cæsar; the favour was refused " him. He defired, at leaft, he might be appointed Prætorian " præfect; his prayer was rejected. Finally, he pleaded for his " life. The army, in these several judgments, exercised the su-" preme magistracy." According to the historian, whose doubtful narrative the prefident De Montesquieu has adopted, Philip, who, during the whole transaction, had preserved a fullen silence, was inclined to spare the innocent life of his benefactor; till, recollecting that his innocence might excite a dangerous compassion in the Roman world; he commanded, without regard to his fuppliant cries, that he should be seized, stript, and led away to instant death. After a moment's pause the inhuman sentence was executed 55.

Reign of Philip.

On his return from the east to Rome, Philip, desirous of obliterating the memory of his crimes, and of captivating the affections of the people, folemnized the fecular games with infinite pomp and magnificence. Since their institution or revival by Augustus 56, they had been celebrated by Claudius, by Domitian, and by Severus, and were now renewed, the fifth time, on the accomplishment of the full period of a thousand years from the foundation of Rome. Every circumstance of the secular games was Secular games. A. D. 248. April 21.

55 The Augustan History (p. 163, 164.) cannot, in this instance, be reconciled with itself or with probability. How could Philip condemn his predecessor, and yet consecrate his memory? How could he order his public execution, and yet, in his letters to the fenate, exculpate himself from the guilt of his death? Philip, though an ambitious usurper, was by no means a mad tyrant. Some chronological difficulties have likewife been difcovered by the nice eyes of Tillemont and fur les Jubil's.

Muratori, in this supposed affociation of Philip to the empire.

56 The account of the last supposed celebration, though in an enlightened period of hiftory, was fo very doubtful and obscure, that the alternative feems not doubtful. When the popish jubilees, the copy of the secular games, were invented by Boniface VIII. the crafty pope pretended, that he only revived an ancient institution. See M. le Chais Lettres

fkilfully

skilfully adapted to inspire the superstitious mind with deep and CHAP. folemn reverence. The long interval between them 57 exceeded the term of human life; and as none of the spectators had already seen. them, none could flatter themselves with the expectation of beholding them a fecond time. The mystic facrifices were performed, during three nights, on the banks of the Tyber; and the Campus Martius refounded with music and dances, and was illuminated with innumerable lamps and torches. Slaves and strangers were excluded from any participation in these national ceremonies. A chorus of twenty-feven youths, and as many virgins of noble families, and whose parents were both alive, implored the propitious gods in favour of the prefent, and for the hope of the rifing generation; requesting, in religious hymns, that, according to the faith of their ancient oracles, they would still maintain the virtue, the felicity, and the empire of the Roman people 58. The magnificence of Philip's shows and entertainments dazzled the eyes of the multitude. The devout were employed in the rites of superstition, whilft the reflecting few revolved in their anxious minds the past history and the future fate of the empire.

Since Romulus, with a small band of shepherds and outlaws, for- Decline of tified himself on the hills near the Tyber, ten centuries had already empire, elapsed 59. During the four first ages, the Romans, in the laborious school of poverty, had acquired the virtues of war and government. By the vigorous exertion of those virtues, and by the affishance of fortune, they had obtained, in the course of the three succeeding ten years. Varro and Livy adopted the for- &c. mer opinion, but the infallible authority of the Sibyl consecrated the latter (Cenforinus de Die Natal. c. 17.). The emperors Claudius and Philip, however, did not treat the But so little is the chronology of Rome to be oracle with implicit respect.

understood from the poem of Horace, and low as the year 627.

<sup>57</sup> Either of a hundred, or a hundred and the description of Zosimus, 1. ii. p. 167,

<sup>59</sup> The received calculation of Varro affigns to the foundation of Rome, an æra that corresponds with the 754th year before Christ. depended on, in the more early ages, that Sir 58 The idea of the fecular games is best Isaac Newton has brought the same event as

CHAP. centuries, an absolute empire over many countries of Europe, Asia, and Africa. The last three hundred years had been consumed in apparent prosperity and internal decline. The nation of foldiers, magisfrates, and legislators, who composed the thirty-five tribes of the Roman people, was diffolved into the common mass of mankind, and confounded with the millions of fervile provincials, who had received the name, without adopting the spirit of Romans. A mercenary army, levied among the subjects and barbarians of the frontier, was the only order of men who preserved and abused their independence. By their tumultuary election, a Syrian, a Goth, or an Arab, was exalted to the throne of Rome, and invefted with defpotic power over the conquests and over the country of the Scipios.

The limits of the Roman empire still extended from the Western Ocean to the Tigris, and from Mount Atlas to the Rhine and the Danube. To the undifcerning eye of the vulgar, Philip appeared a monarch no less powerful than Hadrian or Augustus had formerly been. The form was still the same, but the animating health and vigour were fled. The industry of the people was discouraged and exhausted by a long series of oppression. The discipline of the legions, which alone, after the extinction of every other virtue, had propped the greatness of the state, was corrupted by the ambition, or relaxed by the weakness of the emperors. The firength of the frontiers, which had always confifted in arms rather than in fortifications. was infenfibly undermined; and the fairest provinces were left exposed to the rapaciousness or ambition of the barbarians, who soon discovered the decline of the Roman empire.

CHAP. VIII.

Of the state of Persia after the restoration of the monarchy by Artaxerxes.

THENEVER Tacitus indulges himself in those beautiful CHAP. episodes, in which he relates some domestic transaction of the Germans or of the Parthians, his principal object is to relieve the attention of the reader from a uniform scene of vice and misery. Ea From the reign of Augustus to the time of Alexander Severus, the enemies of Rome were in her bosom; the tyrants, and the soldiers; and her prosperity had a very distant and feeble interest in the revolutions that might happen beyond the Rhine and the Euphrates. But when the military order had levelled, in wild anarchy, the power of the prince, the laws of the fenate, and even the discipline of the camp, the barbarians of the north and of the east, who had long hovered on the frontier, boldly attacked the provinces of a declining monarchy. Their vexatious inroads were changed into formidable irruptions, and, after a long viciflitude of mutual calamities, many tribes of the victorious invaders established themselves in the provinces of the Roman empire. To obtain a clearer knowledge of these great events, we shall endeavour to form a previous idea of the character, forces, and defigns of those nations who avenged the cause of Hannibal and Mithridates.

In the more early ages of the world, whilft the forests that covered Revolutions Europe afforded a retreat to a few wandering favages, the inhabitants of Afia were already collected into populous cities, and reduced under extensive empires, the seat of the arts, of luxury, and

C H A P. of despotism. The Assyrians reigned over the East 1, till the scepter of Ninus and Semiramis dropt from the hands of their enervated fuccessors. The Medes and the Babylonians divided their power, and were themselves swallowed up in the monarchy of the Persians, whose arms could not be confined within the narrow limits of Asia, Followed, as it is faid, by two millions of men, Xerxes, the descendant of Cyrus, invaded Greece. Thirty thousand foldiers, under the command of Alexander, the fon of Philip, who was intrufted by the Greeks with their glory and revenge, were fufficient to fubdue Persia. The princes of the house of Seleucus usurped and lost the Macedonian command over the East. About the fame time, that, by an ignominious treaty, they refigned to the Romans the country on this fide Mount Taurus, they were driven by the Parthians, an obscure horde of Scythian origin, from all the provinces of Upper Afia. The formidable power of the Parthians, which fpread from India to the frontiers of Syria, was in its turn subverted by Ardshir, or Artaxerxes; the founder of a new dynasty, which, under the name of Sassanides, governed Persia till the invasion of the Arabs. This great revolution, whose fatal influence was foon experienced by the Romans, happened in the fourth year of Alexander Severus, two hundred and twenty-fix years after the Christian æra 2.

The Perfian monarchy restored by Artaxerxes,

Artaxerxes had ferved with great reputation in the armies of Artaban, the last king of the Parthians, and it appears that he was * An ancient chronologist quoted by Velleius Paterculus (l. i. c. 6.) observes, that the Affyrians, the Medes, the Perfians, and the Macedonians, reigned over Afia one thoufand nine hundred and ninety-five years, from the accession of Ninus to the defeat of Antiochus by the Romans. As the latter of these great events happened 189 years before Christ, the former may be placed 2184 years before the same æra. The Astronomical observations, found at Babylon by Alexander, went fifty years higher. Ŧ

2 In the five hundred and thirty-eighth year of the æra of Seleucus. See Agathias, 1. ii. p. 63. This great event (fuch is the carelesiness of the Orientals) is placed by Eutychius, as high as the tenth year of Commodus, and by Mofes of Chorene, as low as the reign of Philip. Ammianus Marcellinus has fo fervilely copied (xxiii, 6.) his ancient materials, which are indeed very good, that he describes the family of the Arsacides, as still feated on the Persian throne in the middle of the fourth century.

driven

driven into exile and rebellion by royal ingratitude, the customary C H A P. reward for superior merit. His birth was obscure, and the obscurity equally gave room to the aspersions of his enemies, and the flattery of his adherents. If we credit the scandal of the former, Artaxerxes fprang from the illegitimate commerce of a tanner's wife with a common foldier 3. The latter represent him, as descended from a branch of the ancient kings of Persia, though time and misfortune had gradually reduced his ancestors to the humble station of private citizens 4. As the lineal heir of the monarchy, he afferted his right to the throne, and challenged the noble task of delivering the Perfians from the oppression under which they groaned above five centuries fince the death of Darius. The Parthians were defeated in three great battles. In the last of these their king Artaban was flain, and the spirit of the nation was for ever broken 5. The authority of Artaxerxes was folemnly acknowledged in a great affembly held at Balch in Khorafan. Two younger branches of the royal house of Arsaces were confounded among the proftrate fatraps. A third, more mindful of ancient grandeur than of present necessity, attempted to retire, with a numerous train of vaffals, towards their kinfman, the king of Armenia; but this little army of deferters was intercepted, and cut off, by the vigilance of the conqueror 6, who boldly assumed the double diadem, and the title of King of Kings, which had been enjoyed by his predecessor. But these pompous titles, instead of gratifying the vanity of the Perlian, ferved only to admonish him of his duty, and to inflame in his foul, the ambition of reftoring, in their full splendour, the religion and empire of Cyrus.

<sup>3</sup> The tanner's name was Babec; the foldier's, Sassan: from the former Artaxerxes Ardsbir. obtained the furname of Babegan; from the latter all his descendants have been styled p. 207. Abulpharagius Dynast. p. 80. Saffanides.

<sup>4</sup> D'Herbelot. Bibliotheque Orientale.

<sup>5</sup> Dion Cassius, I. lxxx. Herodian, I. vi. 6 See Mofes Chorenenfis, I. ii. c. 65-71.

I. During

CHAP. VIII. Reformation of the Maglan religion.

1. During the long fervitude of Persia under the Macedonian and the Parthian yoke, the nations of Europe and Afia had mutually adopted and corrupted each other's fuperflitions. Arfacides, indeed, practifed the worship of the Magi; but they difgraced and polluted it with a various mixture of foreign idolatry. The memory of Zoroaster, the ancient prophet and philosopher of the Persians', was still revered in the East; but the obsolete and mysterious language, in which the Zendavasta was composed *, opened a field of dispute to seventy sects, who variously explained the fundamental doctrines of their religion, and were all indifferently derided by a crowd of infidels, who rejected the divine mission and miraeles of the prophet. To suppress the idolaters, reunite the schismatics, and confute the unbelievers, by the infallible decision of a general council, the pious Artaxerxes summoned the Magi from all parts of his dominions. These priests, who had so long fighed in contempt and obscurity, obeyed the welcome fummons; and on the appointed day appeared. to the number of about eighty thousand. But as the debates of so tumultuous an affembly could not have been directed by the authority of reason, or influenced by the art of policy, the Persian synod was reduced, by fuccessive operations, to forty thousand, to four thousand, to four hundred, to forty, and at last to seven Magi, the most respected for their learning and piety. One of these, Erdaviraph, a young but holy prelate, received from the hands of his brethren, three cups of foporiferous wine. He drank them off, and inftantly fell into a long

7 Hyde and Prideaux, working up the uncle Dr. Prideaux, the antiquity of the erfian legends and their own conjectures into

&lt;sup>7</sup> Hyde and Prideaux, working up the Perfian legends and their own conjectures into a very agreeable flory, reprefent Zoroafter as a contemporary of Darius Hyflafpes. But it is fufficient to observe, that the Greek writers, who lived almost in the age of Darius, agree in placing the ατα of Zoroafter many hundred, or even thousand, years before their own time. The judicious criticism of Mr. Moyle perceived, and maintained against his

That ancient idiom was called the Zend. The language of the commentary, the Pehlvi, though much more modern, has ceafed many ages ago to be a living tongue. This fact alone (if it is allowed as authentic) fufficiently warrants the antiquity of those writings, which M. d'Anquetil has brought into Europe, and translated into French.

and profound fleep. As foon as he waked, he related to the king and to CHAP. the believing multitude, his journey to Heaven, and his intimate conferences with the Deity. Every doubt was filenced by this supernatural evidence; and the articles of the faith of Zoroaster were fixed with equal authority and precision?. A short delineation of that celebrated fystem will be found useful, not only to display the character of the Persian nation, but to illustrate many of their most important transactions, both in peace and war, with the Roman empire ".

The great and fundamental article of the fystem, was the ce- Persian theolebrated doctrine of the two principles; a bold and injudicious principles. attempt of Eastern philosophy to reconcile the existence of moral and physical evil, with the attributes of a beneficent Creator and governor of the world. The first and original Being, in whom, or by whom, the universe exists, is denominated in the writings of Zoroaster, Time without bounds; but it must be confessed, that this infinite substance seems rather a metaphysical abstraction of the mind, than a real object endowed with felf-confciousness, or possessed of moral perfections. From either the blind, or the intelligent operation of this infinite Time, which bears but too near an affinity with the chaos of the Greeks, the two fecondary but active principles of the universe, were from all eternity produced, Ormusd and Ahriman, each of them possessed of the powers of creation, but each disposed, by his invariable nature, to exercise them with different defigns. The principle of good is eternally absorbed in light; the principle of evil eternally buried in darkness. The wife benevolence of Ormuld formed man capable of virtue, and abundantly provided his fair habitation with the materials of happiness. By his died obscurity of a prophet, the figurative 10 I have principally drawn this account style of the East, and the deceitful medium It must, however, be confessed, that the stu- bridgment of Persian theology.

<sup>9</sup> Hyde de Religione veterum Perf. c. 21. from the Zendavesta of M. d'Anquetil, and of a French or Latin version, may have bethe Sadder, subjoined to Dr. Hyde's treatife. trayed us into error and herefy, in this a-CHAP, vigilant providence, the motion of the planets, the order of the feafons, and the temperate mixture of the elements, are preferved. But the malice of Ahriman has long fince pierced Ormufd's egg; or, in other words, has violated the harmony of his works. Since that fatal irruption, the most minute articles of good and evil are intimately intermingled and agitated together; the rankest poisons spring up amidst the most falutary plants; deluges, earthquakes, and conflagrations, attest the conslict of Nature, and the little world of man is perpetually shaken by vice and misfortune. Whilft the rest of human kind are led away captives in the chains of their infernal enemy, the faithful Persian alone reserves his religious adoration for his friend and protector Ormusd, and fights under his banner of light, in the full confidence, that he shall, in the last day, share the glory of his triumph. At that decisive period, the enlightened wifdom of goodness will render the power of Ormusd superior to the furious malice of his rival. Ahriman and his followers, difarmed and fubdued, will fink into their native darkness; and virtue will maintain the eternal peace and harmony of the universe ".

Religious worship.

The theology of Zoroaster was darkly comprehended by foreigners, and even by the far greater number of his disciples; but the most careless observers were struck with the philosophic simplicity of the Perfian worship. "That people, says Herodotus", rejects the " use of temples, of altars, and of statues, and smiles at the folly of " those nations, who imagine that the gods are sprung from, " or bear any affinity with the human nature. The tops of the " highest mountains are the places chosen for facrifices. Hymns

<sup>11</sup> The modern Perfees (and in fome degree contributed to refine their theological fystem. the Sadder) exalt Ormusd into the first and defire of pleafing the Mahometans may have gian religion.

<sup>12</sup> Herodotus, l. i. c. 131. But Dr. Priomnipotent cause, whilst they degrade Ahri- deaux thinks, with reason, that the use of maninto an inferior but rebellious spirit. Their temples was afterwards permitted in the Ma-

" and prayers are the principal worship; the Supreme God who " fills the wide circle of Heaven, is the object to whom they are " addressed." Yet, at the same time, in the true spirit of a polytheist, he accuses them of adoring Earth, Water, Fire, the Winds, and the Sun and Moon. But the Perfians of every age have denied the charge, and explained the equivocal conduct, which might appear to give a colour to it. The elements, and more particularly Fire, Light, and the Sun, whom they called Mithra, were the objects of their religious reverence, because they considered them as the purest fymbols, the noblest productions, and the most powerful agents of the Divine Power and Nature 13.

Every mode of religion, to make a deep and lasting impression on Ceremonies the human mind, must exercise our obedience, by enjoining practices and moral precepts. of devotion, for which we can affign no reason; and must acquire our esteem, by inculcating moral duties analogous to the dictates of our own hearts. The religion of Zoroafter was abundantly provided with the former, and possessed a sufficient portion of the latter. At the age of puberty, the faithful Persian was invested with a mysterious girdle, the badge of the divine protection; and from that moment, all the actions of his life, even the most indifferent, or the most necessary, were fanctified by their peculiar prayers, ejaculations, or genuflexions; the omission of which, under any circumstances, was a grievous fin, not inferior in guilt to the violation of the moral duties. The moral duties, however, of justice, mercy, liberality, &c. were in their turn required of the disciple of Zoroaster, who wished to escape the persecution of Ahriman, and to live with Ormufd in a blifsful eternity, where the degree of felicity will be exactly proportioned to the degree of virtue and piety '4.

But

flanding all their diffinctions and protesta- the fire.

<sup>11</sup> Hyde de Relig. Perf. c. 8. Notwith- matifed them, as idolatrous worshippers of

rants, the Mahometans, have constantly slig-rants, the Mahometans, have constantly slig-monics

CHAP. VIII. Encouragement of agriculture.

But there are fome remarkable instances, in which Zoroaster lays aside the prophet, assumes the legislator, and discovers a liberal concern for private and public happiness, seldom to be found among the groveling or visionary schemes of superstition. Fasting and celibacy, the common means of purchasing the divine favour, he condemns with abhorrence, as a criminal rejection of the best gifts of providence. The faint, in the Magian religion, is obliged to beget children, to plant useful trees, to destroy noxious animals, to convey water to the dry lands of Persia, and to work out his falvation by purfuing all the labours of agriculture. We may quote from the Zendavesta a wife and benevolent maxim, which compenfates for many an abfurdity. "He who fows the ground with " care and diligence, acquires a greater flock of religious merit, than " he could gain by the repetition of ten thousand prayers 15." In the fpring of every year a festival was celebrated, destined to represent the primitive equality, and the present connexion, of mankind. The flately kings of Perfia, exchanging their vain pomp for more genuine greatness, freely mingled with the humblest but most useful of their subjects. On that day the husbandmen were admitted, without distinction, to the table of the king and his fatraps. The monarch accepted their petitions, inquired into their grievances, and converfed with them on the most equal terms. " From your labours, was he accustomed to fay, (and to fay with " truth, if not with fincerity,) from your labours, we receive our " fublishence; you derive your tranquillity from our vigilance; fince, " therefore, we are mutually necessary to each other, let us live " together like brothers in concord and love 16." Such a festival must indeed have degenerated, in a wealthy and despotic empire, monics enjoined are infinite and triffing, the facred girdle. Sadder. Art. 14. 50. 60. Fifteen genuflexions, prayers, &c. were re-15 Zendavesta, tom. i. p. 224, and Precis quired whenever the devout Perhan cut his du Systeme de Zoroastre, tom. iii. nails or made water; or as often as he put on into a theatrical reprefentation; but it was at least a comedy well worthy of a royal audience, and which might fometimes imprint a falutary lesson on the mind of a young prince.

16 Hyde de Religione Perfarum, c. 19.

CHAP. VIII.

Magi.

Had Zoroafter, in all his inflitutions, invariably supported this ex- Power of the alted character, his name would deferve a place with those of Numa and Confucius, and his fystem would be justly entitled to all the applause, which it has pleased some of our Divines, and even some of our philosophers, to bestow on it. But in that motley composition, dictated by reason and passion, by enthusiasm and by selfish motives, fome useful and sublime truths were difgraced by a mixture of the most abject and dangerous superfition. The Magi, or facerdotal order, were extremely numerous, fince, as we have already feen, fourfcore thousand of them were convened in a general council. Their forces were multiplied by discipline. A regular hierarchy was diffused through all the provinces of Persia; and the Archimagus, who refided at Balch, was respected as the visible head of the church, and the lawful successor of Zoroaster 17. The property of the Magi was very confiderable. Befides the less invidious poffesfion of a large tract of the most fertile lands of Media 18, they levied a general tax on the fortunes and the industry of the Persians 19. "Though your good works," fays the interested prophet, "exceed " in number the leaves of the trees, the drops of rain, the stars in " the heaven, or the fands on the fea-shore, they will all be un-" profitable to you, unless they are accepted by the defour, or priest. " To obtain the acceptation of this guide to falvation, you must affect to apply to the Magian, the terms confecrated to the Christian hierarchy.

forms us (as far as we may credit him) of two who cannot otherwise account for it, may supcurious particulars; 1. that the Magi de- pole, if they please, that the Magi of the rived some of their most secret doctrines from latter times inserted so useful an interpola-

<sup>17</sup> Id. c. 28. Both Hyde and Prideaux were a tribe or family, as well as order. 19 The divine institution of tythes exhibits a fingular inflance of conformity between the 18 Ammian. Marcellin. xxiii. 6. He in- law of Zoro fler and that of Moses. Those the Indian Brachmans; and, 2. that they tion into the writings of their prophet.

- CHAP. " faithfully pay him tythes of all you possess, of your goods, of " your lands, and of your money. If the deftour be fatisfied, your
  - " foul will escape hell tortures; you will secure praise in this world,
  - " and happiness in the next. For the destours are the teachers of
  - " religion; they know all things, and they deliver all men "."

These convenient maxims of reverence and implicit faith were doubtless imprinted with care on the tender minds of youth; fince the Magi were the masters of education in Persia, and to their hands the children even of the royal family were intrufted ". The Perfian priests, who were of a speculative genius, preserved and investigated the fecrets of Oriental philosophy; and acquired, either by superior knowledge or superior art, the reputation of being well versed in fome occult sciences, which have derived their appellation from the Magi 22. Those of more active dispositions mixed with the world in courts and cities; and it is observed, that the administration of Artaxerxes was in a great measure directed by the counsels of the facerdotal order, whose dignity, either from policy or devotion, that prince restored to its ancient splendour 23.

Spirit of per-Lecution.

The first counsel of the Magi was agreeable to the unsociable genius of their faith 24, to the practice of ancient kings 25, and even to the example of their legislator, who had fallen a victim to a religious war, excited by his own intolerant zeal 26. By an edict of Artaxerxes, the exercise of every worship, except that of Zoroaster, was feverely prohibited. The temples of the Parthians, and the fla-

<sup>20</sup> Sadder, Art. 8.

<sup>21</sup> Plato in Alcibiad.

<sup>22</sup> Pliny (Hift. Natur. l. xxx. c. 1.) obferves, that magic held mankind by the triple chain of religion, of physic, and of aftronomy, <sup>23</sup> Agathias, 1. iv. p. 134.

<sup>24</sup> Mr. Hume, in the Natural History of Religion, fagaciously remarks, that the most refined and philosophic fests are constantly the most intolerant.

<sup>25</sup> Cicero de Legibus, ii. 10. Xerxes, by the advice of the Magi, destroyed the temples

<sup>26</sup> Hyde de Rel. Perfar. c. 23, 24. D'Herbelot Bibliothéque Orientale Zerduft. Life of Zoroaster in tom. ii. of the Zendavesta, tues of their deified monarchs, were thrown down with ignominy 17. CHAP. The fword of Aristotle (fuch was the name given by the Orientals to the polytheifm and philosophy of the Greeks) was casily broken 28; the flames of perfecution foon reached the more stubborn Jews and Christians 29; nor did they spare the heretics of their own nation and religion. The majefty of Ormusd, who was jealous of a rival, was feconded by the despotism of Artaxerxes, who could not suffer a rebel; and the schismatics within his vast empire were soon reduced to the inconsiderable number of eighty thousand 3°. This spirit of persecution reflects dishonour on the religion of Zoroaster; but as it was not productive of any civil commotion, it ferved to ftrengthen the new monarchy by uniting all the various inhabitants of Persia in the bands of religious zeal.

II. Artaxerxes, by his valour and conduct, had wrested the scep- Establishtre of the East from the ancient royal family of Parthia. There royal authorities ftill remained the more difficult task of establishing, throughout the rity in the vast extent of Persia, a uniform and vigorous administration. The weak indulgence of the Arfacides, had refigned to their fons and brothers, the principal provinces, and the greatest offices of the kingdom, in the nature of hereditary possessions. The vitaxe, or eighteen most powerful satraps, were permitted to assume the regal title; and the vain pride of the monarch was delighted with a nominal dominion over so many vassal kings. Even tribes of barbarians in their mountains, and the Greek cities of Upper Asia ", within their

<sup>27</sup> Compare Moses of Chorene, 1. ii. c. 74. with Ammian, Marcellin, xxiii, 6. Hereafter I shall make use of these passages.

<sup>28</sup> Rabbi Abraham in the Tarikh Schickard, p. 108, 109.

<sup>29</sup> Bafnage Histoire des Juifs, l. viii. c. 3. Sozomen, l. ii. c. 1. Manes, who fuffered an ignominious death, may be deemed a Magian, as well as a Christian heretic.

<sup>39</sup> Hyde de Religione Persar. c. 21.

<sup>31</sup> These colonies were extremely numerous. Seleucus Nicator founded thirty-nine cities, all named from himfelf, or fome of his relations (fee Appian in Syriac, p. 124.). The æra of Seleucus (still in use among the Eaftern Christians) appears as late as the year 508, of Christ 196, on the medals of the Greek cities within the Parthian empire. See Moyle's works, vol. i. p. 273, &c. and M. Freret, Mem. de l'Academie, tom. xix.

C H A P. walls, fearcely acknowledged, or feldom obeyed, any fuperior; and the Parthian empire exhibited, under other names, a lively image of the feudal fystem 12 which has fince prevailed in Europe. But the active victor, at the head of a numerous and disciplined army, visited in person every province of Persia. The defeat of the boldest rebels, and the reduction of the strongest fortifications ", diffused the terror of his arms, and prepared the way for the peaceful reception of his authority. An obstinate resistance was fatal to the chiefs; but their followers were treated with lenity 34. A cheerful submission was rewarded with honours and riches; but the prudent Artaxerxes, fuffering no person except himself to assume the title of king, abolished every intermediate power between the throne and the people. His kingdom, nearly equal in extent to modern Persia, was, on every fide, bounded by the fea or by great rivers; by the Euphrates, the Tigris, the Araxes, the Oxus, and the Indus, by the Caspian Sea, and the Gulph of Persia 15. That country was computed to contain in the last century, five hundred and fifty-four cities, fixty thousand villages, and about forty millions of fouls 16. If we compare the Extent and population of > 32 The modern Perfians diftinguish that period as the dynasty of the kings of the nations. See Plin. Hift. Nat. vi. 25.

23 Eutychius (tom. i. p. 367. 371. 375.) relates the fiege of the island of Mesene in the Tigris, with fome circumstances not unlike the story of Nifus and Scylla.

34 Agathias, ii. 164. The princes of Segestan defended their independence during many years. As romances generally transport to an ancient period the events of their own time, it is not impossible, that the fabulous exploits of Rustan prince of Segestan may have been grafted on this real history.

35 We can feareely attribute to the Persian monarchy the fea-coast of Gedrosia or Macran, which extends along the Indian Ocean from Cape Jafk (the promontory Capella) to Cape Goadel. In the time of Alexander, and probably many ages afterwards, it was thinly inhabited by a favage people of Icthyophagi, or Fishermen, who knew no arts, who acknowledged no mafter, and who were divided by inhospitable deferts from the rest of the world. (See Arrian de Reb. Indicis.) In the twelfth century, the little town of Taiz, (fupposed by M. Danville to be the Tesa of Ptolemy) was peopled and enriched by the refort of the Arabian merchants. (See Geographie Nubiens, p. 58, and Danville Geographie Ancienne, tom. ii. p. 283.) In the last age the whole country was divided between three princes, one Mahometan and two Idolaters, who maintained their independence against the successors of Shaw Abbas. (Voyages de Tavernier, part i. l. v. p. 635.)

35 Chardin, tom, iii, c. 1, 2, 3,

admi-

249

administration of the house of Sassan with that of the house of Sesi, CHAP. the political influence of the Magian with that of the Mahometan religion, we shall probably infer, that the kingdom of Artaxerxes contained at least as great a number of cities, villages, and inhabitants. But it must likewise be confessed, that in every age the want of harbours on the fea-coast, and the scarcity of fresh water in the inland provinces, have been very unfavourable to the commerce and agriculture of the Perfians; who, in the calculation of their numbers, feem to have indulged one of the meanest, though most common artifices, of national vanity.

As foon as the ambitious mind of Artaxerxes had triumphed over Recapitulathe reliftance of his vassals, he began to threaten the neighbouring war between ftates, who, during the long flumber of his predecessors, had insulted the Parthian Persia with impunity. He obtained some easy victories over the empire. wild Scythians and the effeminate Indians; but the Romans were an enemy, who, by their past injuries and present power, deserved the utmost efforts of his arms. A forty years tranquillity, the fruit of valour and moderation, had succeeded the victories of Trajan. During the period that elapsed from the accession of Marcus to the reign of Alexander, the Roman and the Parthian empires were twice engaged in war; and although the whole strength of the Arsacides contended with a part only of the forces of Rome, the event was most commonly in favour of the latter. Macrinus, indeed, prompted by his precarious fituation and pufillanimous temper, purchased a peace at the expence of near two millions of our money 17; but the generals of Marcus, the emperor Severus, and his fon, erected many trophies in Armenia, Mesopotamia, and Assyria. Among their exploits, the imperfect relation of which would have unfeafonably interrupted the more important feries of domestic revolutions, we shall only mention the repeated calamities of the two great cities of Seleucia and Ctefiphon.

tion of the * Dion, 1. xxviii. p. 1335.

Vol. L.

Kk

Seleucia,

CHAP. VIII. Cities of Seleucia and Ctefiphon.

Seleucia, on the western bank of the Tigris, about forty-five miles to the north of ancient Babylon, was the capital of the Macedonian conquests in Upper Afia 38. Many ages after the fall of their empire, Seleucia retained the genuine characters of a Grecian colony, arts, military virtue, and the love of freedom. The independent republic was governed by a fenate of three hundred nobles; the people confifted of fix hundred thousand citizens; the walls were strong, and as long as concord prevailed among the feveral orders of the flate, they viewed with contempt the power of the Parthian: but the madness of faction was sometimes provoked to implore the dangerous aid of the common enemy, who was posted almost at the gates of the colony 19. The Parthian monarchs, like the Mogul fovereigns of Hindostan, delighted in the pastoral life of their Scythian ancestors; and the Imperial camp was frequently pitched in the plain of Cteliphon, on the eastern bank of the Tigris, at the distance of only three miles from Seleucia 40. The innumerable attendants on luxury and despotism resorted to the court, and the little village of Ctesiphon infenfibly fwelled into a great city 41. Under the reign of Marcus, the Roman generals penetrated as far as Ctefiphon and Seleucia. They were received as friends by the Greek colony; they attacked as enemies the feat of the Parthian kings; yet both cities experienced the fame treatment. The fack and conflagration of Seleucia, with the maffacre of three hundred thousand of the inha-

A. D. 165.

33 For the precise situation of Babylon, Se- followed the camp of Aurengzebe from Dehli to Cashmir, describes with great accuracy the immense moving city. The guard of cavalry confifted of 35,000 men, that of infantry of 10,000. It was computed that the camp contained 150,000 horses, mules, and elephants; 50,000 camels; 50,000 oxen, and 40 This may be inferred from Strabo, 1. between 300,000 and 400,000 persons. Almost all Dehli followed the court, whose magnificence supported its industry.

bitants,

Jeucia, Ctefiphon, Modain, and Bagdad, cities often confounded with each other; fee an excellent Geographical Tract of M. Danville, in Mem. de l'Academie, tom. xxx. 39 Tacit, Annal. xi. 42. Plin. Hift. Nat.

xvi. p. 743. 41 That most curious traveller Bernier, who bitants, tarnished the glory of the Roman triumph 43. Seleucia, C H A P. already exhausted by the neighbourhood of a too powerful rival, funk under the fatal blow; but Cteliphon, in about thirty-three A. D. 108. years, had fufficiently recovered its firength to maintain an obstinate fiege against the emperor Severus. The city was, however, taken by affault; the king, who defended it in person, escaped with precipitation; an hundred thousand captives, and a rich booty, rewarded the fatigues of the Roman foldiers 43. Notwithstanding these misfortunes, Ctefiphon fucceeded to Babylon and to Seleucia, as one of the great capitals of the East. In summer, the monarch of Persia enjoyed at Echatana the cool breezes of the mountains of Media; but the mildness of the climate engaged him to prefer Cteliphon for his winter-refidence.

VIII.

From these successful inroads, the Romans derived no real or Conquest of lasting benefit; nor did they attempt to preferve such distant con- the Romans. quests, separated from the provinces of the empire by a large tract of intermediate defert. The reduction of the kingdom of Ofrhoene, was an acquifition of lefs splendour indeed, but of a far more solid advantage. That little state occupied the northern and most fertile part of Mesopotamia, between the Euphrates and the Tigris. Edessa, its capital, was fituated about twenty miles beyond the former of those rivers; and the inhabitants, fince the time of Alexander, were a mixed race of Greeks, Arabs, Syrians, and Armenians 44. The feeble fovereigns of Ofrhoene, placed on the dangerous verge of two contending empires, were attached from inclination to the Par-

<sup>42</sup> Dion. 1. Ixxi. p. 1178. Hift. August. p. 38. Eutrop. viii. 10. Euseb. in Chronic. Quadratus (quoted in the Augustan History) attempted to vindicate the Romans, by alleging, that the citizens of Seleucia had first violated their faith.

p. 120. Hift. August. p. 70.

<sup>44</sup> The polified citizens of Anticch, called those of Edessa, mixed barbarians. It was, however, fome praise, that of the three dialests of the Syriac, the purest and most elegant (the Aramæan) was spoke at Edessa. 'This remark M. Bayer (Hift. Edeff. p. 5.) 41 Dion. l. lxxv. p. 1263. Herodian, I. iii. has borrowed from George of Malatia, a Syrian Writer.

CHAP. thian cause; but the superior power of Rome exacted from them a reluctant homage, which is still attested by their medals. After the conclusion of the Parthian war under Marcus, it was judged prudent to secure some substantial pledges of their doubtful sidelity. Forts were constructed in feveral parts of the country, and a Roman garrison was fixed in the strong town of Nisibis. During the troubles that followed the death of Commodus, the princes of Ofrhoene attempted to shake off the yoke: but the stern policy of Severus confirmed their dependence +5, and the perfidy of Caracalla completed the eafy conquest. Abgarus, the last king of Edessa, was sent in chains to Rome, his dominions reduced into a province, and his capital dignified with the rank of colony; and thus the Romans, about ten years before the fall of the Parthian monarchy, obtained a firm and permanent establishment beyond the Euphrates 46.

Artaxerxes claims the provinces of Afia, and declares war against the Romans. A. D. 230.

A. D. 216.

Prudence as well as glory might have justified a war on the fide of Artaxerxes, had his views been confined to the defence or the acquifition of a useful frontier. But the ambitious Perfian openly avowed a far more extensive defign of conquest; and he thought himself able to support his lofty pretensions by the arms of reason as well as by those of power. Cyrus, he alleged, had first subdued, and his succeffors had for a long time possessed, the whole extent of Asia, as far as the Propontis and the Ægæan Sea; the provinces of Caria and Ionia, under their empire, had been governed by Perfian fatraps, and all Egypt, to the confines of Æthiopia, had acknowledged their fovereignty 47. Their rights had been fuspended, but not destroyed, by a long usurpation; and as foon as he received the Persian dia-dem, which birth and fuccefsful valour had placed upon his head, C H A P. the first great duty of his station called upon him to restore the ancient limits and splendour of the monarchy. The Great King, therefore, (fuch was the haughty ftyle of his embassies to the emperor Alexander) commanded the Romans inflantly to depart from all the provinces of his ancestors, and yielding to the Persians the empire of Afia, to content themselves with the undisturbed possession of Europe. This haughty mandate was delivered by four hundred of the tallest and most beautiful of the Persians; who, by their fine horses, splendid arms, and rich apparel, displayed the pride and greatness of their master 48. Such an embasiy was much less an offer of negociation than a declaration of war. Both Alexander Severus and Artaxerxes, collecting the military force of the Roman and Persian monarchies, resolved in this important contest to lead their armies in person.

<sup>45</sup> Dion, 1. lxxv. p. 1248, 1249, 1250. M. Bayer has neglected to use this most im-

<sup>46</sup> This kingdom, from Ofrhoes, who gave a new name to the country, to the last Abgarus, had lasted 353 years. See the learned work of M. Bayer, Historia Ofrhoena et Edesfena.

<sup>47</sup> Xenophon, in the preface to the Cyropædia, gives a clear and magnificent idea of the extent of the empire of Cyrus. Herodotus (l. iii. c. 79, &c.) enters into a curious and particular description of the twenty great Satrapies into which the Persian empire was divided by Darius Hyftafpes.

If we credit what should seem the most authentic of all records, Pretended an oration, still extant, and delivered by the emperor himself to the fenate, we must allow that the victory of Alexander Severus was not inferior to any of those formerly obtained over the Persians by the fon of Philip. The army of the Great King confifted of one hundred and twenty thousand horse, clothed in complete armour of fleel; of feven hundred elephants, with towers filled with archers on their backs, and of eighteen hundred chariots, armed with fcythes. This formidable hoft, the like of which is not to be found in eaftern history, and has scarcely been imagined in eastern romance 49,

Alexander A. D. 233.

48 Herodian, vi. 209. 212.

79 There were two hundred feythed chariots at the battle of Arbela, in the host of Darius. In the vaft army of Tigrane:, which was vanquished by Lucullus, feventeen thousand horse only were completely armed. Antiochus brought fifty-four elephants of three or four thousand elephants, which the quent wars and negociations with the princes of India, he had once collected an hundred and fifty of those great animals; but it may be questioned, whether the most powerful monarch of Hindostan ever formed a line of battle of feven hundred elephants. Instead into the field against the Romans: by his fre- Great Mogul was supposed to possess, Taver was discomfited in a great battle, in which the Roman Alexander approved himself an intrepid soldier and a skilful general. The Great King fled before his valour; an immense booty and the conquest of Mesopotamia, were the immediate fruits of this signal victory. Such are the circumflances of this oftentatious and improbable relation, dictated, as it too plainly appears, by the vanity of the monarch, adorned by the unblushing servility of his flatterers, and received without contradiction by a distant and obsequious senate 5°. Far from being inclined to believe that the arms of Alexander obtained any memorable advantage over the Persians, we are induced to suspect, that all this blaze of imaginary glory was designed to conceal some real difference.

C H A P. VIII.

More probable account of the war. Our fufpicions are confirmed by the authority of a contemporary historian, who mentions the virtues of Alexander with respect, and his faults with candour. He describes the judicious plan which had been formed for the conduct of the war. Three Roman armies were destined to invade Persia at the same time, and by different roads. But the operations of the campaign, though wisely concerted, were not executed either with ability or success. The first of these armies, as soon as it had entered the marshy plains of Babylon, towards the artificial conflux of the Euphrates and the Tigris's, was encompassed by the superior numbers, and destroyed by the arrows, of the enemy. The alliance of Chosroes king of nier (Voyages, part ii. l.i. p. 198.) difcovered, by a more accurate inquiry, that he had only five hundred for his baggage, and eighty or ninety for the fervice of war. The Greeks have varied with regard to the numter which Porus brought into the field: but Quintus Curtius (viii. 13.), in this infance judicious and moderate, is contented with eighty-five elephants, dittinguished by their fize and ftrength. In Siam, where these animals are the most numerous and the most esteemed, eighteen elephants are allowed as a sufficient proportion for each of the nine brigades into which a just army is divided. The whole number, of one hundred and fixty-two elephants of war, may fometimes be doubled. Hift. des Voyages, tom. ix. p. 260.

50 Hift. August. p. 133.

<sup>54</sup> M. de Tillemont has already observed, that Herodian's Geography is somewhat confused.

Armenia,

Armenia 52, and the long tract of mountainous country, in which CHAP. the Persian cavalry was of little service, opened a secure entrance into the heart of Media, to the fecond of the Roman armies. These brave troops laid waste the adjacent provinces, and by several successful actions against Artaxerxes, gave a faint colour to the emperor's vanity. But the retreat of this victorious army was imprudent, or at least unfortunate. In repassing the mountains, great numbers of foldiers perished by the badness of the roads and the severity of the winter feafon. It had been refolved that whilst these two great detachments penetrated into the opposite extremes of the Perfian dominions, the main body, under the command of Alexander himself, should support their attack, by invading the centre of the kingdom. But the unexperienced youth, influenced by his mother's counfels, and perhaps by his own fears, deferted the bravest troops and the fairest prospect of victory; and after consuming in Mesopotamia an inactive and inglorious fummer, he led back to Antioch an army diminished by sickness, and provoked by disappointment. The behaviour of Artaxerxes had been very different. Flying with rapidity from the hills of Media to the marshes of the Euphrates' he had every where opposed the invaders in person; and in either fortune, had united with the ablest conduct the most undaunted refolution. But in feveral obstinate engagements against the veteran legions of Rome, the Persian monarch had lost the slower of his troops. Even his victories had weakened his power. The favourable opportunities of the absence of Alexander, and of the confufions that followed that emperor's death, prefented themselves in vain to his ambition. Instead of expelling the Romans, as he pretended, from the continent of Asia, he found himself afferting, that Chofrees, king of Armenia, pendent ally to the Romans. defeated Artaxerxes, and purfued him to the

<sup>52</sup> Mofes of Chorene (Hift. Armen. I. ii. confines of India. The exploits of Chofrees c. 71.) illustrates this invasion of Media, by have been magnified; and he acted as a de-

CHAP, unable to wrest from their hands the little province of Mesopotamia 51.

Character and maxims of Arta-A. D. 240.

The reign of Artaxerxes, which from the last defeat of the Parthians lasted only fourteen years, forms a memorable æra in the history of the East, and even in that of Rome. His character seems to have been marked by those bold and commanding features, that generally diffinguish the princes who conquer, from those who inherit, an empire. Till the last period of the Persian monarchy, his code of laws was respected as the ground-work of their civil and religious policy 54. Several of his fayings are preferved. One of them in particular discovers a deep infight into the constitution of government. "The authority of the prince," faid Artaxerxes, "must " be defended by a military force; that force can only be main-" tained by taxes; all taxes must, at last, fall upon agriculture; and " agriculture can never flourish except under the protection of " justice and moderation "." Artaxerxes bequeathed his new empire, and his ambitious defigns against the Romans, to Sapor, a fon not unworthy of his great father; but those designs were too extensive for the power of Persia, and served only to involve both nations in a long feries of destructive wars and reciprocal calamities.

Military power of the Persians.

The Perfians, long fince civilized and corrupted, were very far from possessing the martial independence, and the intrepid hardiness, both of mind and body, which have rendered the northern barbarians mafters of the world. The science of war, that conflituted the more rational force of Greece and Rome, as it now does of Europe, never made any confiderable progress in the East. Those the Code of Artaxerxes to all his Satraps, dynasty of the Sasianides.

<sup>53</sup> For the account of this war, fee Hero- as the invariable rule of their conduct. dian, l. vi. p. 209. 212. The old abbrevilowed the Augustan History.

<sup>55</sup> D'Herbelot Bibliotheque Orientale, au ators and modern compilers have blindly fol- mot Ardfbir. We may obseive, that after an ancient period of tables, and a long inter-5+ Eutychius, tom. ii. p. 180. verf. Po- val of darkness, the modern histories of Percock. The great Chofrocs Noushirwan fent fia begin to assume an air of truth with the disciplined evolutions which harmonize and animate a confused CHAP. multitude, were unknown to the Perfians. They were equally unskilled in the arts of constructing, belieging, or defending regular fortifications. They trusted more to their numbers than to their courage; more to their courage than to their discipline. The infantry Their infanwas a half-armed spiritless crowd of peasants, levied in haste by the try conallurements of plunder, and as eafily dispersed by a victory as by a defeat. The monarch and his nobles transported into the camp the pride and luxury of the feraglio. Their military operations were impeded by a useless train of women, eunuchs, horses, and camels, and in the midft of a fuccefsful campaign, the Perfian hoft was often separated or destroyed by an unexpected famine 56.

ry excellent.

But the nobles of Persia, in the bosom of luxury and despotism, Their cavalpreferved a strong sense of personal gallantry and national honour. From the age of feven years they were taught to speak truth, to shoot with the bow, and to ride; and it was univerfally confessed, that in the two last of these arts, they had made a more than common proficiency 57. The most distinguished youth were educated under the monarch's eye, practifed their exercises in the gate of his palace, and were feverely trained up to the habits of temperance and obedience, in their long and laborious parties of hunting. every province, the fatrap maintained a like fchool of military virtue. The Persian nobles (so natural is the idea of feudal tenures) received from the king's bounty lands and houses, on the condition of their fervice in war. They were ready on the first summons to mount on horseback, with a martial and splendid train of followers, and to join the numerous bodies of guards, who were carefully felected from among the most robust slaves, and the bravest ad-

<sup>56</sup> Herodian, l. vi. p. 214. Ammia- produced by a century and a half. historians, the natural effects of the changes East.

nus Marcellinus, I. xxiii. c. 6. Some dif- 57 The Persians are still the most skilful ferences may be observed between the two horsemen, and their horses the finest, in the CHAP. venturers of Asia. These armies, both of light and of heavy cavalry, equally formidable by the impetuofity of their charge, and the rapidity of their motions, threatened, as an impending cloud, the eastern provinces of the declining empire of Rome 58.

<sup>58</sup> From Herodotus, Xenophon, Herodian, as feem either common to every age, or par-Ammianus, Chardin, &c. I have extracted ticular to that of the Saffanides. fuch probable accounts of the Perfian nobility,

CHAP. IX.

The State of Germany till the Invasion of the Barbarians, in the Time of the Emperor Decius.

HE government and religion of Perfia have deserved some CHAP. notice from their connexion with the decline and fall of the Roman empire. We shall occasionally mention the Scythian, or Sarmatian tribes, which, with their arms and horfes, their flocks and herds, their wives and families, wandered over the immense plains which spread themselves from the Caspian Sea to the Vistula, from the confines of Persia to those of Germany. But the warlike Germans, who first refisted, then invaded, and at length overturned, the western monarchy of Rome, will occupy a much more important place in this hiftory, and possess a stronger, and, if we may use the expression, a more domestic, claim to our attention and regard. The most civilized nations of modern Europe issued from the woods of Germany, and in the rude inflitutions of those barbarians we may still distinguish the original principles of our prefent laws and manners. In their primitive state of simplicity and independence, the Germans were furveyed by the discerning eye, and delineated by the masterly pencil, of Tacitus, the first of historians who applied the science of philosophy to the study of facts. The expressive conciseness of his descriptions has deserved to exercife the diligence of innumerable antiquarians, and to excite the genius and penetration of the philosophic historians of our own times. The fubject, however various and important, has already been fo frequently, fo ably, and fo fuccefsfully discussed, that it is now grown

L1 2

C H A P. grown familiar to the reader, and difficult to the writer. We shall therefore content ourselves with observing, and indeed with repeating, some of the most important circumstances of climate, of manners, and of inflitutions, which rendered the wild barbarians of Germany fuch formidable enemies to the Roman power.

Extent of Germany.

Ancient Germany, excluding from its independent limits the province westward of the Rhine, which had submitted to the Roman yoke, extended itself over a third part of Europe. Almost the whole of modern Germany, Denmark, Norway, Sweden, Finland, Livonia, Pruffia, and the greater part of Poland, were peopled by the various tribes of one great nation, whose complexion, manners, and language, denoted a common origin, and preferved a striking resemblance. On the west, ancient Germany was divided by the Rhine from the Gallic, and on the fouth, by the Danube, from the Illyrian, provinces of the empire. A ridge of hills, rifing from the Danube, and called the Carpathian Mountains, covered Germany on the fide of Dacia or Hungary. The eastern frontier was faintly marked by the mutual fears of the Germans and the Sarmatians, and was often confounded by the mixture of warring and confederating tribes of the two nations. In the remote darkness of the north, the ancients imperfectly descried a frozen ocean that lay beyond the Baltic Sea, and beyond the Peninsula, or islands ' of Scandinavia.

Climate.

Some ingenious writers ' have fuspected that Europe was much colder formerly than it is at present; and the most ancient descriptions of the climate of Germany tend exceeedingly to confirm their feem agreed that the waters of the Baltic gra- citus, of the vaft countries round the Baltic. dually fink in a regular proportion, which they have ventured to estimate at half an inch every year. Twenty centuries ago, the flat country of Scandinavia must have been covered by the fea; while the high lands rofe above the waters, as so many islands of various forms and dimensions. Such indeed is their theory. The general complaints of intense frost, and eter- CHAP. nal winter, are perhaps little to be regarded, fince we have no method of reducing to the accurate standard of the thermometer, the feelings, or the expressions, of an orator, born in the happier regions of Greece or Afia. But I shall select two remarkable circumstances of a less equivocal nature. 1. The great rivers which covered the Roman provinces, the Rhine and the Danube, were frequently frozen over, and capable of supporting the most enormous weights. The barbarians, who often chose that severe season for their inroads, transported, without apprehension or danger, their numerous armies, their cavalry, and their heavy waggons, over a vaft and folid bridge of ice 3. Modern ages have not prefented an inflance of a like phænomenon. 2. The rein deer, that useful animal, from whom the favage of the North derives the best comforts of his dreary life, is of a constitution that supports, and even requires, the most intense cold. He is found on the rock of Spitzberg, within ten degrees of the Pole; he seems to delight in the snows of Lapland and Siberia; but at prefent he cannot fubfift, much less multiply, in any country to the fouth of the Baltic 4. In the time of Casar, the rein deer, as well as the elk, and the wild bull, was a native of the Hercynian forest, which then overshadowed a great part of Germany and Poland 5. The modern improvements sufficiently explain the causes of the diminution of the cold. These immense woods have been gradually cleared, which intercepted from the earth the rays

<sup>1</sup> The modern philosophers of Sweden the notion given us by Mela, Pliny, and Ta-See in the Bibliotheque Raisonnée, tom. xl and xlv, a large abstract of Dalin's History of Sweden, composed in the Swedish language.

&lt;sup>2</sup> In particular, Mr. Hume, the Abbé du Bos, and M. Pelloutier, Hift. des Celtes, tom. i.

&lt;sup>3</sup> Diodorus Siculus, I. v. p. 340. Edit. Mem. Weffel. Herodian, I. vi. p. 221. Jornandes, c. 55. On the banks of the Danube, the wine, when brought to table, was frequently frozen into great lumps, fruffa wini. Ovid.

5 Epift. ex Ponto, I. iv. 7. 9. 10. Virgil Georgic, I. iii. 355. The fact is confirmed by a foldier and a philofopher, who had experienced the intenfe cold of Thrace. See personal to the intenfe cold of Thrace.

Xenophon, Anabasis, 1. vii. p. 560. Edit. Hutchinson.

<sup>4</sup> Buffon Hiftoire Naturelle, tom.xii. p. 79.

<sup>5</sup> Cæfar de Bell, Gallic, vi. 23, &c. The most inquisitive of the Germans were ignorant of its utmost limits, although some of them had travelled in it more than fixty days j. utneva.

CHAP. of the fun 6. The moraffes have been drained, and, in proportion as the foil has been cultivated, the air has become more temperate. Canada, at this day, is an exact picture of ancient Germany. Although fituated in the fame parallel with the finest provinces of France and England, that country experiences the most rigorous cold. The rein deer are very numerous, the ground is covered with deep and lafting fnow, and the great river of St. Lawrence is regularly frozen, in a feafon when the waters of the Seine and the Thames are usually free from ice 7.

Its effects on the natives.

It is difficult to afcertain, and eafy to exaggerate, the influence of the climate of ancient Germany over the minds and bodies of the natives. Many writers have supposed, and most have allowed, though, as it should seem, without any adequate proof, that the rigorous cold of the North was favourable to long life and generative vigour, that the women were more fruitful, and the human species more prolifie, than in warmer or more temperate climates *. We may affert, with greater confidence, that the keen air of Germany formed the large and masculine limbs of the natives, who were, in general, of a more lofty flature than the people of the South 9, gave them a kind of strength better adapted to violent exertions than to patient labour, and inspired them with constitutional bravery, which is the refult of nerves and spirits. The feverity of a winter campaign, that chilled the courage of the Roman troops, was fcarcely felt by these hardy children of the North ", who, in their turn, were unable to refift the fummer heats,

c. 47.) investigates the fmall and scattered remains of the Hercynian Wood.

<sup>7</sup> Charlevoix Histoire du Canada,

<sup>8</sup> Olaus Rudbeck afferts that the Swedish not uncommonly twenty or thirty; but the

<sup>6</sup> Cluverius (Germania Antiqua, I. iii. authority of Rudbeck is much to be suspected. 9 In hos artus, in hæc corpora, quæ miramur, excrescunt. Tacit. Germania, 3. 20. Cluver. 1. i. c. 14.

<sup>10</sup> Plutarch. in Mario. The Cimbri, by women often bear ten or twelve children, and way of amusement, often slid down mountains of fnow on their broad shields.

and disfolved away in languor and sickness under the beams of an Italian fun ".

There is not any where upon the globe, a large tract of country, Origin of the which we have discovered destitute of inhabitants, or whose first population can be fixed with any degree of historical certainty. And yet, as the most philosophic minds can feldom refrain from invefligating the infancy of great nations, our curiofity confumes itself in toilfome and disappointed efforts. When Tacitus considered the purity of the German blood, and the forbidding aspect of the country, he was disposed to pronounce those barbarians Indigena, or Natives of the foil. We may allow with fafety, and perhaps with truth, that ancient Germany was not originally peopled by any foreign. colonies, already formed into a political fociety 12; but that the name and nation received their existence from the gradual union of some wandering favages of the Hercynian woods. To affert those savages to have been the spontaneous production of the earth which they inhabited, would be a rash inference, condemned by religion, and unwarranted by reason.

Such rational doubt is but ill-fuited with the genius of popular Fables and vanity. Among the nations who have adopted the Mofaic history of conjectures the world, the ark of Noah has been of the same use, as was formerly to the Greeks and Romans the fiege of Troy. On a narrow basis of acknowledged truth, an immense but rude superstructure of fable has been erected; and the wild Irishman 13, as well as the wild Tartar.

&quot; The Romans made war in all climates, and by their excellent discipline were in a great measure preserved in health and vigcur. It may be remarked, that man is the only animal which can live and multiply in every country from the equator to the poles. The cies in that privilege.

of the Gauls followed the course of the Danube, and discharged itself on Greece and Afia. Tacitus could discover only one inconfiderable tribe that retained any traces of a Gallic origin.

<sup>13</sup> According to Dr. Keating, (History of hog feems to approach the nearest to our species in that privilege.

Ireland, p. 13, 14.) the giant Partholanus, who was the son of Seara, the son of Estra, 12 Tacit. German. c. 3. The emigration the fun of Sru, the fon of Framant, the fon

CHAP. Tartar 4, could point out the individual fon of Japhet, from whose loins his ancestors were lineally descended. The last century abounded with antiquarians of profound learning and eafy faith, who, by the dim light of legends and traditions, of conjectures and etymologies, conducted the great-grandchildren of Noah from the Tower of Babel to the extremities of the globe. Of these judicious critics, one of the most entertaining was Olaus Rudbeck, professor in the university of Upfal 15. Whatever is celebrated either in hiftory or fable, this zealous patriot ascribes to his country. From Sweden (which formed fo confiderable a part of ancient Germany) the Greeks themselves derived their alphabetical characters, their aftronomy, and their religion. Of that delightful region (for fuch it appeared to the eyes of a native) the Atlantis of Plato, the country of the Hyperboreans, the gardens of the Hesperides, the Fortunate Islands, and even the Elysian Fields, were all but faint and imperfect transcripts. A clime so profusely favoured by Nature, could not long remain defert after the flood. The learned Rudbeck allows the family of Noah a few years to multiply from eight to about twenty thousand persons. He then disperses them into small colonies to replenish the earth, and to propagate the human species. The German or Swedish detachment (which marched, if I am not mislaken, under the command of Askenaz the fon of Gomer, the fon of Japhet) diftinguished itself by a more than common diligence in the profecution of this great work. The northern hive cast its swarms over the greatest part of Europe, Africa, and Asia:

> of Fathaclan, the fon of Magog, the fon of the learned historian very properly observes, laphet, the fon of Noah, landed on the coast of Munster, the 14th day of May, in the year of the world one thousand nine hundred and feventy-eight. Though he succeeded in his great enterprise, the loose behaviour of his wife rendered his domestic life very unhappy, and provoked him to fuch a degree, that he killed-her savourite greyhound. This, as Janvier et Fevrier, 1685.

was the first instance of female falsehood and infidelity ever known in Ireland.

14 Genealogical History of the Tartars by Abulghazi Bahadur Khan, 15 His work, entitled Atlantica, is uncommonly fcarce. Bayle has given two most curious extracts from it. Republique des Lettres

and

and (to use the author's metaphor) the blood circulated from the CHAP. extremities to the heart.

IX.

mans igno-

But all this well-laboured fystem of German antiquities is anni- The Gerhilated by a fingle fact, too well attested to admit of any doubt, and of too decifive a nature to leave room for any reply. The Ger- ters; mans, in the age of Tacitus, were unacquainted with the use of letters 16; and the use of letters is the principal circumstance that distinguishes a civilized people from a herd of favages incapable of knowledge or reflection. Without that artificial help, the human memory foon diffipates or corrupts the ideas intrufted to her charge; and the nobler faculties of the mind, no longer supplied with models or with materials, gradually forget their powers; the judgement becomes feeble and lethargic, the imagination languid or irregular. Fully to apprehend this important truth, let us attempt, in an improved fociety, to calculate the immense distance between the man of learning and the illiterate peafant. The former, by reading and reflection, multiplies his own experience, and lives in diffant ages and remote countries; whilft the latter, rooted to a fingle fpot. and confined to a few years of existence, surpasses, but very little, his fellow-labourer the ox in the exercise of his mental faculties. The fame, and even a greater, difference will be found between nations than between individuals; and we may fafely pronounce, that without some species of writing, no people has ever preserved the faithful annals of their history, ever made any confiderable pro-viri pariter ac fœminæ ignorant. We may rest contented with this decisive authority, without entering into the obscure disputes concerning the antiquity of the Runic characters. The learned Celfius, a Swede, a scholar, and a philosopher, was of opinion, that they were nothing more than the Roman letters, with the curves changed into flraight lines for the eafe of engraving. See Pellou-

16 Tacit. Germ. ii. 19. Literarum fecreta tier, Histoire des Celtes, I. ii. c. 11. Dictionaire Diplomatique, tom. i. p. 223. We may add, that the oldest Runic inscriptions are supposed to be of the third century, and the most ancient writer who mentions the Runic characters, is Venantius Fortunatus, (Carm. vii. 18.) who lived towards the end of the fixth century.

Barbara fraxincis pingatur Runa tabellis, of arts and agriculture;

CHAP. gress in the abstract sciences, or ever possessed, in any tolerable degree of perfection, the useful and agreeable arts of life.

> Of these arts, the ancient Germans were wretchedly destitute. They passed their lives in a state of ignorance and poverty, which it has pleased some declaimers to dignify with the appellation of virtuous fimplicity. Modern Germany is faid to contain about two thousand three hundred walled towns 17. In a much wider extent of country, the geographer Ptolemy could discover no more than ninety places, which he decorates with the name of cities *5; though, according to our ideas, they would but ill deferve that fplendid title. We can only suppose them to have been rude fortifications, constructed in the centre of the woods, and defigned to secure the women, children, and cattle, whilst the warriors of the tribe marched out to repel a fudden invasion 19. But Tacitus asserts, as a wellknown fact, that the Germans, in his time, had no cities 20; and that they affected to despise the works of Roman industry, as places of confinement rather than of fecurity 21. Their edifices were not even contiguous, or formed into regular villages 22; each barbarian fixed his independent dwelling on the fpot to which a plain, a wood, or a stream of fresh water, had induced him to give the preference. Neither stone, nor brick, nor tiles, were employed in these flight habitations 23. They were indeed no more than low huts of ricains, tom. iii. p. 228. The author of that very curious work is, if I am not misinformed, a German by birth.

<sup>18</sup> The Alexandrian Geographer is often criticifed by the accurate Cluverius.

<sup>19</sup> See Cafar, and the learned Mr. Whitaker in his History of Manchester, vol. i.

<sup>20</sup> Tacit. Germ. 15.

Ubii of Cologne to cast off the Roman yoke, and with their new freedom to refume their 1. vii. p. 234.

<sup>17</sup> Recherches Philosophiques sur les Ame- ancient manners, they insisted on the immediate demolition of the walls of the colony, " Postulamus a vebis, muros colonia, mu-

&quot; nimenta fervitii detrahatis; etiam fera ani-" malia, si clausa teneas, virtutis oblivis" cuntur." Tacit. Hist. iv. 64.

<sup>22</sup> The straggling villages of Silesia are several miles in length. See Cluver. l.i. c. 13, 23 One hundred and forty years after Ta-

When the Germans commanded the citus a few more regular structures were erected near the Rhine and Danube. Herodian.

a circular figure, built of rough timber, thatched with straw, and CHAP. pierced at the top to leave a free paffage for the fmoke. In the most inclement winter, the hardy German was satisfied with a scanty garment made of the skin of some animal. The nations who dwelt towards the North, clothed themselves in furs; and the women manufactured for their own use a coarse kind of linen 14. The game of various forts, with which the forests of Germany were plentifully flocked, fupplied its inhabitants with food and exercise 25. Their numerous herds of cattle, less remarkable indeed for their beauty than for their utility 26, formed the principal object of their wealth. A finall quantity of corn was the only produce exacted from the earth: the use of orchards or artificial meadows was unknown to the Germans; nor can we expect any improvements in agriculture from a people, whose property every year experienced a general change by a new division of the arable lands, and who, in that flrange operation, avoided disputes, by suffering a great part of their territory to lie waste and without tillage 27.

use of metals.

Gold, filver, and iron, were extremely scarce in Germany. Its and of the barbarous inhabitants wanted both skill and patience to investigate those rich veins of filver, which have so liberally rewarded the attention of the princes of Brunswick and Saxony. Sweden, which now fupplies Europe with iron, was equally ignorant of its own riches; and the appearance of the arms of the Germans furnished a fufficient proof how little iron they were able to bestow on what they must have deemed the noblest use of that metal. The various transactions of peace and war had introduced some Roman coins (chiefly filver) among the borderers of the Rhine and Danube; but the more difant tribes were absolutely unacquainted with the use of money, carried on their confined traffic by the exchange of commodities, and prized their rude earthen veffels as of equal value

<sup>24</sup> Tacit. Germ. 17. 25 Tacit. Germ. 5.

<sup>26</sup> Cæfar de Bell. Gall. vi. 21. 27 Tacit. Germ. 26. C.efar, vi. 22.

C H A P. with the filver vales, the presents of Rome to their princes and ambaffadors 28. To a mind capable of reflection, fuch leading facts convey more instruction, than a tedious detail of subordinate circumstances. The value of money has been fettled by general confent to express our wants and our property; as letters were invented to express our ideas; and both these institutions, by giving a more active energy to the powers and passions of human nature, have contributed to multiply the objects they were defigned to reprefent. The use of gold and filver is in a great measure factitious; but it would be impossible to enumerate the important and various fervices which agriculture, and all the arts, have received from iron, when tempered and fashioned by the operation of fire, and the dexterous hand of man. Money, in a word, is the most universal incitement, iron the most powerful instrument, of human industry; and it is very difficult to conceive by what means a people, neither actuated by the one, nor feconded by the other, could emerge from the groffest barbarifm 29.

Their indolence.

If we contemplate a favage nation in any part of the globe, a fupine indolence and a careleffness of futurity will be found to constitute their general character. In a civilized state, every faculty of man is expanded and exercifed; and the great chain of mutual dependence connects and embraces the feveral members of fociety. The most numerous portion of it is employed in constant and useful labour. The felect few, placed by fortune above that necessity, can, however, fill up their time by the pursuits of interest or glory, by the improvement of their effate or of their understanding, by the duties, the pleasures, and even the follies of social life. The Germans were not possessed of these varied resources. The care of arts. Those arts, and the monuments they 29 It is faid that the Mexicans and Peru- produced, have been strangely magnified. See vians, without the use of either money or Recherches fur les Americains, tom. ii. p.

<sup>28</sup> Tacit. Germ. 6.

ison, had made a very great progress in the 153, &c.

the house and family, the management of the land and cattle, were CHAP. delegated to the old and the infirm, to women and flaves. The lazy warrior, destitute of every art that might employ his leisure hours, confumed his days and nights in the animal gratifications of fleep and food. And yet, by a wonderful diversity of Nature, (according to the remark of a writer who had pierced into its darkest recesses), the same barbarians are by turns the most indolent and the most restless of mankind. They delight in sloth, they detest tranquillity 3°. The languid foul, oppressed with its own weight, anxioully required fome new and powerful fenfation; and war and danger were the only amusements adequate to its fierce temper. The found that fummoned the German to arms was grateful to his ear. It roused him from his uncomfortable lethargy, gave him an active pursuit, and, by strong exercise of the body, and violent emotions of the mind, restored him to a more lively sense of his existence. In the dull intervals of peace, these barbarians were immoderately addicted to deep gaming and excessive drinking; both of which, by different means, the one by inflaming their passions, the other by extinguishing their reason, alike relieved them from the pain of thinking. They gloried in passing whole days and nights at table; and the blood of friends and relations often flained their numerous and drunken affemblies ". Their debts of honour (for in that light they have transmitted to us those of play) they discharged with the most romantic fidelity. The desperate gamester, who had staked his person and liberty on a last throw of the dice, patiently submitted to the decision of fortune, and suffered himself to be bound, chastifed, and fold into remote flavery, by his weaker but more lucky antagonist 32.

Strong beer, a liquor extracted with very little art from wheat or Their tafte. barley, and corrupted (as it is strongly expressed by Tacitus) into a liquors.

<sup>3</sup>º Tacit. Germ. 15.

<sup>31</sup> Id. 22, 23.

<sup>3.</sup> Id. 24. The Germans might borrow fpecies.

the arts of play from the Romans, but the passion is wonderfully inherent in the human CHAP. certain femblance of wine, was fufficient for the groß purposes of German debauchery. But those who had tasted the rich wines of Italy, and afterwards of Gaul, fighed for that more delicious species of intoxication. They attempted not, however, (as has fince been executed with fo much fuccess) to naturalize the vine on the banks of the Rhine and Danube; nor did they endeavour to procure by industry the materials of an advantageous commerce. folicit by labour what might be ravished by arms, was esteemed unworthy of the German spirit ". The intemperate thirst of strong liquors often urged the barbarians to invade the provinces on which art or nature had bestowed those much envied presents. Tuscan who betrayed his country to the Celtic nations, attracted them into Italy by the prospect of the rich fruits and delicious wines, the productions of a happier climate 34. And in the same manner the German auxiliaries, invited into France during the civil wars of the fixteenth century, were allured by the promife of plenteous quarters in the provinces of Champagne and Burgundy 15. Drunkenness, the most illiberal, but not the most dangerous of our vices, was fometimes capable in a less civilized state of mankind of occasioning a battle, a war, or a revolution.

State of population.

The climate of ancient Germany has been mollified, and the foil fertilized, by the labour of ten centuries from the time of Charlemagne. The same extent of ground which at present maintains, in case and plenty, a million of husbandmen and artificers, was unable to fupply an hundred thousand lazy warriors with the fimple necessaries of life 35. The Germans abandoned their immense forests to the exercise of hunting, employed in pasturage the most consider-

<sup>33</sup> Tacit. Gorm. 14.

<sup>34</sup> Plutarch, in Camillo, T. Liv. v. 33. 35 Dubos. Hift. de la Monarchie Fran-çoife, tom. i. p. 193.

the curry carled Switzerland, contained, of excellent Tract of M. Muret, in the Meevery age and fex, 568,000 persons (Casar moires de la Societé de Bern.

de Bell. Gall. i. 29.). At prefent, the number of people in the Pays de Vaud (a fmall diffrict on the banks of the Leman Lake, much more diffinguished for politeness than 36 The Helv tire nation which iffued from for industry) amounts to 112,591. See an able part of their lands, bestowed on the small remainder a rude CHAP. and careless cultivation, and then accused the scantiness and sterility of a country that refused to maintain the multitude of its inhabitants. When the return of famine feverely admonished them of the importance of the arts, the national diffress was sometimes alleviated by the emigration of a third, perhaps, or a fourth part of their youth 17. The possession and the enjoyment of property are the pledges which bind a civilized people to an improved country. But the Germans, who carried with them what they most valued, their arms, their cattle, and their women, cheerfully abandoned the vast filence of their woods for the unbounded hopes of plunder and conquest. The innumerable swarms that issued, or seemed to issue, from the great storehouse of nations, were multiplied by the fears of the vanquished, and by the credulity of succeeding ages. And from facts thus exaggerated, an opinion was gradually established, and has been supported by writers of distinguished reputation, that, in the age of Cæsar and Tacitus, the inhabitants of the North were far more numerous than they are in our days 38. A more ferious inquiry into the causes of population, seems to have convinced modern philosophers of the falsehood, and indeed the impossibility, of the supposition. To the names of Mariana and of Machiavel 19, we can oppose the equal names of Robertson and Hume 40.

A warlike nation like the Germans, without either cities, letters, German arts, or money, found some compensation for this savage state in the enjoyment of liberty. Their poverty fecured their freedom. fince our defires and our possessions are the strongest fetters of defpotism. "Among the Suiones, (fays Tacitus) riches are held in ho-

Davila, and the rest of Paul's followers, re- liveliness of their fancy. present these emigrations too much as regular and concerted measures.

<sup>.8</sup> Sir William Temple and Montesquieu

<sup>37</sup> Paul Diaconus, c. 1, 2, 3. Machiavel, have indulged, on this subject, the usual.

<sup>39</sup> Machiavel Hift. di Firenze, 1. i. Mariana Hist. Hispan. l. v. c. 1.

<sup>4</sup>º Robertson's Cha. V. Hume's Politic, Eff.

CHAP. " nour. They are therefore subject to an absolute monarch, who, " instead of intrusting his people with the free use of arms, as is " practifed in the rest of Germany, commits them to the safe cus-" tody not of a citizen, or even of a freedman, but of a flave. " The neighbours of the Suiones, the Sitones, are funk even below " fervitude; they obey a woman "." In the mention of these exceptions, the great historian fufficiently acknowledges the general theory of government. We are only at a loss to conceive by what means riches and despotism could penetrate into a remote corner of the North, and extinguish the generous flame that blazed with such fierceness on the frontier of the Roman provinces: or how the ancestors of those Danes and Norwegians, so distinguished in latter ages by their unconquered spirit, could thus tamely resign the great character of German liberty 42. Some tribes, however, on the coast of the Baltic, acknowledged the authority of kings, though without relinquishing the rights of men 43; but in the far greater part of Germany, the form of government was a democracy, tempered, indeed, and controlled, not fo much by general and positive laws, as by the occasional ascendant of birth or valour, of eloquence or superstition 44.

Assemblies of the people.

Civil governments, in their first institutions, are voluntary associations for mutual defence. To obtain the defired end, it is absolutely necessary, that each individual should conceive himself obliged to fubmit his private opinion and actions, to the judgment of the Chiffina of Sweden) thinks proper to be very angry with the Roman who expressed so very little reverence for Northern queens.

<sup>42</sup> May we not suspect that superstition was the parent of despotism? The descendants of Odin (whose race was not extinct till the year 1060) are faid to have reigned in Sweden above a thousand years. The temple of greater number of his affociates. The German tribes were contented CHAP. with this rude but liberal outline of political fociety. As foon as a youth, born of free parents, had attained the age of manhood, he was introduced into the general council of his countrymen, folemnly invested with a shield and spear, and adopted as an equal and worthy member of the military commonwealth. The affembly of the warriors of the tribe was convened at stated seasons, or on sudden emergencies. The trial of public offences, the election of magistrates, and the great business of peace and war, were determined by its independent voice. Sometimes, indeed, these important questions were previously considered, and prepared in a more select council of the principal chieftains 45. The magistrates might deliberate and perfuade, the people only could refolve and execute; and the refolutions of the Germans were for the most part hasty and violent. Barbarians accustomed to place their freedom in gratifying the present passion, and their courage in overlooking all future consequences, turned away with indignant contempt, from the remonstrances of justice and policy, and it was the practice to fignify by a hollow murmur, their diflike of fuch timid councils. But whenever a more popular orator proposed to vindicate the meanest citizen from either foreign or domestic injury, whenever he called upon his fellow-countrymen to affert the national honour, or to purfue fome enterprise full of danger and glory, a loud clashing of shields and fpears expressed the eager applause of the assembly. For the Germans always met in arms, and it was conftantly to be dreaded, left an irregular multitude, inflamed with faction and ftrong liquors, should use those arms to enforce, as well as to declare, their furious resolves. We may recollect how often the diets of Poland have been polluted with blood, and the more nume-

<sup>4</sup> Tacit. Germ. 44, 45. Frenshemius Upsal was the ancient scat of religion and (who dedicated his supplement to Livy, to empire. In the year 1153 I find a fingular law, prohibiting the use and profession of arms to any except the king's guards. Is it not probable that it was coloured by the pretence of reviving an old inflitution? See Dalin's History of Sweden in the Bibliothêque Raifonnée, tom. xl. and xlv.

<sup>43</sup> Tacit. Germ. c. 43.

<sup>4;</sup> Id. c. 11, 12, 13, &c.

<sup>45</sup> Grotius changes an expression of Taci-correction is equally just and ingenious. tus, pertrassaur into pratrassaurus. The CHAP. rous party has been compelled to yield to the more violent and feditious 46.

A thority of rinces ama magi-Lates

A general of the tribe was elected on occasions of danger; and, if the danger was preffing and extensive, feveral tribes concurred in the choice of the same general. The bravest warrior was named to lead his countrymen into the field, by his example rather than by his commands. But this power, however limited, was still invidious. It expired with the war, and in time of peace the German tribes acknowledged not any fupreme chief 47. Princes were, however, appointed, in the general affembly, to administer justice, or rather to compose differences 48, in their respective districts. In the choice of these magistrates, as much regard was shewn to birth as to merit 49. To each was affigned, by the public, a guard, and a council of an hundred persons; and the first of the princes appears to have enjoyed a pre-eminence of rank and honour which fometimes tempted the Romans to compliment him with the regal title 50.

more abfolute over the property than over the perfons of the Germans.

The comparative view of the powers of the magistrates, in two remarkable inftances, is alone fufficient to represent the whole fystem of German manners. The disposal of the landed property within their district, was absolutely vested in their hands, and they distributed it every year according to a new division 51. At the same time they were not authorized to punish with death, to imprison, or even to strike, a private citizen 52. A people thus jealous of their persons, and careless of their possessions, must have been totally deftitute of industry and the arts, but animated with a high sense of honour and independence.

expression of Cæsar's.

49 Reges ex nobilitate, duces ex virtute fumunt. Tacit. Germ. 7.

The

<sup>46</sup> Even in our ancient parliament, the barons often carried a question, not so much by the number of votes as by that of their armed followers.

<sup>47</sup> Cæfar de Bell. Gall. vi. 23.

<sup>48</sup> Minuunt controversias, is a very happy

<sup>50</sup> Cluver. Germ. Ant. 1. i. c. 38.

<sup>51</sup> Cæfar, vi. 22. Tacit. Germ. 26.

<sup>52</sup> Tacit. Germ. 7.

The Germans respected only those duties which they imposed on CHAP. themselves. The most obscure soldier resisted with disdain the authority of the magistrates. "The noblest youths blushed not engage-" to be numbered among the faithful companions of some renowned " chief, to whom they devoted their arms and fervice. A noble " emulation prevailed among the companions to obtain the first " place in the esteem of their chief; amongst the chiefs to acquire "the greatest number of valiant companions. To be ever sur-" rounded by a band of select youths, was the pride and strength of the chiefs, their ornament in peace, their defence in war. "The glory of fuch diffinguished heroes diffused itself beyond the " narrow limits of their own tribe. Prefents and embaffies folicited "their friendship, and the fame of their arms often ensured " victory to the party which they espoused. In the hour of danger " it was shameful for the chief to be surpassed in valour by his " companions; shameful for the companions not to equal the " valour of their chief. To furvive his fall in battle, was indelible " infamy. To protect his person, and to adorn his glory with the "trophies of their own exploits, were the most sacred of their "duties. The chiefs combated for victory, the companions for the " chief. The nobleft warriors, whenever their native country was " funk in the laziness of peace, maintained their numerous bands " in some distant scene of action, to exercise their restless spirit, and " to acquire renown by voluntary dangers. Gifts worthy of " foldiers, the warlike steed, the bloody and ever victorious lance, " were the rewards which the companions claimed from the " liberality of their chief. The rude plenty of his hospitable board " was the only pay, that he could befrow, or they would accept. "War, rapine, and the free-will offerings of his friends, supplied " the materials of this munificence "." This institution, however 53 Tacit. Germ. 13, 14.

C H A P. it might accidentally weaken the feveral republics, invigorated the general character of the Germans, and even ripened amongst them, all the virtues of which barbarians are fusceptible; the faith and valour, the hospitality and the courtefy, so conspicuous long afterwards in the ages of chivalry. The honourable gifts, bestowed by the chief on his brave companions, have been supposed, by an ingenious writer, to contain the first rudiments of the fiefs, distributed, after the conquest of the Roman provinces, by the barbarian lords among their vaffals, with a fimilar duty of homage and military fervice 54. These conditions are, however, very repugnant to the maxims of the ancient Germans, who delighted in mutual prefents; but without either impoling, or accepting, the weight of obligations 55.

German chastity.

" In the days of chivalry, or more properly of romance, all the " men were brave, and all the women were chafte;" and notwithflanding the latter of these virtues is acquired and preserved with much more difficulty than the former, it is afcribed, almost without exception, to the wives of the ancient Germans. Polygamy was not in use, except among the princes, and among them only for the fake of multiplying their alliances. Divorces were prohibited by manners rather than by laws. Adulteries were punished as rare and inexpiable crimes; nor was feduction juffified by example and fashion 56. We may easily discover, that Tacitus indulges an honest pleasure in the contrast of barbarian virtue, with the dissolute conduct of the Roman ladies: yet there are fome striking circumstances that give an air of truth, or at least of probability, to the conjugal faith and chassity of the Germans.

<sup>54</sup> Esprit des Loix, 1. xxx. c. 3. The brilliant imagination of Montesquieu is corrected, however, by the dry cold reason of the Abbè de Mably. Observations fur l'Histoire de France, tom. i. p. 356.

<sup>55</sup> Gaudent muncribus, sed nec data im- band, 18, 19.

putant, nec acceptis obligantur. Tacit. Germ. c. 21.

<sup>50</sup> The adulteress was whipped through the village. Neither wealth nor beauty could inspire compassion, or procure her a second huf-Although

Although the progress of civilization has undoubtedly contributed CHAP. to affwage the fiercer passions of human nature, it seems to have been less favourable to the virtue of chastity, whose most dangerous causes. enemy is the foftness of the mind. The refinements of life corrupt while they polish the intercourse of the sexes. The gross appetite of love becomes most dangerous when it is elevated, or rather, indeed, disguised by sentimental passion. The elegance of drefs, of motion, and of manners, give a luftre to beauty, and inflame the fenses through the imagination. Luxurious entertainments, midnight dances, and licentious spectacles, present at once temptation and opportunity to female frailty 57. From fuch dangers, the unpolished wives of the barbarians were fecured, by poverty, folitude, and the painful cares of a domestic life. The German huts, open, on every fide, to the eye of indifcretion or jealoufy, were a better fafe-guard of conjugal fidelity, than the walls, the bolts, and the eunuchs of a Persian haram. To this reason, another may be added of a more honourable nature. The Germans treated their women with efteem and confidence, confulted them on every occafion of importance, and fondly believed, that in their breafts refided a fanctity and wifdom, more than human. Some of these interpreters of fate, fuch as Velleda, in the Batavian war, governed in the name of the deity, the fiercest nations of Germany 58. The rest of the sex, without being adored as goddesses, were respected as the free and equal companions of foldiers; affociated even by the marriage ceremony to a life of toil, of danger, and of glory 59. In their great invasions, the camps of the barbarians were filled with a multitude of women, who remained firm and undaunted amidst

-- T:

<sup>17</sup> Ovid employs two hundred lines in the research of places the most favourable to love. Above all, he confiders the theatre as the en, horses, and arms. See Germ. c. 18. best adapted to collect the beauties of Rome, Tacitus is formewhat too florid on the suband to melt them into tenderness and sensu- ject.

<sup>58</sup> Tacit. Hist. iv. 61. 65.

<sup>5)</sup> The marriage prefent was a yoke of ox-

CHAP, the found of arms, the various forms of destruction, and the honourable wounds of their fons and husbands 60. Fainting armies of Germans have more than once been driven back upon the enemy, by the generous despair of the women, who dreaded death much less than servitude. If the day was irrecoverably lost, they well knew how to deliver themselves and their children, with their own hands, from an infulting victor 61. Heroines of fuch a cast may claim our admiration; but they were most affuredly, neither lovely, nor very susceptible of love. Whilst they affected to emulate the flern virtues of man, they must have refigned that attractive softness in which principally confift the charm and weakness of woman. Conscious pride taught the German females to suppress every tender emotion that flood in competition with honour, and the first honour of the fex has ever been that of chastity. The fentiments and conduct of these high-spirited matrons may, at once, be considered as a cause, as an effect, and as a proof of the general character of the nation. Female courage, however it may be raifed by fanaticism, or confirmed by habit, can be only a faint and imperfect imitation of the manly valour that diffinguishes the age or country in which it may be found.

Religion.

The religious fystem of the Germans (if the wild opinions of favages can deserve that name) was dictated by their wants, their fears, and their ignorance 62. They adored the great visible objects and agents of Nature, the Sun and the Moon, the Fire and the Earth; together with those imaginary deities, who were supposed to prefide over the most important occupations of human life. They were

perfuaded.

<sup>60</sup> The change of exigere into exugere is a most excellent correction.

<sup>61</sup> Tacit. Germ. c. 7. Plutarch in Mario. Before the wives of the Teutones destroyed themselves and their children, they had offered to furrender, on condition that they should be received as the slaves of the vestal virgins.

<sup>62</sup> Tacitus has employed a few lines, and Cluverius one hundred and twenty-four pages, on this obscure subject. The former discovers in Germany the gods of Greece and Rome. The latter is positive, that, under the emblems of the fun, the moon, and the fire, his pious ancestors worshipped the Trinity in unity.

perfuaded, that, by fome ridiculous arts of divination, they could CHAP. discover the will of the superior beings, and that human facrifices were the most precious and acceptable offering to their altars. Some applause has been hastily bestowed on the sublime notion, entertained by that people, of the Deity, whom they neither confined within the walls of a temple, nor represented by any human figure; but when we recollect, that the Germans were unskilled in architecture, and totally unacquainted with the art of sculpture, we shall readily affign the true reason of a scruple, which arose not so much from a superiority of reason, as from a want of ingenuity. The only temples in Germany were dark and ancient groves, confecrated by the reverence of fucceeding generations. Their fecret gloom, the imagined refidence of an invifible power, by prefenting no distinct object of fear or worship, impressed the mind with a still deeper fense of religious horror 63; and the priests, rude and illiterate as they were, had been taught by experience the use of every artifice that could preferve and fortify impressions so well suited to their own interest.

The same ignorance, which renders barbarians incapable of con- Its effects in ceiving or embracing the uleful restraints of laws, exposes them naked peace, and unarmed to the blind terrors of superstition. The German priests, improving this favourable temper of their countrymen, had affumed a jurisdiction, even in temporal concerns, which the magistrate could not venture to exercife; and the haughty warrior patiently fubmitted to the lash of correction, when it was inflicted, not by any human power, but by the immediate order of the god of war 64. The defects of civil policy were fometimes supplied by the interpolition of eccleliaftical authority. The latter was constantly exerted to maintain filence and decency in the popular

63 The facred wood, described with such many of the same kind in Germany. fublime horror by Lucan, was in the neigh-64 Tacit. Germania, c. 7. bourhood of Marseilles; but there were affemblies :

C H A P. affemblies; and was fometimes extended to a more enlarged concern for the national welfare. A folemn procession was occasionally celebrated in the present countries of Mecklenburg and Pomerania. The unknown fymbol of the Earth, covered with a thick veil, was placed on a carriage drawn by cows; and in this manner, the goddefs, whose common residence was in the isle of Rugen, visited feveral adjacent tribes of her worshippers. During her progress, the found of war was hushed, quarrels were suspended, arms laid aside, and the reftless Germans had an opportunity of tasting the blessings of peace and harmony 65. The truce of God, fo often and fo ineffectually proclaimed by the clergy of the eleventh century, was an obvious imitation of this ancient custom 66.

an war.

But the influence of religion was far more powerful to inflame, than to moderate, the fierce passions of the Germans. Interest and fanaticism often prompted its ministers to fanctify the most daring and the most unjust enterprises, by the approbation of Heaven, and full affurances of fuccefs. The confecrated flandards, long revered in the groves of fuperfittion, were placed in the front of the battle 67; and the hoftile army was devoted with dire execrations to the gods of war and of thunder 68. In the faith of foldiers (and fuch were the Germans) cowardice is the most unpardonable of fins. A brave man was the worthy favourite of their martial deities; the wretch, who had loft his shield, was alike banished from the religious and the civil affemblies of his countrymen. Some tribes of the north feem to have embraced the doctrine of transmigration 69, others imagined a grofs paradife of immortal drunkenness 7°. All

<sup>65</sup> Tacit. Germania, c. 40.

<sup>66</sup> See Dr. Robertson's History of Charles V. vol. i. note 10.

<sup>67</sup> Tacit. Germ. c. 7. These standards were only the heads of wild beafts.

<sup>68</sup> See an inflance of this cuftom, Tacit.

afcribe this doctrine to the Gauls, but M. Pelloutier (Histoire des Celtes, l. iii. c. 18.) labours to reduce their expressions to a more orthodox fenfe.

<sup>70</sup> Concerning this grofs but alluring doctrine of the Edda, fee Fable xx in the curious version of that book, published by M. Mallet, 69 Cæsar, Diodorus, and Lucan, seem to in his introduction to the History of Denmark.

agreed, that a life fpent in arms, and a glorious death in battle, C II A P. were the best preparations for a happy futurity, either in this or in another world.

The immortality fo vainly promifed by the priefts, was, in fome The bards, degree, conferred by the bards. That fingular order of men has most deservedly attracted the notice of all who have attempted to investigate the antiquities of the Celts, the Scandinavians, and the Germans. Their genius and character, as well as the reverence paid to their important office, have been fufficiently illustrated. But we cannot fo eafily express, or even conceive, the enthusiasm of arms and glory, which they kindled in the breast of their audience. Among a polished people, a taste for poetry is rather an amusement of the fancy, than a passion of the soul. And yet, when in calm retirement we peruse the combats described by Homer or Taffo, we are infenfibly feduced by the fiction, and feel a momentary glow of martial ardour. But how faint, how cold is the fensation which a peaceful mind can receive from folitary study! It was in the hour of battle, or in the feast of victory, that the bards celebrated the glory of heroes of ancient days, the ancestors of those warlike chieftains, who liftened with transport to their artless but animated strains. The view of arms and of danger heightened the effect of the military fong; and the passions which it tended to excite, the defire of fame, and the contempt of death, were the habitual fentiments of a German mind 71.

Such was the fituation, and fuch were the manners, of the ancient Causes which Germans. Their climate, their want of learning, of arts, and of progress of laws, their notions of honour, of gallantry, and of religion, their the Germans.

<sup>71</sup> See Tacit. Germ. c. 3. Diodor. Sicul. and the Germans were the fame people. fused by Tyrtæus into the fainting Spartans. duced by fimilar fituations. Yet there is little probability that the Greeks

<sup>1.</sup> v. Strabo, I. iv. p. 197. The classical Much learned trisling might be spared, if reader may remember the rank of Demodo- our antiquarians would condescend to reflect, cus in the Phæacian court, and the ardour in- that fimilar manners will naturally be pro-

CHAP. fense of freedom, impatience of peace, and thirst of enterprise, all contributed to form a people of military heroes. And yet we find, that during more than two hundred and fifty years that elapfed from the defeat of Varus to the reign of Decius, these formidable barbarians made few confiderable attempts, and not any material impression on the luxurious and enslaved provinces of the empire. Their progrefs was checked by their want of arms and discipline, and their fury was diverted by the intestine divisions of ancient Germany.

Want of arms

I. It has been observed, with ingenuity, and not without truth, that the command of iron foon gives a nation the command of gold. But the rude tribes of Germany, alike destitute of both those valuable metals, were reduced flowly to acquire, by their unaffifted ftrength, the possession of the one as well as the other. The face of a German army displayed their poverty of iron. Swords, and the longer kind of lances, they could feldom use. Their frames (as they called them in their own language) were long spears headed with a sharp but narrow iron point, and which, as occasion required, they either darted from a distance or pushed in close onset. With this spear, and with a shield, their cavalry was contented. A multitude of darts, fcattered 72 with incredible force, were an additional resource of the infantry. Their military dress, when they wore any, was nothing more than a loofe mantle. A variety of colours was the only ornament of their wooden or ofier shields. Few of the chiefs were diffinguished by cuiraffes, scarce any by helmets. Though the horses of Germany were neither beautiful, fwift, nor practifed in the skilful evolutions of the Roman manage, feveral of the nations obtained renown by their cavalry; but, in general, the principal strength of the Germans consisted in their infantry 73, which was drawn up in feveral deep columns, according C H A P. to the distinction of tribes and families. Impatient of fatigue or _______IX. delay, these half-armed warriors rushed to battle with dissonant pline, fliouts and difordered ranks; and fometimes, by the effort of native valour, prevailed over the constrained and more artificial bravery of the Roman mercenaries. But as the barbarians poured forth their whole fouls on the first onset, they knew not how to rally or to retire. A repulse was a fure defeat; and a defeat was most commonly total destruction. When we recollect the complete armour of the Roman foldiers, their discipline, exercises, evolutions, fortified camps, and military engines, it appears a just matter of surprise how the naked and unaffifted valour of the barbarians could dare to encounter in the field, the strength of the legions, and the various troops of the auxiliaries, which feconded their operations. The contest was too unequal, till the introduction of luxury had enervated the vigour, and a spirit of disobedience and sedition had relaxed the discipline, of the Roman armies. The introduction of barbarian auxiliaries into those armies, was a measure attended with very obvious dangers, as it might gradually inftruct the Germans in the arts of war and of policy. Although they were admitted in small numbers and with the strictest precaution, the example of Civilis was proper to convince the Romans, that the danger was not imaginary, and that their precautions were not always fufficient 74. During the civil wars that followed the death of Nero, that artful and intrepid Batavian, whom his enemies condescended to compare with Hannibal and Sertorius 75, formed a great defign of freedom and ambition. Eight Batavian cohorts, renowned in the wars of Britain and Italy, repaired to his standard. He introduced horfeback.

<sup>22</sup> Miffilia spargunt, Tacit. Germ. c. 6. or he meant that they were thrown at ran-Either that historian used a vague expression, dom.

283

<sup>74</sup> The relation of this enterprise occupies a great part of the fourth and fifth books of loft an eye.

<sup>73</sup> It was their principal distinction from the History of Tacitus, and is more remarkthe Sarmatians, who generally fought on able for its eloquence than perspicuity. Sir Hen. Saville has observed several inaccuracies.

<sup>75</sup> Tacit. Hift. iv. 13. Like them he had CHAP. an army of Germans into Gaul, prevailed on the powerful cities of Treves and Langres to embrace his cause, defeated the legions, destroyed their fortified camps, and employed against the Romans the military knowledge which he had acquired in their fervice. When at length, after an obstinate struggle, he yielded to the power of the empire, Civilis fecured himself and his country by an honourable treaty. The Batavians still continued to occupy the islands of the Rhine 76, the allies not the fervants of the Roman monarchy.

Civil diffenfions of Germany,

II. The strength of ancient Germany appears formidable, when we confider the effects that might have been produced by its united effort. The wide extent of country might very possibly contain a million of warriors, as all who were of an age to bear arms, were of a temper to use them. But this fierce multitude, incapable of concerting or executing any plan of national greatness, was agitated by various and often hostile intentions. Germany was divided into more than forty independent states; and even in each state the union of the feveral tribes was extremely loofe and precarious. The barbarians were eafily provoked; they knew not how to forgive an injury, much less an infult; their refentments were bloody and implacable. The cafual disputes that so frequently happened in their tumultuous parties of hunting or drinking, were fufficient to inflame the minds of whole nations; the private feud of any confiderable chieftains diffused itself among their followers and allies. To chassife the infolent, or to plunder the defenceless, were alike causes of war. The most formidable states of Germany affected to encompass their territories with a wide frontier of solitude and devastation. The awful distance preserved by their neighbours. attested the terror of their arms, and in some measure defended them from the danger of unexpected incursions 77.

<sup>76</sup> It was contained between the two branches nature. See Cluver. German. Antiq. I. ii. of the old Rhine, as they subsisted before the face of the country was changed by art and c. 30. 37. Cæsar. de Bell. Gall. 1. vi. 23.

"The Bructeri (it is Tacitus who now speaks) were totally ex- CHAP. " terminated by the neighbouring tribes 78, provoked by their info " lence, allured by the hopes of spoil, and perhaps inspired by the the policy of "tutelar deities of the empire. Above fixty thousand barbarians " were destroyed; not by the Roman arms, but in our fight, and " for our entertainment. May the nations, enemies of Rome, ever " preferve this enmity to each other! We have now attained the " utmost verge of prosperity 79, and have nothing left to demand " of Fortune except the discord of the barbarians "." These sentiments, less worthy of the humanity than of the patriotism of Tacitus, express the invariable maxims of the policy of his countrymen. They deemed it a much fafer expedient to divide than to combat the barbarians, from whose defeat they could derive neither honour nor advantage. The money and negociations of Rome infinuated themselves into the heart of Germany; and every art of feduction was used with dignity, to conciliate those nations whom their proximity to the Rhine or Danube might render the most useful friends, as well as the most troublesome enemies. Chiefs of renown and power were flattered by the most trifling presents, which they received either as marks of distinction, or as the instruments of luxury. In civil diffensions, the weaker faction endeavoured to strengthen its interest by entering into secret connexions with the governors of the frontier provinces. Every quarrel among the Germans was fomented by the intrigues of Rome; and every plan of union and public good was defeated by the stronger bias of private jealoufy and interest ".

<sup>-3</sup> They are mentioned however in the ivth and vth centuries by Nazarius, Ammianus, Claudian, &c. as a tribe of Franks. See Cluver, Germ. Antiq. I. iii. c. 13.

<sup>79</sup> Urgentibus is the common reading, but good sense, Lipsius, and some MSS. declare for Vergentibus.

<sup>80</sup> Tacit. Germania, c. 33. The pious

Abbè de la Bleterie is very angry with Tacitus, talks of the devil who was a murderer from the beginning, &c. &c.

<sup>81</sup> Many traces of this policy may be difcovered in Tacitus and Dion; and many more may be inferred from the principles of human nature.

C H A P.
IX.
Transient union against Marcus Antoninus.

The general conspiracy which terrified the Romans under the reign of Marcus Antoninus, comprehended almost all the nations of Germany, and even Sarmatia, from the mouth of the Rhine to that of the Danube 82. It is impossible for us to determine whether this hafty confederation was formed by necessity, by reason, or by passion; but we may rest assured, that the barbarians were neither allured by the indolence, or provoked by the ambition, of the Roman monarch. This dangerous invafion required all the firmness and vigilance of Marcus. He fixed generals of ability in the feveral flations of attack, and affumed in person the conduct of the most important province on the Upper Danube. After a long and doubtful conflict, the spirit of the barbarians was subdued. The Quadi and the Marcomanni 23, who had taken the lead in the war, were the most feverely punished in its catastrophe. They were commanded to retire five miles '4 from their own banks of the Danube, and to deliver up the flower of the youth, who were immediately fent into Britain, a remote island, where they might be secure as hostages, and useful as soldiers 85. On the frequent rebellions of the Quadi and Marcomanni, the irritated emperor refolved to reduce their country into the form of a province. His defigns were difappointed by death. This formidable league, however, the only one that appears in the two first centuries of the Imperial history, was entirely diffipated, without leaving any traces behind in Germany.

the German tribes. In the course of this introductory chapter, we have confined ourfelves to the general outlines of the manners of Germany, without attempting

<sup>82</sup> Hift. August. p. 31. Ammian. Marcellin. I. xxxi. c. 5. Aurel. Victor. The emperor Marcus was reduced to fell the rich furniture of the palace, and to inlist slaves and robbers.

&lt;sup>3</sup> The Marcomanni, a colony, who, from the banks of the Rhine, occupied Bohemia and Moravia, had once erected a great and formidable monarchy under their king Maro-

<sup>52</sup> Hift, August, p. 31. Ammian, Marboduus, See Strabo, I. vii. Vell. Pat. 11. ellin, I. xxxi. c. 5. Aurel. Victor. The 105. Tacit, Annal. ii. 63.

<sup>84</sup> Mr. Wotton (Hiftory of Rome, p. 166.) increases the prohibition to ten times the diftance. His reasoning is specious but not conclusive. Five miles were sufficient for a fortistied barrier.

<sup>85</sup> Dion, I. lxxi and lxxii.

attempting to describe or to distinguish the various tribes which CHAP. filled that great country in the time of Cæsar, of Tacitus, or of Ptolemy. As the ancient, or as new tribes fuccessively present themfelves in the feries of this history, we shall concisely mention their origin, their fituation, and their particular character. Modern nations are fixed and permanent focieties, connected among themselves by laws and government, bound to their native foil by arts and The German tribes were voluntary and fluctuating affociations of foldiers, almost of favages. The same territory often changed its inhabitants in the tide of conquest and emigration. The fame communities, uniting in a plan of defence or invalion, beflowed a new title on their new confederacy. The diffolution of an ancient confederacy restored to the independent tribes their peculiar but long forgotten appellations. A victorious state often communicated its own name to a vanquished people. Sometimes crowds of volunteers flocked from all parts to the standard of a favourite leader; his camp became their country, and some circumstance of the enterprise foon gave a common denomination to the mixed multitude. The distinctions of the ferocious invaders were perpetually varied by themselves, and confounded by the astonished subjects of the Roman empire 86.

Wars, and the administration of public affairs, are the principal Numbers. subjects of history; but the number of persons interested in these bufy scenes, is very different, according to the different condition of mankind. In great monarchies, millions of obedient fubjects purfue their ufeful occupations in peace and obscurity. The attention of the Writer, as well as of the Reader, is folely confined to a court, a capital, a regular army, and the districts which happen to be the occasional scene of military operations. But a state of freedom and barbarism,

<sup>86</sup> See an excellent differtation on the ori- xviii. p. 48-71. It is feldom that the antigin and migrations of nations, in the Me- quarian and the philosopher are so happily moires de l'Academie des Inscriptions, tom. blended.

C II A P. barbarism, the season of civil commotions, or the situation of petty republics 87, raises almost every member of the community into action, and confequently into notice. The irregular divisions, and the restless motions, of the people of Germany, dazzle our imagination, and feem to multiply their numbers. The profuse enumeration of kings and warriors, of armies and nations, inclines us to forget that the same objects are continually repeated under a variety of appellations, and that the most splendid appellations have been frequently lavished on the most inconsiderable objects.

> 87 Should we suspect that Athens contained the number of mankind in ancient and moonly 21,000 citizens, and Sparta no more dern times. than 39,000? See Hume and Wallace on

CHAP. X.

The Emperors Decius, Gallus, Æmilianus, Valerian, and Gallienus.—The general Irruption of the Barbarians.— The thirty Tyrants.

ROM the great fecular games celebrated by Philip, to the CHAP.

According to the emperor Gallienus, there elapsed twenty years of shame and misfortune. During that calamitous period, every of the subinflant of time was marked, every province of the Roman world ject. was affliced, by barbarous invaders and military tyrants, and the 268. ruined empire feemed to approach the last and fatal moment of its dissolution. The confusion of the times, and the scarcity of authentic memorials, oppose equal difficulties to the historian, who attempts to preferve a clear and unbroken thread of narration. Surrounded with imperfect fragments, always concife, often obscure, and sometimes contradictory, he is reduced to collect, to compare, and to conjecture: and though he ought never to place his conjectures in the rank of facts, yet the knowledge of human nature, and of the fure operation of its fierce and unrestrained passions, might, on fome occasions, supply the want of historical materials.

There is not, for instance, any difficulty in conceiving, that the The emperor fuccessive murders of so many emperors had loosened all the ties of allegiance between the prince and people; that all the generals of Philip were disposed to imitate the example of their master, and that the caprice of armies, long fince habituated to frequent and violent revolutions, might every day raife to the throne the most obscure of their fellow-foldiers. Hiftory can only add, that the rebellion against the emperor Philip broke out in the summer of the year two hundred and forty-nine, among the legions of Mæsia; and that a fubaltern

Pр

VOL. I.

Services, revolt, victory, and reign of the emperor Decius. A. D. 249.

CHAP. a subaltern officer', named Marinus, was the object of their feditious choice. Philip was alarmed. He dreaded lest the treason of the Mæsian army should prove the first spark of a general conflagration. Diffracted with the consciousness of his guilt and of his danger, he communicated the intelligence to the fenate. A gloomy filence prevailed, the effect of fear, and perhaps of difaffection: till at length Decius, one of the affembly, affuming a spirit worthy of his noble extraction, ventured to discover more intrepidity than the emperor feemed to possels. He treated the whole bufiness with contempt, as a hasty and inconsiderate tumult, and Philip's rival as a phantom of royalty, who in a very few days would be deftroyed by the fame inconflancy that had created him. The fpeedy completion of the prophecy inspired Philip with a just efteem for fo able a counfellor; and Decius appeared to him the only person capable of restoring peace and discipline to an army, whose tumultuous spirit did not immediately subside after the murder of Marinus. Decius, who long refisted his own nomination, feems to have infinuated the danger of prefenting a leader of merit, to the angry and apprehensive minds of the foldiers; and his prediction was again confirmed by the event. The legions of Mæsia forced their judge to become their accomplice. They left him only the alternative of death or the purple. His subsequent conduct, after that decisive measure, was unavoidable. He conducted, or followed, his army to the confines of Italy, whither Philip, collecting all his force to repel the formidable competitor whom he had raifed up, advanced to meet him. The Imperial troops were fuperior in number 2; but the rebels century, a cohort, or a legion.

merely accidental, his supposed descent from in Livy, x. 9, 10. the Decii. Six hundred years had bestowed

' The expression used by Zosimus and Zo- nobility on the Decii; but at the commencenaras may fignify that Marinus commanded a ment of that period, they were only Plebeians of merit, and among the first who shared 2 His birth at Bubalia, a little village in the confulfhip with the haughty Patricians. Pannonia (Eutrop. ix. Victor. in Cafarib. et Plebeia Deciorum anima, &c. Juvenal, Sat. Epitom.) feems to contradict, unless it was viii. 254. See the spirited speech of Decius formed

formed an army of Veterans, commanded by an able and experienced CHAP. leader. Philip was either killed in the battle, or put to death a few days afterwards at Verona. His fon and affociate in the empire was maffacred at Rome by the Prætorian guards; and the victorious Decius, with more favourable circumstances than the ambition of that age can usually plead, was universally acknowledged by the fenate and provinces. It is reported, that immediately after his reluctant acceptance of the title of Augustus, he had affured Philip by a private meffage, of his innocence and loyalty, folemnly protesting, that, on his arrival in Italy, he would refign the Imperial ornaments, and return to the condition of an obedient subject. His professions might be fincere. But in the situation where fortune had placed him, it was scarcely possible that he could either forgive or be forgiven 3.

A. D. 250.

The emperor Decius had employed a few months in the works He marches of peace and the administration of justice, when he was summoned Goths. to the banks of the Danube by the invasion of the Goths. is the first considerable occasion in which history mentions that great people, who afterwards broke the Roman power, facked the Capitol, and reigned in Gaul, Spain, and Italy. So memorable was the part which they acted in the subversion of the Western empire, that the name of Goths is frequently but improperly used as a general appellation of rude and warlike barbarifm.

In the beginning of the fixth century, and after the conquest of Origin of the Italy, the Goths, in possession of present greatness, very naturally Scandinavia. indulged themselves in the prospect of past and of future glory. They wished to preserve the memory of their ancestors, and to transmit to posterity their own atchievements. The principal minister of the court of Ravenna, the learned Cashodorus, gratified the inclination of the conquerors in a Gothic history, which confisted of twelve

&lt;sup>3</sup> Zofimus, 1. i. p. 20. Zonaras, 1. xii. p. 624. Edit. Louvre.

CHAP. books, now reduced to the imperfect abridgment of Jornandes 4. These writers passed with the most artful conciseness over the misfortunes of the nation, celebrated its fuccessful valour, and adorned the triumph with many Afiatic trophies, that more properly belonged to the people of Scythia. On the faith of ancient fongs, the uncertain, but the only, memorials of barbarians, they deduced the first origin of the Goths, from the vast island, or peninsula, of Scandinavia 5. That extreme country of the North was not unknown to the conquerors of Italy; the ties of ancient confanguinity had been ffrengthened by recent offices of friendship; and a Scandinavian king had cheerfully abdicated his favage greatness, that he might pass the remainder of his days in the peaceful and polifhed court of Ravenna 6. Many veftiges, which cannot be ascribed to the arts of popular vanity, attest the ancient residence of the Goths in the countries beyond the Baltic. From the time of the geographer Ptolemy, the fouthern part of Sweden feems to have continued in the possession of the less enterprising remnant of the nation, and a large territory is even at prefent divided into east and west Gothland. During the middle ages (from the ninth to the twelfth century) whilft Christianity was advancing with a flow progress into the north, the Goths and the Swedes composed two distinct and fometimes hostile members of the same monarchy 7. The latter of these two names has prevailed without extinguishing the former. The Swedes, who might well be fatisfied with their own fame in arms, have, in every age, claimed the kindred glory of the Goths. In a moment of discontent against the court of Rome, Charles the

<sup>4</sup> See the prefaces of Cassiodorus and Jornandes: it is furprifing that the latter flould be omitted in the excellent edition published by Grotius, of the Gothic writers.

<sup>5</sup> On the authority of Ablavius, Jornandes quotes fome old Gothic chronicles in verfe-De Reb. Geticis, c. 4.

<sup>6</sup> Jornandes, c. 3.

<sup>7</sup> See in the Prolegomena of Grotius fome large extracts from Adam of Bremen, and Saxo-Grammaticus. The former wrote in the year 1077, the latter flourished about the year 1200.

Twelfth infinuated, that his victorious troops were not degenerated CHAP. from their brave ancestors, who had already subdued the mistress of the world 8.

Till the end of the eleventh century, a celebrated temple subfifted Religion of at Upfal, the most considerable town of the Swedes and Goths. was enriched with the gold which the Scandinavians had acquired in their pyratical adventures, and fanctified by the uncouth reprefentations of the three principal deities, the god of war, the goddess of generation, and the god of thunder. In the general festival, that was folemnized every ninth year, nine animals of every species (without excepting the human) were facrificed, and their bleeding bodies fuspended in the facred grove adjacent to the temple?. The only traces that now fublish of this barbaric fuperstition are contained in the Edda, a fystem of mythology, compiled in Iceland about the thirteenth century, and studied by the learned of Denmark and Sweden, as the most valuable remains of their ancient traditions.

the Goths.

Notwithstanding the mysterious obscurity of the Edda, we can Institutions eafily diffinguish two persons confounded under the name of Odin; and death of Odin; the god of war, and the great legislator of Scandinavia. The latter, the Mahomet of the north, inflituted a religion adapted to the climate and to the people. Numerous tribes on either fide of the Baltic were fubdued by the invincible valour of Odin, by his perfuafive eloquence, and by the fame, which he acquired, of a most skilful magician. The faith that he had propagated during a long and prosperous life, he confirmed by a voluntary death. Apprehensive of the ignominious approach of disease and infirmity, he resolved to menis, p. 104. The temple of Upfal was destroyed by Ingo king of Sweden, who began his reign in the year 1075, and about fouricore years afterwards a Christian Cathedral was erected on its ruins. See Dalin's History of Sweden in the Libliotheque Raifonnée,

* Voltaire, Histoire de Charles XII. 1. iii. When the Austrians defired the aid of the court of Rome against Gustavus Adolphus, they always reprefented that conqueror as the lineal fuccessor of Alaric. Harte's History of Gustavus, vol. ii. p. 123.

<sup>9</sup> See Adam of Bremen in Grotii Prolego-

CHAP, expire as became a warrior. In a folemn affembly of the Swedes and Goths, he wounded himfelf in nine mortal places, haftening away (as he afferted with his dying voice) to prepare the feaft of heroes in the palace of the god of war ".

Agrecable but uncertain hypothesis concerning Odin.

The native and proper habitation of Odin is diffinguished by the appellation of As-gard. The happy refemblance of that name with As-burg, or As-of ", words of a fimilar fignification, has given rife to an historical fyshem of so pleasing a contexture, that we could almost wish to persuade ourselves of its truth. It is supposed that Odin was the chief of a tribe of barbarians which dwelt on the banks of the lake Mæotis, till the fall of Mithridates and the arms of Pompey menaced the north with fervitude. That Odin, yielding with indignant fury to a power which he was unable to refift, conducted his tribe from the frontiers of the Afiatic Sarmatia into Sweden, with the great defign of forming, in that inacceffible retreat of freedom, a religion and a people, which, in fome remote age, might be fubservient to his immortal revenge; when his invincible Goths, armed with martial fanaticism, should issue in numerous swarms from the neighbourhood of the Polar circle, to chastise the oppressors of mankind 12.

Emigration from Scandinavia into Pruffia.

If fo many fuccessive generations of Goths were capable of preferving a faint tradition of their Scandinavian origin, we must not expect, from fuch unlettered barbarians, any diffinct account of the time and circumflances of their emigration. To crofs the Baltic

10 Mallet, Introduction à l'Histoire du Dannemarc.

Mallet, c. iv. p. 55, has collected from Strabo, Pliny, Ptolemy, and Stephanus Byzantinus, the veftiges of fuch a city and people. 12 This wonderful expedition of Odin, which, by deducing the enmity of the Goths and Romans from fo memorable a cause, scend, when he announced his new religion might fupply the noble ground-work of an to the Gothic nations, who were already thentic history. According to the obvious fense of the Edda, and the interpretation of the most skilful critics, As-gard, instead of denoting a real city of the Afiatic Sarmatia, is the fictitious appellation of the myflic abode of the gods, the Olympus of Scandinavia; from whence the prophet was supposed to de-Epic Poem, cannot fafely be received as au- feated in the fouthern parts of Sweden.

was an casy and natural attempt. The inhabitants of Sweden were CHAP. masters of a sufficient number of large vessels, with oars ", and the distance is little more than one hundred miles from Carlscroon to the nearest ports of Pomerania and Prussia. Here, at length, we land on firm and historic ground. At least as early as the Christian æra 14, and as late as the age of the Antonines 15, the Goths were established towards the mouth of the Viftula, and in that fertile province where the commercial cities of Thorn, Elbing, Koningsberg, and Dantzick, were long afterwards founded 16. Westward of the Goths, the numerous tribes of the Vandals were fpread along the banks of the Oder, and the fea-coast of Pomerania and Mecklenburgh. A striking refemblance of manners, complexion, religion, and language, feemed to indicate that the Vandals and the Goths were originally one great people 17. The latter appear to have been fubdivided into Offrogoths, Vifigoths, and Gepidæ 18. The diffinction among the Vandals was more ftrongly marked by the independent names of Heruli, Burgundians, Lombards, and a variety of other petty flates, many of which, in a future age, expanded themselves into powerful monarchies.

In the age of the Antonines, the Goths were still feated in From Prussia Prussia. About the reign of Alexander Severus, the Roman pro- Ukraine.

<sup>13</sup> Tacit. Germania, c. 44.

<sup>14</sup> Tacit. Annal. ii. 62. If we could yield a firm affent to the navigations of Pytheas of Marseilles, we must allow that the Goths had passed the Baltic at least three hundred years before Christ.

<sup>15</sup> Ptolemy, l. ii.

<sup>15</sup> By the German colonies who followed the arms of the Teutonic knights. The conquest and conversion of Prussia were completed by those adventurers in the xiiith cen-

<sup>17</sup> Pliny (Hift. Natur. iv. 14.), and Procopius (in Bell. Vandal. l. i. c. 1.) agree in this opinion. They lived in distant ages, and possessed different means of investigating the <sup>18</sup> The Offro and Vist, the eastern and western Goths obtained those denominations from their original feats in Scandinavia. In all their future marches and fettlements they preserved, with their names, the same relative fituation. When they first departed from Sweden, the infant colony was contained in three veffels. The third being a heavy failor lagged behind, and the crew, which afterwards fivelled into a nation, received from that circumstance the appellation of Gepidæ or Loiterers. Jornandes, c. 17.

C H A P. vince of Dacia had already experienced their proximity by frequent and destructive inroads 19. In this interval therefore, of about seventy years, we must place the second migration of the Goths, from the Baltic to the Euxine; but the cause that produced it lies concealed among the various motives which actuate the conduct of unfettled barbarians. Either a pestilence, or a famine, a victory, or a defeat, an oracle of the Gods, or the eloquence of a daring leader, were fufficient to impel the Gothic arms on the milder climates of the fouth. Besides the influence of a martial religion, the numbers and spirit of the Goths were equal to the most dangerous adven-The use of round bucklers and short swords rendered them formidable in a close engagement; the manly obcdience which they yielded to hereditary kings gave uncommon union and flability to their councils *o, and the renowned Amala, the hero of that age and the tenth ancestor of Theodoric, king of Italy, enforced, by the afcendant of perfonal merit, the prerogative of his birth, which he derived from the Anses, or demigods of the Gothic nation 21.

The Gothic nation increases in its march.

The fame of a great enterprise excited the bravest warriors from all the Vandalic states of Germany, many of whom are seen a few years afterwards combating under the common flandard of the Goths ". The first motions of the emigrants carried them to the banks of the Prypec, a river univerfally conceived by the ancients to be the fouthern branch of the Borysthenes 23. The windings of that 19 See a fragment of Peter Patricius in the gundi, are particularly mentioned. See Maf-Excerpta Legationum, and with regard to its probable date, fee Tillemont, Hiff. des Empereurs, tom. iii. p. 346.

20 Omnium harum gentium infigne, rotunda feuta, breves gladii, et erga reges obsequium. Tacit. Germania, c. 43. The Goths probably acquired their iron by the commerce

21 Jornandes, c. 13, 14.

22 The Heruli, and the Uregundi or Bur-cou's History of the Germans, I. v. A paffage in the Augustan History, p. 28, seems to allude to this great emigration. The Marcomannic war was partly occasioned by the pressure of barbarous tribes, who sled before the arms of more northern barbarians.

23 Danville, Geographie Ancienne, and the third part of his incomparable map of great stream through the plains of Poland and Russia gave a CHAP. direction to their line of march, and a conflant supply of fresh water and pasturage to their numerous herds of cattle. They followed the unknown course of the river, confident in their valour, and careless of whatever power might oppose their progress. The Bastarnæ and the Venedi were the first who presented themselves: and the flower of their youth, either from choice or compulsion. increased the Gothic army. The Bastarnæ dwelt on the northern fide of the Carpathian mountains; the immense tract of land that feparated the Bastarnæ from the savages of Finland, was possessed, or rather wasted, by the Venedi 24: we have some reason to believe that the first of these nations, which distinguished itself in the Macedonian war 25, and was afterwards divided into the formidable tribes of the Peucini, the Borani, the Carpi, &c. derived its origin from the Germans. With better authority, a Sarmatian extraction may be affigned to the Venedi, who rendered themselves so famous in the middle ages 26. But the confusion of blood and manners on Distinction of that doubtful frontier often perplexed the most accurate ob- Sarmatians. fervers 27. As the Goths advanced nearer the Euxine fea, they encountered a purer race of Sarmatians, the Jazyges, the Alani, and the Roxolani; and they were probably the first Germans who faw the mouths of the Borysthenes, and of the Tanais. If we inquire into the characteristic marks of the people of Germany and of Sarmatia, we shall discover that those two great portions of human kind were principally diffinguished by fixed huts or moveable tents, by a close dress, or flowing garments, by the marriage of one or of feveral wives, by a military force, confifting, for the most part, either of infantry or of cavalry; and above all by the use of fame people. Jornandes, c. 24.

<sup>24</sup> Tacit. Germania, c. 46.

<sup>25</sup> Cluver, Germ. Antiqua, 1. iii. c. 43. Antes, were the three great tribes of the diligent inquiries.

<sup>27</sup> Tacitus most assuredly deserves that title, 26 The Venedi, the Slavi, and the and even his cautious suspense is a proof of his

VOL. I.

CHAP. the Teutonic, or of the Sclavonian language; the last of which has been diffused by conquest, from the confines of Italy to the neighbourhood of Japan.

Description of the Ukraine.

The Goths were now in possession of the Ukraine, a country of confiderable extent and uncommon fertility, interfected with navigable rivers, which, from either fide, discharge themselves into the Borysthenes; and interspersed with large and lofty forests of oaks. The plenty of game and fish, the innumerable bee-hives, deposited in the hollow of old trees, and in the cavities of rocks, and forming, even in that rude age, a valuable branch of commerce, the fize of the cattle, the temperature of the air, the aptness of the foil for every species of grain, and the luxuriancy of the vegetation, all displayed the liberality of Nature, and tempted the industry of man 28. But the Goths withstood all these temptations, and still adhered to a life of idleness, of poverty, and of rapine.

The Goths invade the Roman provinces.

The Scythian hords, which, towards the east, bordered on the new fettlements of the Goths, prefented nothing to their arms, except the doubtful chance of an unprofitable victory. But the profpect of the Roman territories was far more alluring; and the fields of Dacia were covered with rich harvests, fown by the hands of an industrious, and exposed to be gathered by those of a warlike, people. It is probable, that the conquests of Trajan, maintained by his fucceffors, less for any real advantage, than for ideal dignity, had contributed to weaken the empire on that fide. The new and unfettled province of Dacia was neither flrong enough to refift, nor rich enough to fatiate, the rapaciousness of the barbarians. As long as the remote banks of the Niester were considered as the boundary of the Roman power, the fortifications of the Lower Da-

28 Genealogical History of the Tartars, p. country is a just representation of the ancient, nube were more carelessly guarded, and the inhabitants of Mæsia CHAP. lived in supine security, fondly conceiving themselves at an inaccessible distance from any barbarian invaders. The irruptions of the Goths, under the reign of Philip, fatally convinced them of their mistake. The king or leader of that fierce nation traversed with contempt the province of Dacia, and passed both the Niester and the Danube without encountering any opposition capable of retarding his progress. The relaxed discipline of the Roman troops betrayed the most important posts, where they were stationed, and the fear of deferved punishment induced great numbers of them to inlift under the Gothic standard. The various multitude of barbarians appeared, at length, under the walls of Marcianopolis, a city built by Trajan in honour of his fifter, and at that time the capital of the fecond Mæsia 29. The inhabitants consented to ranfom their lives and property, by the payment of a large fum of money, and the invaders retreated back into their deferts, animated, rather than fatisfied, with the first success of their arms against an opulent but feeble country. Intelligence was foon transmitted to the emperor Decius, that Cniva, king of the Goths, had paffed the Danube a fecond time, with more confiderable forces; that his numerous detachments feattered devastation over the province of Mæsia, whilst the main body of the army, consisting of seventy thousand Germans and Sarmatians, a force equal to the most daring atchievements, required the presence of the Roman monarch, and the exertion of his military power.

<sup>593.</sup> Mr. Bell (vol. ii. p. 379.) traversed fince, in the hands of the Cossacks, it still rethe Ukraine in his journey from Petersburgh mains in a state of nature. to Constantinople. The modern face of the

Decius found the Goths engaged before Nicopolis, on the Jatrus, Various one of the many monuments of Trajan's victories 30. On his events of the Gothic war, events of the A. D. 250.

29 In the fixteenth chapter of Jornandes, how this palpable error of the fcribe could inflead of feeundo Mæsiam, we may venture to escape the judicious correction of Grotius.

subtilitute feeundom, which Mæsiam, we may venture to escape the judicious correction of Grotius.

30 The place is still called Nicop. The which Marcianopolis was certainly the capital little stream, on whose banks it stood, falls (fee Hierocles de Provinciis, and Wesseling into the Danube. Danville Geographie Anad locum, p. 636. Itinera). It is surprising cienne, tom. i. p. 307.

C H A P. approach they raifed the fiege, but with a defign only of marching away to a conquest of greater importance, the fiege of Philippopolis, a city of Thrace, founded by the father of Alexander, near the foot of mount Hæmus 31. Decius followed them through a difficult country, and by forced marches; but when he imagined himfelf at a confiderable diffance from the rear of the Goths, Cniva turned with rapid fury on his purfuers. The camp of the Romans was furprifed and pillaged, and, for the first time, their emperor fled in diforder before a troop of half-armed barbarians. After a long refistance, Philippopolis, destitute of succour, was taken by ftorm. An hundred thousand persons are reported to have been massacred in the fack of that great city 32. Many prisoners of confequence became a valuable accession to the spoil, and Priscus, a brother of the late emperor Philip, blushed not to assume the purple under the protection of the barbarous enemies of Rome 33. The time, however, confumed in that tedious fiege, enabled Decius to revive the courage, restore the discipline, and recruit the numbers of his troops. He intercepted feveral parties of Carpi, and other Germans, who were haftening to share the victory of their countrymen 34, intrusted the passes of the mountains to officers of approved valour and fidelity 35, repaired and strengthened the fortifications of the Danube, and exerted his utmost vigilance to oppose either the progress or the retreat of the Goths. Encouraged by the return of fortune, he anxiously waited for an opportunity to retrieve, by a great and decifive blow, his own glory, and that of the Roman arms 36.

Wesseling Itinerar, p. 136. Zonaras, by an odd mistake, ascribes the foundation of Philippopolis to the immediate predecessor of Decius. Ammian. xxxi. 5.

<sup>33</sup> Aurel. Victor. c. 29.

cius infinuate thefe advantages.

fo much glory) was posted in the pass of Ther- lessness alone they are alike.

<sup>31</sup> Stephan. Byzant. de Urbibus, p. 740. mopylæ with 200 Dardanians, 100 heavy and 160 light horfe, 60 Cretan archers, and 1000 well armed'recruits. See an original letter from the emperor to his officer in the Augustan History, p. 200.

<sup>36</sup> Jornandes, c. 16-18. Zofimus, 1. i. 54 Victoria Carpica on some medals of De- p. 22. In the general account of this war, it is easy to discover the opposite prejudices of 35 Claudius (who afterwards reigned with the Gothic and the Grecian writer. In care-of the tempest, his mind, calm and deliberate amidst the tumult of war, investigated the more general causes, that, fince the age of vives the the Antonines, had so impetuously urged the decline of the Roman for in the greatness. He soon discovered that it was impossible to replace person of that greatness on a permanent basis, without restoring public virtue, ancient principles and manners, and the oppressed majesty of the laws. To execute this noble but arduous defign, he first resolved to revive the obsolete office of censor; an office, which, as long as it had fubfifted in its priftine integrity, had fo much contributed to the perpetuity of the flate 37, till it was usurped and gradually neglected by the Cæsars 38. Conscious that the favour of the sovereign may confer power, but that the esteem of the people can alone bestow authority, he submitted the choice of the censor to the unbiassed voice of the fenate. By their unanimous votes, or rather acclama- A.D. 25T. tions. Valerian, who was afterwards emperor, and who then ferved ber. with distinction in the army of Decius, was declared the most worthy of that exalted honour. As foon as the decree of the fenate was transmitted to the emperor, he assembled a great council in his camp, and before the investiture of the cenfor elect, he apprized him of the difficulty and importance of his great office. "Happy " Valerian," faid the prince, to his diftinguished subject, " happy " in the general approbation of the fenate and of the Roman re-" public! Accept the cenforship of mankind; and judge of our " manners. You will felect those who deserve to continue mem-" bers of the fenate; you will restore the equestrian order to its " ancient splendour; you will improve the revenue, yet moderate the

At the fame time when Decius was struggling with the violence CHAP. Decius re-

ture and use of the censorship with his usual sused an honour which he deserved, and his ingenuity, and with uncommon precision.

33 Vespasian and Titus were the last censors Pliny's Panegyric, c. 45 and 60.

3º Montesquieu, Grandeur et Decadence (Pliny Hist. Natur. vii. 49. Censorinus de des Romains, c. viii. He illustrates the naexample became a law to the Antonines. See " public.

CHAP. " public burdens. You will diffinguish into regular classes the " various and infinite multitude of citizens, and accurately review " the military strength, the wealth, the virtue, and the resources " of Rome. Your decisions shall obtain the force of laws. The " army, the palace, the ministers of justice, and the great officers of " the empire, are all fubject to your tribunal. None are exempted, " excepting only the ordinary confuls 39, the præfect of the city, "the king of the facrifices, and (as long as the preferves her cha-" flity inviolate) the eldest of the vestal virgins. Even these few, " who may not dread the feverity, will anxiously solicit the esteem, " of the Roman cenfor "."

The defign impracticable, and without effect.

A magistrate, invested with such extensive powers, would have appeared not fo much the minister as the colleague of his fovereign 41. Valerian justly dreaded an elevation fo full of envy and of suspicion. He modefly urged the alarming greatness of the trust, his own infufficiency, and the incurable corruption of the times. He artfully infinuated, that the office of cenfor was infeparable from the Imperial dignity, and that the feeble hands of a fubject were unequal to the support of such an immense weight of cares and of power 42. The approaching event of war foon put an end to the profecution of a project fo specious but so impracticable; and whilst it preserved Valerian from the danger, faved the emperor Decius from the difappointment, which would most probably have attended it. A cenfor may maintain, he can never reftore, the morals of a state. It is impossible for such a magistrate to exert his authority with benefit, or even with effect, unless he is supported by a quick sense of honour and virtue in the minds of the people; by a decent reve-

<sup>27</sup> Yet in fpite of this exemption Pompey appeared before that tribunal, during his confulfhip. The occasion indeed was equally fingular and honourable. Plutar. in Pomp. p.630. 44 See the original speech in the Augustan

Hift. p. 173, 174.

<sup>41</sup> This transaction might deceive Zonaras, who supposes that Valerian was actually declared the colleague of Decius, 1. xii. p. 625.

<sup>42</sup> Hist. August. p. 174. The emperor's reply is omitted.

rence for the public opinion, and by a train of useful prejudices com- C H A P. bating on the fide of national manners. In a period when these principles are annihilated, the cenforial jurifdiction must either fink into empty pageantry, or be converted into a partial instrument of vexatious oppression 43. It was easier to vanquish the Goths, than to eradicate the public vices; yet even in the first of these enterprises, Decius loft his-army and his life.

The Goths were now, on every fide, furrounded and purfued Defeat and by the Roman arms. The flower of their troops had perished in cius and his the long fiege of Philippopolis, and the exhaufted country could no longer afford sublistence for the remaining multitude of licentious barbarians. Reduced to this extremity, the Goths would gladly have purchased, by the surrender of all their booty and prisoners, the permission of an undisturbed retreat. But the emperor, consident of victory, and refolving, by the chaftifement of these invaders, to ftrike a falutary terror into the nations of the North, refused to listen to any terms of accommodation. The high-spirited barbarians preferred death to flavery. An obscure town of Mæsia, called Forum Terebronii 44, was the scene of the battle. The Gothic army was drawn up in three lines, and, either from choice or accident, the front of the third line was covered by a morals. In the beginning of the action, the fon of Decius, a youth of the fairest hopes, and already affociated to the honours of the purple, was flain by an arrow, in the fight of his afflicted father; who fummoning all his fortitude, admonished the dismayed troops, that the loss of a single foldier was of little importance to the republic 45. The conflict was terrible; it was the combat of despair against grief and rage. The death of De-

<sup>43</sup> Such as the attempts of Augustus to- nais, they place the field of battle in the plains wards a reformation of manners. Tacit. of Scythia. Annal. iii. 24.

tom. iii. p. 598. As Zosimus and some of have preferred the account of Jornandes. his followers mistake the Danube for the Ta-

<sup>45</sup> Aurelius Victor allows two diftinct ac-44 Tillemont. Histoire des Empereurs, tions for the deaths of the two Decii; but I

 $^{\rm C~H~A~P.}$  first line of the Goths at length gave way in disorder ; the second, advancing to fustain it, shared its fate; and the third only remained entire, prepared to dispute the passage of the morals, which was imprudently attempted by the prefumption of the enemy. "Here " the fortune of the day turned, and all things became adverse to the " Romans: the place deep with ooze, finking under those who flood, " flippery to fuch as advanced; their armour heavy, the waters deep; " nor could they wield in that uneafy fituation their weighty jave-" lins. The barbarians, on the contrary, were enured to encounters " in the bogs, their perfons tall, their spears long, such as could " wound at a diffance 46." In this morass the Roman army, after an ineffectual struggle, was irrecoverably lost; nor could the body of the emperor ever be found 47. Such was the fate of Decius, in the fiftieth year of his age; an accomplished prince, active in war, and affable in peace 48; who, together with his fon, has deferved to be compared, both in life and death, with the brightest examples of ancient virtue 49.

Election of Gallus. A. D. 251. December.

This fatal blow humbled, for a very little time, the infolence of the legions. They appear to have patiently expected, and fubmiffively obeyed, the decree of the fenate, which regulated the fuccesfion to the throne. From a just regard for the memory of Decius, the Imperial title was conferred on Hostilianus, his only surviving fon: but an equal rank, with more effectual power, was granted to Gallus, whose experience and ability seemed equal to the great trust of guardian to the young prince and the distressed empire 50. The new princes took possession of the consulship on the enfuing calends of January.

<sup>46</sup> I have ventured to copy from Tacitus (Annal. i. 64.) the picture of a fimilar engagement between a Roman army and a German tribe.

<sup>47</sup> Iornandes, c. 18. Zosimus, l. i. p. 22. Zonaras, 1. xii. p. 627. Aurelius Victor.

<sup>48</sup> The Decii were killed before the end of

<sup>49</sup> Hift. August. p. 223, gives them a very honourable place among the small number of good emperors who reigned between Augustus and Diocletian.

<sup>50</sup> Hæc ubi Patres comperere . . . . . the year two hundred and fifty-one, fince the decernunt. Victor in Casfaribus.

first care of the new emperor was to deliver the Illyrian provinces CHAP. from the intolerable weight of the victorious Goths. He confented to leave in their hands the rich fruits of their invalion, an immense booty, and what was still more difgraceful, a great number of prifoners of the highest merit and quality. He plentifully supplied Retreat of their camp with every conveniency that could affuage their angry fpirits, or facilitate their fo much wished-for departure; and he even promifed to pay them annually a large fum of gold, on condition they should never afterwards infest the Roman territories by their incursions 51.

A. D. 252.

chases peace ment of an

In the age of the Scipios, the most opulent kings of the earth, Gallus purwho courted the protection of the victorious commonwealth, were by the paygratified with fuch trifling prefents as could only derive a value from annual trithe hand that bestowed them; an ivory chair, a coarse garment of purple, an inconsiderable piece of plate, or a quantity of copper coin 52. After the wealth of nations had centred in Rome, the emperors displayed their greatness, and even their policy, by the regular exercise of a steady and moderate liberality towards the allies of the state. They relieved the poverty of the barbarians, honoured their merit, and recompensed their fidelity. These voluntary marks of bounty were understood to flow not from the fears, but merely from the generofity or the gratitude of the Romans; and whilst presents and subsidies were liberally distributed among friends and fuppliants, they were sternly refused to such as claimed them as a debt 53. But this flipulation of an annual payment to a victorious Popular difenemy, appeared without difguife in the light of an ignominious tribute; the minds of the Romans were not yet accustomed Zonaras, l. xii. p. 628.

A Sella, a Toga, and a golden Patera of five pounds weight, were accepted with joy and gratitude by the wealthy king of Egypt (Livy, xxvii. 4.). Quina Millia Æris, a weight of copper in value about eighteen pounds sterling, was the usual present made to soreign ambassadors (Livy, xxxi. 9.).

<sup>53</sup> See the firmness of a Roman general so late as the time of Alexander Severus, in the Excerpta Legationum, p. 25. Edit. Louvre-

CHAP. to accept fuch unequal laws from a tribe of barbarians; and the prince, who by a necessary concession had probably faved his country, became the object of the general contempt and aversion. The death of Hostilianus, though it happened in the midst of a raging pestilence, was interpreted as the personal crime of Gallus 54; and even the defeat of the late emperor was afcribed by the voice of fuspicion to the perfidious counsels of his hated fucceffor 55. The tranquillity which the empire enjoyed during the first year of his administration 56, ferved rather to inflame than to appeafe the public discontent; and, as soon as the appreliensions of war were removed, the infamy of the peace was more deeply and more fenfibly felt.

Victory and revolt of Æmilianus. A. D. 253.

But the Romans were irritated to a still higher degree, when they discovered that they had not even secured their repose, though at the expence of their honour. The dangerous fecret of the wealth and weakness of the empire, had been revealed to the world. New swarms of barbarians, encouraged by the fuccess, and not conceiving themselves bound by the obligation, of their brethren, spread devastation through the Illyrian provinces, and terror as far as the gates of Rome. The defence of the monarchy, which feemed abandoned by the pufillanimous emperor, was assumed by Æmilianus, governor of Pannonia and Mæsia; who rallied the scattered forces, and revived the fainting spirits of the troops. The barbarians were unexpectedly attacked, routed, chafed, and purfued beyond the Danube. The victorious leader distributed as a donative the money collected for the tribute, and the acclamations of the foldiers proclaimed him emperor on the field of battle 57. Gallus, who, careless of the general welfare, indulged himfelf in the pleafures of Italy, was almost in the

<sup>54</sup> For the plague fee Jornandes, c. 19, and Victor in Crefaribus.

<sup>55</sup> These improbable accusations are alleged by Zolimus, I. i. p. 23, 24.

<sup>5&#</sup>x27; Jornandes, c. 19. The Gothic writer at least observed the peace which his victorious countrymen had fwern to Gallus.

<sup>57</sup> Zofimus, I.i. p. 25, 26.

fame instant informed of the success, of the revolt, and of the rapid CHAP. approach, of his aspiring lieutenant. He advanced to meet him as far as the plains of Spoleto. When the armies came in fight of each other, the foldiers of Gallus compared the ignominious conduct of their fovereign with the glory of his rival. They admired the valour of Amilianus; they were attracted by his liberality, for he offered a confiderable increase of pay to all deserters 58. The mur- Gallus abander of Gallus, and of his fon Volusianus, put an end to the civil sain. war; and the fenate gave a legal fanction to the rights of conquest. May, The letters of Emilianus to that affembly, displayed a mixture of moderation and vanity. He affured them, that he should resign to their wildom the civil administration; and contenting himself with the quality of their general, would in a short time affert the glory of Rome, and deliver the empire from all the barbarians both of the North and of the East 59. His pride was flattered by the applause of the senate; and medals are still extant, representing him with the name and attributes of Hercules the Victor, and of Mars the Avenger 60.

If the new monarch possessed the abilities, he wanted the Valerian retime, necessary to fulfil these splendid promises. Less than four death of Galmonths intervened between his victory and his fall 61. He had knowledged vanquished Gallus: he sunk under the weight of a competitor more emperor. formidable than Gallus. That unfortunate prince had fent Valerian, already diffinguished by the honourable title of cenfor, to bring the legions of Gaul and Germany 62 to his aid. Valerian executed that commission with zeal and fidelity; and as he arrived too late to fave his fovereign, he refolved to revenge him. The troops of Æmilianus, who still lay encamped in the plains of Spoleto, were awed by the fanctity of his character, but much more by the fupe-lus, and is ac-

<sup>58</sup> Victor in Cæfaribus.

<sup>59</sup> Zonaras, 1. xii. p. 628.

<sup>60</sup> Banduri Numismata, p. 94.

<sup>61</sup> Eutropius, 1. ix. c. 6. fays tertio mense. Eufebius omits this emperor.

<sup>62</sup> Zofimus, I. i. p. 28. Eutropius and Victor station Valerian's army in Rhatia.

A. D. 253. Augult.

C H A P. rior strength of his army; and as they were now become as incapable of personal attachment as they had always been of constitutional principle, they readily imbrued their hands in the blood of a prince who so lately had been the object of their partial choice. The guilt was theirs, but the advantage of it was Valerian's; who obtained the possession of the throne by the means indeed of a civil war, but with a degree of innocence fingular in that age of revolutions; fince he owed neither gratitude nor allegiance to his predeceffor, whom he dethroned.

Character of Valerian.

Valerian was about fixty years of age 63 when he was invefted with the purple, not by the caprice of the populace, or the clamours of the army, but by the unanimous voice of the Roman world. In his gradual afcent through the honours of the flate, he had deserved the favour of virtuous princes, and had declared himfelf the enemy of tyrants 64. His noble birth, his mild but unblemished manners, his learning, prudence, and experience, were revered by the fenate and people; and if mankind (according to the observation of an ancient writer) had been left at liberty to chuse a master, their choice would most assuredly have fallen on Valerian 65. Perhaps the merit of this emperor was inadequate to his reputation; perhaps his abilities, or at least his spirit, were affected by the languor and coldness of old age. The consciousness of his decline engaged him to share the throne with a younger and more active associate: the emergency of the times demanded a general no less than a prince, and the experience of the Roman cenfor might have directed him where to bestow the Imperial purple, as the reward of fortunes of the reigns of Gallienus. A. D. 253-

<sup>63</sup> He was about seventy at the time of his accession, or, as it is more probable, of his death. Hift. August. p. 173. Tillemont Hist. des Empereurs, tom. iii. p. 893, note 1.

<sup>64</sup> Inimicus Tyrannorum. Hift. August. against Maximin. Valerian acted a very spirited part. Hift. Aug. p. 156.

<sup>65</sup> According to the distinction of Victor, he feems to have received the title of Imperator from the army, and that of Augustus from the fenate.

<sup>66</sup> From Victor and from the medals, Tilp. 173. In the glorious fruggle of the fenate lemont (tom. iii. p. 710.) very justly infers, that Gallienus was affociated to the empire about the month of August of the year 253.

military merit. But instead of making a judicious choice, which C II A P. would have confirmed his reign and endeared his memory, Valerian, confulting only the dictates of affection or vanity, immediately invested with the supreme honours his fon Gallienus, a youth whose effeminate vices had been hitherto concealed by the obscurity of a private station. The joint government of the father and the fon fubfished about seven, and the sole administration of Gallienus continued about eight, years. But the whole period was one uninterrupted feries of confusion and calamity. As the Roman empire was at the fame time, and on every fide, attacked by the blind fury of foreign invaders, and the wild ambition of domestic usurpers, we shall confult order and perspicuity, by pursuing, not so much the doubtful arrangement of dates, as the more natural distribution of subjects. The most dangerous enemies of Rome, during the reigns of Valerian and Gallienus, were, 1. The Franks. 2. The Alemanni. 3. The Inroads of Goths; and, 4. The Persians. Under these general appellations, rians. we may comprehend the adventures of less considerable tribes, whose obscure and uncouth names would only ferve to oppress the memory and perplex the attention of the reader.

I. As the posterity of the Franks compose one of the greatest and Origin and most enlightened nations of Europe, the powers of learning and confed ingenuity have been exhausted in the discovery of their unlettered Franks. ancestors. To the tales of credulity, have succeeded the systems of fancy. Every passage has been sifted, every spot has been surveyed, that might possibly reveal some faint traces of their origin. It has been supposed, that Pannonia 67, that Gaul, that the northern parts of Germany 68, gave birth to that celebrated colony of warriors. At length the most rational critics, rejecting the fictitious emigra-gave birth to an ingenious fystem of Leib-

<sup>67</sup> Various fystems have been formed to ex- mentioning Mauringania on the confines of plain a difficult passage in Gregory of Tours, Denmark, as the ancient feat of the Franks,

<sup>68</sup> The geographer of Ravenna, i. 11. by nitz.

C H A P. tions of ideal conquerors, have acquiefced in a fentiment whose fimplicity perfuades us of its truth 69. They suppose, that about the year two hundred and forty 70, a new confederacy was formed under the name of Franks, by the old inhabitants of the Lower Rhine and the Weser. The present circle of Westphalia, the Landgraviate of Hesse, and the dutchies of Brunswick and Luneburgh, were the ancient feat of the Chauci, who, in their inaccessible morasses, defied the Roman arms 71; of the Cherusci, proud of the fame of Arminius; of the Catti, formidable by their firm and intrepid infantry, and of feveral other tribes of inferior power and renown 72. The love of liberty was the ruling passion of these Germans; the enjoyment of it their best treasure; the word that expressed that enjoyment, the most pleasing to their ear. They deferved, they assumed, they maintained the honourable epithet of Franks or Freemen; which concealed, though it did not extinguish, the peculiar names of the feveral states of the confederacy 73. Tacit confent, and mutual advantage, dictated the first laws of the union; it was gradually cemented by habit and experience. The league of the Franks may admit of some comparison with the Helvetic body; in which every canton, retaining its independent fovereignty, confults with its brethren in the common cause, without acknowledging the authority of any supreme head, or representative affembly 74. But the principle of the two confederacies was extremely different. A peace of two hundred years has rewarded the wife and honest policy of the Swiss. An inconstant spirit, the thirst of rapine,

<sup>69</sup> See Cluver. Germania Antiqua, 1. iii. c. 20. M. Freret, in the Memoires de l'Academie des Inscriptions, tom. xviii.

<sup>70</sup> Most probably under the reign of Gordian, from an accidental circumstance fully canvaffed by Tillemont, tom. iii. p. 710. 1181.

<sup>71</sup> Plin. Hift. Nat. xvi. 1. The panegyrifts frequently allude to the morasses of the Franks.

<sup>72</sup> Tacit. Germania, c. 30. 37.

<sup>73</sup> In a subsequent period, most of those old names are occasionally mentioned. See fome veftiges of them in Cluver, Germ. Antiq. l. iii.

<sup>74</sup> Simler de Republica Helvet, cum notis Fusclin.

and a difregard to the most solemn treaties, difgraced the character of CHAP. the Franks.

The Romans had long experienced the daring valour of the They invade people of Lower Germany. The union of their strength threatened Gaul with a more formidable invasion, and required the presence of Gallienus, the heir and colleague of imperial power 75. Whilft that prince, and his infant fon, Saloninus, displayed in the court of Treves, the majesty of the empire, its armies were ably conducted by their general Posthumus, who, though he afterwards betrayed the family of Valerian, was ever faithful to the great interest of the monarchy. The treacherous language of panegyrics and medals darkly announces a long feries of victories. Trophies and titles attest (if such evidence can attest) the same of Posthumus, who is repeatedly flyled The conqueror of the Germans, and the faviour of Gaul 76,

But a fingle fact, the only one indeed of which we have any dif-rayage Spain tinct knowledge, erases, in a great measure, these monuments of vanity and adulation. The Rhine, though dignified with the title of Safe-guard of the provinces, was an imperfect barrier against the daring spirit of enterprise with which the Franks were actuated. Their rapid devastations stretched from the river to the foot of the Pyrcnees: nor were they stopped by those mountains. Spain, which had never dreaded, was unable to refift, the inroads of the Germans. During twelve years, the greatest part of the reign of Gallienus, that opulent country was the theatre of unequal and destructive hostilities. Tarragona, the flourishing capital of a peaceful province, was facked and almost destroyed 77, and so late as more than once planned, and is still much writers. wanted.

<sup>25</sup> Zofimus, I. i. p. 27.

<sup>77</sup> Aurel. Victor. c. 33. Instead of Pane M. de Brequiony (in the Memoires de l'A- directo, both the fense and the expression endemie, tom. xxx.) has given us a very curious require deleto, though indeed, for differlife of Posthumus. A feries of the Augustan ent reasons, it is alike difficult to correct History from Medals and Inscriptions has been the text of the best, and of the worst, and pass over into Africa.

C H A P. the days of Orofius, who wrote in the fifth century, wretched cottages, feattered amidst the ruins of magnificent cities, still recorded the rage of the barbarians 78. When the exhausted country no longer fupplied a variety of plunder, the Franks feized on some vessels in the ports of Spain 77, and transported themselves into Mauritania. The diffant province was aftonished with the fury of these barbarians, who feemed to fall from a new world, as their name, manners, and complexion, were equally unknown on the coast of Africa 80.

Origin and renown of

II. In that part of Upper Saxony beyond the Elbe, which is at present called the Marquisate of Lusace, there existed, in ancient times, a facred wood, the awful feat of the fuperfittion of the Suevi. None were permitted to enter the holy precincts, without confessing, by their fervile bonds and suppliant posture, the immediate presence of the sovereign Deity 81. Patriotism contributed as well as devotion to confecrate the Sonnenwald, or wood of the Semnones 82. It was univerfally believed, that the nation had received its first existence on that sacred spot. At stated periods, the numerous tribes who gloried in the Suevic blood, reforted thither by their ambassadors; and the memory of their common extraction was perpetuated by barbaric rites and human facrifices. The wide extended name of Suevi filled the interior countries of Germany, from the banks of the Oder to those of the Danube. They were diffinguished from the other Germans by their peculiar mode of dreffing their long hair, which they gathered into a rude knot on the crown of the head; and they delighted in an ornament that shewed their ranks more lofty and terrible in the eyes of the enc-

<sup>7</sup> In the time of Ausonius (the end of the fourth century) Ilerda or Lerida was in a very ruinous state, (Aufon. Epist. xxv. 58.) which probably was the confequence of this invalion.

<sup>7)</sup> Valeflus is therefore mistaken in suppofing that the Franks had invaded Spain by fea.

<sup>81</sup> Tacit. Germania, 33.

my 83. Jealous, as the Germans were, of military renown, they CHAP. all confessed the superior valour of the Suevi; and the tribes of the Usipetes and Tencteri, who with a vast army encountered the dictator Cæfar, declared that they esteemed it not a disgrace to have fled before a people, to whose arms the immortal gods themselves were unequal 84.

In the reign of the emperor Caracalla, an innumerable fwarm of A mixed bo-Suevi appeared on the banks of the Mein, and in the neighbour- affirme the hood of the Roman provinces, in quest either of food, of plunder, Alemanni, or of glory 85. The halty army of volunteers gradually coalesced into a great and permanent nation; and, as it was composed from fo many different tribes, assumed the name of Alemanni, or Allmen; to denote at once their various lineage, and their common bravery 86. The latter was foon felt by the Romans in many a hoffile inroad. The Alemanni fought chiefly on horseback; but their cavalry was rendered still more formidable by a mixture of light infantry, felected from the bravest and most active of the youth, whom frequent exercise had enured to accompany the horsemen in the longest march, the most rapid charge, or the most precipitate retreat 87.

This warlike people of Germans had been aftonished by the im- invade Gaut menfe preparations of Alexander Severus, they were difmayed by the arms of his fucceffor, a barbarian equal in valour and fierceness to themselves. But still hovering on the frontiers of the empire, they increased the general disorder that ensued after the death of Decius, They inflicted fevere wounds on the rich provinces of Gaul: they rum ingenui a fervis separantur. A proud se- served by Afinius Quadratus, an original

<sup>84</sup> Cæfar in Bello Gallico, iv. 7.

<sup>16</sup> This etymology (far different from those i. 48.).

<sup>83</sup> Sic Suevi a ceteris Germanis, fie Suevo- which amuse the fancy of the learned) is prehistorian, quoted by Agathias, i. c. 5.

<sup>87</sup> The Sucvi engaged Casfar in this man-85 Victor. in Caracal. Dion Cassius, Ixvii. ner, and the manœuvre deserved the approbation of the conqueror (in Bello Gallico, are repulfed from Rome by the fenate and people.

C H A P. were the first who removed the veil that covered the feeble majest y of Italy. A numerous body of the Alemanni penetrated across the Danube, and through the Rhætian Alps, into the plains of Lombardy, advanced as far as Ravenna, and displayed the victorious banners of barbarians almost in fight of Rome 83. The infult and the danger rekindled in the fenate fome sparks of their ancient virtue. Both the emperors were engaged in far distant wars, Valerian in the east, and Gallienus on the Rhine. All the hopes and resources of the Romans were in themselves. In this emergency, the fenators refumed the defence of the republic, drew out the Prætorian guards, who had been left to garrifon the capital, and filled up their numbers, by inlifting into the public fervice, the floutest and most willing of the Plebeians. The Alemanni, astonished with the sudden appearance of an army more numerous than their own, retired into Germany, laden with spoil; and their retreat was effeemed as a victory by the unwarlike Romans 89.

The fenators excluded by Gallienus from the military fervice.

When Gallienus received the intelligence that his capital was delivered from the barbarians, he was much less delighted, than alarmed, with the courage of the fenate, fince it might one day prompt them to rescue the public from domestic tyranny, as well as from foreign invasion. His timid ingratitude was published to his subjects, in an edict which prohibited the fenators from exercifing any military employment, and even from approaching the camps of the legions. But his fears were groundlefs. The rich and luxurious nobles, finking into their natural character, accepted, as a favour, this difgraceful exemption from military fervice; and as long as they were indulged in the enjoyment of their baths, their theatres, and their villas; they cheerfully refigned the more dangerous cares of empire. to the rough hands of peafants and foldiers 90.

in the Excerpta Legationum, p. 8. Hiero- His complaints breathe an uncommon spirit nym. Chron. Orofius, vii. 22.

<sup>29</sup> Zofimus, I.i. p. 34.

<sup>85</sup> Hift. August. p. 215, 216. Dexippus 90 Aurel. Victor. in Gallieno et Probo. of freedom.

Gallienus alliance with manni.

Another invalion of the Alemanni, of a more formidable aspect, but more glorious event, is mentioned by a writer of the lower empire. Three hundred thousand of that warlike people are faid to have been vanquished, in a battle near Milan, by Gallienus in perfon, at the head of only ten thousand Romans 91. We may however, with great probability, afcribe this incredible victory, either to the credulity of the historian, or to some exaggerated exploits of one of the emperor's lieutenants. It was by arms of a very different nature, that Gallienus endeavoured to protect Italy from the fury of the Germans. He espouled Pipa the daughter of a king of the Marcomanni, a Suevic tribe, which was often confounded with the Alemanni in their wars and conquests 91. To the father, as the price of his alliance, he granted an ample fettlement in Pannonia. The native charms of unpolished beauty seem to have fixed the daughter in the affections of the inconstant emperor, and the bands of policy were more firmly connected by those of love. But the haughty prejudice of Rome still refused the name of marriage, to the profane mixture of a citizen and a barbarian; and has fligmatized the German princess with the opprobrious title of concubine of Gallienus 93.

III. We have already traced the emigration of the Goths from Inroads of Scandinavia, or at least from Prussia, to the mouth of the Boryfthenes, and have followed their victorious arms from the Boryfthenes, to the Danube. Under the reigns of Valerian and Gallienus the frontier of the last mentioned river was perpetually infested by the inroads of Germans and Sarmatians; but it was defended by the Romans with more than usual firmness and success. The provinces that were the feat of war, recruited the armies of Rome with

<sup>93</sup> See Tillemont, Hift. des Empereurs, 91 Zonaras, 1. xii. p. 631. 92 One of the Victors calls him King, of tom. iii. p. 398, &c. the Marcomanni, the other, of the Germans.

CHAP, an inexhaustible supply of hardy foldiers; and more than one of these Illyrian peasants attained the station, and displayed the abilities, of a general. Though flying parties of the barbarians, who inceffantly hovered on the banks of the Danube, penetrated fometimes to the confines of Italy and Macedonia; their progress was con monly checked, or their return intercepted, by the Imperial lieutenants 94. But the great stream of the Gothic hostilities was diverted into a very different channel. The Goths, in their new fettlement of the Ukraine, foon became masters of the northern coast of the Euxine: to the fouth of that inland sea, were situated the foft and wealthy provinces of Afia Minor, which poffeffed all that could attract, and nothing that could refift, a barbarian conqueror.

Conquest of the Bosphorus by the Goths.

The banks of the Boryshhenes are only fixty miles distant from the narrow entrance 95 of the peninfula of Crim Tartary, known to the ancients under the name of Cherfonefus Taurica 96. On that inhospitable shore, Euripides, embellishing with exquisite art the tales of antiquity, has placed the scene of one of his most affecting tragedies 97. The bloody facrifices of Diana, the arrival of Orestes and Pylades, and the triumph of virtue and religion over favage fierceness, serve to represent an historical truth, that the Tauri, the original inhabitants of the peninfula, were, in fome degree, reclaimed from their brutal manners, by a gradual intercourse with the Grecian colonies, which fettled along the maritime coaft. The little kingdom of Bosphorus, whose capital was situated on the Straits, through which the Mæotis communicates itself to the Euxine, was composed of degenerate Greeks, and half-civilized barbarians. It fubfifted,

Probus, in the Augustan History. 95 It is about half a league in breadth. Ge- Danube.

nealogical History of the Tartars, p. 598.

M. de Peyffonel, who had been French

<sup>54</sup> See the lives of Claudius, Aurelian, and conful at Caffa, in his Observations fur les Peuples Barbares, qui ont habité les bords du

<sup>97</sup> Euripides in Iphigenia in Taurid.

fublished, as an independent state, from the time of the Peloponnesian C H A P. war 98, was at last swallowed up by the ambition of Mithridates 99, and with the rest of his dominions, sunk under the weight of the Roman arms. From the reign of Augustus 100, the kings of Bosphorus were the humble, but not useless, allies of the empire. By prefents, by arms, and by a flight fortification drawn across the Ishmus, they effectually guarded against the roving plunderers of Sarmatia, the access of a country, which, from its peculiar fituation and convenient harbours, commanded the Euxine fea and Afia Minor 101. As long as the fceptre was poffeffed by a lineal fuccession of kings, they acquitted themselves of their important charge with vigilance and fuccefs. Domestic factions, and the fears, or private interest, of obscure usurpers, who seized on the vacant throne, admitted the Goths into the heart of Bosphorus. With the acquisition of a superfluous waste of fertile soil, the conquerors obtained the command of a naval force, sufficient to transport their armies to the coast of Asia 102. The ships used in the Who acquire navigation of the Euxine were of a very fingular construction. They were flight flat-bottomed barks framed of timber only, without the least mixture of iron, and occasionally covered with a fhelving roof, on the appearance of a tempest 103. In these floating houses, the Goths carelessly trusted themselves to the mercy of an unknown fea, under the conduct of failors pressed into the service. and whose skill and fidelity were equally suspicious. But the hopes of plunder had banished every idea of danger, and a natural fearlessness of temper supplied in their minds the more rational confidence.

a naval force.

which.

<sup>58</sup> Strabo, 1. vii. p. 309. The first kings of Bosphorus were the allies of Athens.

<sup>99</sup> Appian in Mithridat.

<sup>100</sup> It was reduced by the arms of Agrippa. Orofius, vi. 21. Eutropius, vii. 9. The Romans once advanced within three days march of the Tanais. Tacit. Annal. xii. 17.

<sup>101</sup> See the Toxaris of Lucian, if we credit the fincerity and the virtues of the Scythian. who relates a great war of his nation against the kings of Bosphorus.

<sup>102</sup> Zosimus, l. i. p. 28.

<sup>103</sup> Strabo, 1. xi. Tacit. Hift. iii. 47. They were called Camara.

CHAP, which is the just result of knowledge and experience. Warriors of fuch a daring spirit must have often murmured against the cowardice of their guides, who required the strongest assurances of a settled calm before they would venture to embark; and would fearcely ever be tempted to lofe fight of the land. Such, at least, is the practice of the modern Turks 104; and they are probably not inferior, in the art of navigation, to the ancient inhabitants of Bofphorus.

First naval expedition of the Goths.

The fleet of the Goths, leaving the coast of Circassia on the left hand, first appeared before Pityus 105, the utmost limits of the Roman provinces; a city provided with a convenient port and fortified with a firong wall. Here they met with a refiftance more obstinate than they had reason to expect from the feeble garrison of a distant fortress. They were repulsed; and their disappointment feemed to diminish the terror of the Gothic name. As long as Successianus, an officer of superior rank and merit, defended that frontier, all their efforts were ineffectual; but as foon as he was removed by Valerian to a more honourable but less important flation, they refumed the attack of Pityus; and, by the deftruction of that city, obliterated the memory of their former difgrace 106.

The Goths besiege and take Trebizond.

Circling round the eaftern extremity of the Euxine fea, the navigation from Pityus to Trebizond is about three hundred miles 107. The course of the Goths carried them in fight of the country of Colchis, fo famous by the expedition of the Argonauts; and they even attempted, though without fuccess, to pillage a rich temple at the mouth of the river Phasis. Trebizond, celebrated in the retreat of the ten thousand as an ancient colony of Greeks.

ine navigation, in the xvith letter of Tourne-

<sup>105</sup> Arrian places the frontier garrifon at Dioscurias, or Sebastopolis, forty-four miles to the east of Pityus. The garrifon of Phasis

*c4 See a very natural picture of the Eux- confifted in his time of only four hundred foot. See the Periplus of the Euxine.

<sup>106</sup> Zofimus, 1. i. p. 30.

<sup>107</sup> Arrian (in Periplo Maris Euxin. p. 120.) calls the distance 2610 stadia.

Greeks 108, derived its wealth and splendour from the munificence of CHAP. the emperor Hadrian, who had conftructed an artificial port on a coast left destitute by nature of secure harbours 109. The city was large and populous; a double enclosure of walls feemed to defy the fury of the Goths, and the usual garrison had been strengthened by a reinforcement of ten thousand men. But there are not any advantages capable of supplying the absence of discipline and vigilance. The numerous garrifon of Trebizond, diffolved in riot and luxury, disdained to guard their impregnable fortifications. The Goths soon discovered the supine negligence of the besieged, erected a lofty pile of fascines, ascended the walls in the silence of the night, and entered the defenceless city, sword in hand. A general massacre of the people enfued, whilft the affrighted foldiers escaped through the opposite gates of the town. The most holy temples, and the most fplendid edifices, were involved in a common destruction. The booty that fell into the hands of the Goths was immense: the wealth of the adjacent countries had been deposited in Trebizond, as in a fecure place of refuge. The number of captives was incredible, as the victorious barbarians, ranged without opposition through the extensive province of Pontus ". The rich spoils of Trebizond filled a great fleet of ships that had been found in the port. The robust youth of the sca-coast were chained to the oar; and the Goths, fatisfied with the fuccess of their first naval expedition, returned in triumph to their new chablishments in the kingdom of Bosphorus "".

The fecond expedition of the Goths was undertaken with The fecond greater powers of men and ships, but they seered a different the Goths. courfe, and difdaining the exhaufted provinces of Pontus, followed expedition of

110 See an epiftle of Gregory Thaumatur-

<sup>138</sup> Xenophon. Anabafis, 1. iv. p. 348. Edit. Hutchinson.

<sup>109</sup> Arrian, p. 129. The general obser- cou, v. 37. vation is Tournefort's, gus, bishop of Neo-Cæsarea, quoted by Mas-

CHAP. the western coast of the Euxine, passed before the wide mouths of the Borysthenes, the Niester, and the Danube, and increasing their fleet by the capture of a great number of fishing barks, they approached the narrow out-let through which the Euxine fea pours its waters into the Mediterranean, and divides the continents of Europe and Afia. The garrifon of Chalcedon was encamped near the temple of Jupiter Urius, on a promontory that commanded the entrance of the Strait: and, fo inconfiderable were the dreaded invasions of the barbarians, that this body of troops surpassed in number the Gothic army. But it was in numbers alone that they furpassed it. They deserted with precipitation their advantageous post, and abandoned the town of Chalcedon, most plentifully stored with arms and money, to the difcretion of the conquerors. Whilft they hesitated whether they should prefer the sea or land, Europe or Asia, for the scene of their hostilities, a persidious sugitive pointed out Nicomedia, once the capital of the kings of Bithynia, as a rich and eafy conquest. He guided the march, which was only fixty miles from the camp of Chalcedon 112, directed the reliftless attack, and partook of the booty; for the Goths had learned fufficient policy to reward the traitor, whom they detefted. Nice, Prufa, Apæmæa, Cius, cities that had fometimes rivalled, or imitated, the fplendour of Nicomedia, were involved in the fame calamity, which, in a few weeks, raged without controul through the whole province of Bithynia. Three hundred years of peace, enjoyed by the foft inhabitants of Afia, had abolished the exercise of arms, and removed the apprehension of danger. The ancient walls were suffered to moulder away, and all the revenue of the most opulent citics was referved for the conftruction of baths, temples, and theatres 113.

They plun-der the cities of Bithynia.

112 Itiner, Hierofolym. p. 572. Wesseling. 113 Zosimus, l. i. p. 32, 33.

When

When the city of Cyzicus withstood the utmost effort of Mithri- CHAP. dates "4, it was distinguished by wife laws, a naval power of two hundred gallies, and three arienals; of arms, of military engines, and the Goths. of corn "5. It was still the feat of wealth and luxury; but of its ancient strength, nothing remained except the situation, in a little island of the Propontis, connected with the continent of Asia only by two bridges. From the recent fack of Prusa, the Goths advanced within eighteen miles "6 of the city, which they had devoted to destruction; but the ruin of Cyzicus was delayed by a fortunate accident. The feafon was rainy, and the lake Apolloniates, the refervoir of all the fprings of Mount Olympus, role to an uncommon height. The little river of Rhyndacus, which issues from the lake, swelled into a broad and rapid stream, and stopped the progress of the Goths. Their retreat to the maritime city of Heraclea, where the fleet had probably been stationed, was attended by a long train of waggons, laden with the spoils of Bithynia, and was marked by the flames of Nice and Nicodemia, which they wantonly burnt 117: Some obscure hints are mentioned of a doubtful combat that secured their retreat "18. But even a complete victory would have been of little moment, as the approach of the autumnal equinox fummoned them to hasten their return. To navigate the Euxine before the month of May, or after that of September, is esteemed by the modern Turks the most unquestionable instance of rashness and folly "9.

When we are informed that the third fleet, equipped by the Goths Third naval in the ports of Bosphorus, consisted of five hundred fail of ships 120, the Goths.

```
114 He belieged the place with 400 gallies, 150,000 foot, and a numerous cavalry. See Plutarch in Lucul. Appian in Mithridat.
Cicero pro Lege Manilia, c. 8.
```

<sup>115</sup> Strabo, I. 12. p. 573.

<sup>116</sup> Pocock's Description of the East, 1. ii.

<sup>117</sup> Zosimus, I. i. p. 33.

<sup>*18</sup> Syncellus tells an unintelligible flory of Prince Odenathus, who defeated the Goths, and who was killed by Prince Odenathus.

<sup>119</sup> Voyages de Chardin, tom. i. p. 45. He failed with the Turks from Constantinople

<sup>120</sup> Syncellus (p. 382.) speaks of this expedition as undertaken by the Heruli.

C H A P. our ready imagination inftantly computes and multiplies the formidable armament; but, as we are affured by the judicious Strabo ", that the pyratical vessels used by the barbarians of Pontus and the Lesser Scythia, were not capable of containing more than twentyfive or thirty men, we may fafely affirm, that fifteen thousand warriors, at the most, embarked in this great expedition. Impatient of the limits of the Euxine, they steered their destructive course from the Cimmerian to the Thracian Bosphorus. When they had almost gained the middle of the Straits, they were fuddenly driven back to the entrance of them; till a favourable wind springing up the next day, carried them in a few hours into the placid fea, or rather lake of the Propontis. Their landing on the little island of Cyzicus, was attended with the ruin of that ancient and noble city. From thence issuing again through the narrow passage of the Hellespont, they purfued their winding navigation amidst the numerous islands fcattered over the Archipelago, or the Ægean Sea. The affiftance of captives and deferters must have been very necessary to pilot their. vessels, and to direct their various incursions, as well on the coast of Greece as on that of Asia. At length the Gothic fleet anchored in the port of Piræus, five miles distant from Athens 112, which had attempted to make some preparations for a vigorous defence. Cleodamus, one of the engineers employed by the emperor's orders to fortify the maritime cities against the Goths, had already begun to repair the ancient walls fallen to decay fince the time of Sylla. The efforts of his skill were ineffectual, and the barbarians became masters of the native seat of the muses and the arts. But while the conquerors abandoned themselves to the license of plunder and intemperance, their fleet, that lay with a flender guard in the harbour of Piræus, was unexpectedly attacked by the brave Dexippus, who, flying with the engineer Cleodamus from the fack of

They pass the Bosphorus and the Hellespont,

> 121 Strabo, l. xi. p. 495. 122 Plin. Hift. Natur, iii. 7. Athens.

Athens, collected a hasty band of volunteers, peasants as well as CHAP. foldiers, and in fome measure avenged the calamities of his country 121.

But this exploit, whatever lustre it might shed on the declining ravage age of Athens, ferved rather to irritate than to fubdue the undaunted threaten spirit of the northern invaders. A general conflagration blazed out at the same time in every district of Greece. Thebes and Argos, Corinth and Sparta, which had formerly waged fuch memorable wars against each other, were now unable to bring an army into the field, or even to defend their ruined fortifications. The rage of war, both by land and by fea, spread from the eastern point of Sunium to the western coast of Epirus. The Goths had already advanced within fight of Italy, when the approach of fuch imminent danger awakened the indolent Gallienus from his dream of pleasure. The emperor appeared in arms; and his presence seems to have checked the ardour, and to have divided the strength, of the enemy. Nau- Their divilobatus, a chief of the Heruli, accepted an honourable capitula- treat. tion, entered with a large body of his countrymen into the fervice of Rome, and was invested with the ornaments of the consular dignity, which had never before been profaned by the hands of a barbarian 124. Great numbers of the Goths, difgusted with the perils and hardships of a tedious voyage, broke into Mæsia, with a design of forcing their way over the Danube to their fettlements in the Ukraine. The wild attempt would have proved inevitable destruction, if the discord of the Roman generals, had not opened to the barbarians the means of an escape 125. The small remainder of this destroying host returned on board their vessels; and measuring back their way through the Hellespont and the Bosphorus, ravaged in their passage the shores of Troy, whose fame, immortalized by Homer, will probably furvive the memory of the Gothic conquests. As foon as they found themselves in fafety within the bason of the Euxine, they landed at Anchialus in Thrace, near the foot of Mount Hæmus; and, after all their toils, indulged themselves in the use of those pleasant and salutary hot baths. What remained of the voyage was a short and easy navigation 126. Such was the various fates of this third and greatest of their naval enterprises. It may feem difficult to conceive, how the original body of fifteen thousand warriors could fustain the losses and divisions of so bold an adventure. But as their numbers were gradually wasted by the fword, by shipwrecks, and by the influence of a warm climate, they were perpetually renewed by troops of banditti and deferters, who flocked to the standard of plunder, and by a crowd of fugitive flaves, often of German or Sarmatian extraction, who eagerly feized the glorious opportunity of freedom and revenge. In these expeditions, the Gothic nation claimed a fuperior share of honour and danger; but the tribes that fought under the Gothic banners, are fometimes diftinguished and fometimes confounded in the imperfect histories of that age; and as the barbarian fleets feemed to iffue from the mouth of the Tanais, the vague but familiar appellation of Scythians was frequently bestowed on the mixed multitude '27.

Greece, and

<sup>*23</sup> Hist. August. p. 181. Victor, c. 33. his own and his countrymen's exploits. Orofius, vii. 42. Zofimus, l. i. p. 35. Zo- 124 Syncellus, p. 382. This body of Henaras, l. xii. 635. Syncellus, p. 382. It is ruli was for a long time faithful and famous. not without fome attention, that we can explain and conciliate their imperfect hints. nube, thought with propriety and acted with We can still discover some traces of the spirit. His colleague was jealous of his same.

<sup>125</sup> Claudius, who commanded on the Dapartiality of Dexippus, in the relation of Hist. August. p. 131.

C H A P.

Ruin of the temple of Ephefus. In the general calamities of mankind, the death of an individual, however exalted, the ruin of an edifice, however famous, are paffed over with carcless inattention. Yet we cannot forget that the temple of Diana at Ephesus, after having risen with increasing splendour from seven repeated misfortunes 128, was finally burnt by the Goths

<sup>126</sup> Jornandes, c. 20.

<sup>2.7</sup> Zofimus, and the Greeks (as the author of the Philopatris) give the name of Scy-thians to those whom Jornandes, and the Latin writers, constantly represent as Goths.

<sup>123</sup> Hift. August. p. 178. Jornandes, c. 20.

in their third naval invasion. The arts of Greece, and the wealth CHAP. of Asia, had conspired to erect that facred and magnificent structure. It was supported by an hundred and twenty-seven marble columns of the Ionic order. They were the gifts of devout monarchs, and each was fixty feet high. The altar was adorned with the masterly fculptures of Praxiteles, who had, perhaps, felected from the favourite legends of the place the birth of the divine children of Latona, the concealment of Apollo after the flaughter of the Cyclops, and the clemency of Bacchus to the vanquished Amazons 129. Yet the length of the temple of Ephefus was only four hundred and twentyfive feet, about two-thirds of the measure of the church of St. Peter's at Rome 130. In the other dimensions, it was still more inferior to that fublime production of modern architecture. The spreading arms of a Christian cross require a much greater breadth than the oblong temples of the Pagans; and the boldest artists of antiquity would have been flartled at the proposal of raising in the air a dome of the fize and proportions of the pantheon. The temple of Diana was, however, admired as one of the wonders of the world. Successive empires, the Persian, the Macedonian, and the Roman, had revered its fanctity, and enriched its fplendour's. But the rude favages of the Baltic were destitute of a taste for the elegant arts, and they despised the ideal terrors of a foreign fuperstition 132.

Another circumstance is related of these invasions, which might Conduct of deserve our notice, were it not justly to be suspected as the fanciful Athens.

Plin. Hift. Nat. xxxvi. 14.

<sup>130</sup> The length of St. Peter's is 840 Roman palms, each palm is very little fhort of nine English inches. See Greave's Miscellanies, vol. i. p. 233; On the Roman foot.

<sup>134</sup> The policy, however, of the Romans

<sup>239</sup> Strabo, l. xiv. p. 640. Vitruvius, l.i. induced them to abridge the extent of the c. 1. praefat. l. vii. Tacit. Annal. iii. 61. fanctuary or afylum, which by successive privileges had fprend itfelf two stadia round the temple. Strabo, l. xiv. p. 641. Tacit. Annal. iii. 60, &c.

<sup>132</sup> They offered no facrifices to the Grecian gods. See Epistol. Gregor. Thaumat.

CHAP. conceit of a recent forhift. We are told, that in the fack of Athens the Goths had collected all the libraries, and were on the point of fetting fire to this funeral pile of Grecian learning, had not one of their chiefs, of more refined policy than his brethren, diffuaded them from the defign; by the profound observation, that as long as the Greeks were addicted to the fludy of books, they would never apply themselves to the exercise of arms 133. The fagacious counfellor (should the truth of the fact be admitted) reasoned like an ignorant barbarian. In the most polite and powerful nations, genius of every kind has displayed itself about the same period; and the age of science has generally been the age of military virtue and fuccefs.

Conquest of Armenia by

IV. The new fovereigns of Persia, Artaxerxes and his fon Sapor, had triumphed (as we have already feen) over the house of Arsaces. Of the many princes of that ancient race, Chofroes, king of Armenia, had alone preferved both his life and his independence. He defended himself by the natural strength of his country; by the perpetual refort of fugitives and malcontents; by the alliance of the Romans, and, above all, by his own courage. Invincible in arms, during a thirty years war, he was at length affaffinated by the emiffaries of Sapor king of Persia. The patriotic satraps of Armenia, who afferted the freedom and dignity of the crown, implored the protection of Rome in favour of Tiridates the lawful heir. But the fon of Chofroes was an infant, the allies were at a distance, and the Persian monarch advanced towards the frontier at the head of an irrefistible force. Young Tiridates, the future hope of his country, was faved by the fidelity of a fervant; and Armenia continued above twenty-seven years a reluctant province of the great monarchy taigne. He makes use of it in his agreeable dote was perfectly suited to the taste of Mon-Essay on Pedantry, 1. i. c. 24.

of Persia 134. Elated with this easy conquest, and presuming on the CHAP. diffresses or the degeneracy of the Romans, Sapor obliged the strong garrifons of Carrhæ and Nisibis to surrender, and spread devastation and terror on either fide of the Euphrates.

marches into the East.

The loss of an important frontier, the ruin of a faithful and Valerian natural ally, and the rapid fuccess of Sapor's ambition, affected Rome with a deep fense of the insult as well as of the danger. Valerian flattered himfelf, that the vigilance of his lieutenants would fufficiently provide for the fafety of the Rhine and of the Danube; but he refolved, notwithstanding his advanced age, to march in person to the defence of the Euphrates. During his progress through Asia Minor, the naval enterprises of the Goths were sufpended, and the afflicted province enjoyed a transient and fallacious calm. He passed the Euphrates, encountered the Persian monarch near the walls of Edessa, was vanguished, and taken prisoner by Sapor. The particulars of this great event are darkly and im- Is defeated perfectly represented; yet by the glimmering light which is afforded perfectly represented; yet by the glimmering light which is afforded prisoner by us, we may discover a long series of imprudence, of error, and of sapor king. deserved misfortunes on the fide of the Roman emperor. He re- A. D. 260. posed an implicit confidence in Macrianus, his Prætorian præfect 135. That worthless minister rendered his master formidable only to the oppressed subjects, and contemptible to the enemies of Rome 136. By his weak or wicked counsels, the Imperial army was betrayed into a fituation, where valour and military skill were equally unavailing 137. The vigorous attempt of the Romans to cut their way through the Perfian hoft, was repulfed with great flaughter '33; and Sapor, who encompassed the camp with superior numbers, patiently and taken

184 Mofes Chorenenfis, 1. ii. c. 71. 73, 74-Zonaras, I. xii. p. 628. The authentic relation of the Armenian historian serves to rectify the confused account of the Greek. The latter talks of the children of Tiridates, who at that time was himfelf an infant.

35 Hift. August. p. 101. As Macrianus was an enemy to the Christians, they charged him with being a magician.

136 Zosimus, l. i. p. 33. 137 Hift. August. p. 174:

38 Victor in Cæfar. Eutropius, ix. 7.

waited:

CHAP waited till the increasing rage of famine and pestilence had ensured his victory. The licentious murmurs of the legions foon accused Valerian as the caule of their calamities; their feditious clamours demanded an inflant capitulation. An immense sum of gold was offered to purchase the permission of a disgraceful retreat. But the Perfian, confcious of his fuperiority, refused the money with difdain; and detaining the deputies, advanced in order of battle to the foot of the Roman rampart, and infifted on a personal conference with the emperor. Valerian was reduced to the necessity of intrusting his life and dignity to the faith of an enemy. The interview ended as it was natural to expect. The emperor was made a prisoner, and his astonished troops laid down their arms '3). In fuch a moment of triumph, the pride and policy of Sapor prompted him to fill the vacant throne with a fucceffor entirely dependent on his pleasure. Cyriades, an obscure fugitive of Antioch, stained with every vice, was chosen to dishonour the Roman purple; and the will of the Persian victor could not fail of being ratified by the acclamations, however reluctant, of the captive army "".

Sapor overruns Syria, Cilicia, and Cappadocia.

The imperial flave was eager to fecure the favour of his mafter, by an act of treason to his native country. He conducted Sapor over the Euphrates, and by the way of Chalcis to the metropolis of the East. So rapid were the motions of the Persian cavalry, that, if we may credit a very judicious historian 141, the city of Antioch was furprised when the idle multitude was fondly gazing on the amusements of the theatre. The fplendid buildings of Antioch, private as well as public, were either pillaged or destroyed; and the nume-

p. 630. Peter Patricius in the Excerpta Le- nology of a most inaccurate writer.

the death of Valerian; but I have preferred a reign of Gallienus, xxiii. 5.

<sup>29</sup> Zosimus, l. i. p. 33. Zonaras, l. xii. probable series of events to the doubtful chro-

<sup>141</sup> The fack of Antioch, anticipated by 140 Hift. August. p. 185. The reign of some historians, is assigned, by the decisive Cyriades appears in that collection prior to testimony of Ammianus Marcellinus, to the

rous inhabitants were put to the fword, or led away into captivity 142. CHAP. The tide of devastation was stopped for a moment by the resolution of the high priest of Emesa. Arrayed in his facerdotal robes, he appeared at the head of a great body of fanatic peafants, armed only with flings, and defended his god and his property from the facrilegious hands of the followers of Zoroaster 143. But the ruin of Tarfus, and of many other cities, furnish a melancholy proof that, except in this fingular inflance, the conquest of Syria and Cilicia fcarcely interrupted the progress of the Persian arms. The advantages of the narrow passes of mount Taurus were abandoned, in which an invader, whose principal force confisted in his cavalry. would have been engaged in a very unequal combat: and Sapor was permitted to form the fiege of Cæfarea, the capital of Cappadocia; a city, though of the fecond rank, which was supposed to contain four hundred thousand inhabitants. Demosthenes commanded in the place, not so much by the commission of the emperor, as in the voluntary defence of his country. For a long time he deferred its fate; and, when at last Cæsarea was betrayed by the perfidy of a physician, he cut his way through the Persians, who had been ordered to exert their utmost diligence to take him alive. This heroic chief escaped the power of a foe, who might either have honoured or punished his obstinate valour; but many thousands of his fellow-citizens were involved in a general maffacre, and Sapor is accufed of treating his prisoners with wanton and unrelenting cruelty '44. Much should undoubtedly be allowed for national animofity, much for humbled pride and impotent revenge; yet, upon the whole, it is certain, that the same prince, who, in Armenia, had displayed the mild aspect of a legislator, shewed himself to the Ro-rupts this probable event by fome fabulous foners were driven to water like beafts, and circumstances.

<sup>142</sup> Zofimus, l.i. p. 35.

<sup>344</sup> Zonaras, 1. xii. p. 630. Deep vallies 143 John Malala, tom. i. p. 391. He cor- were filled up with the flain. Crowds of primany perished for want of food.

CHAP, mans under the stern features of a conqueror. He despaired of making any permanent establishment in the empire, and fought only to leave behind him a wasted defert, whilst he transported into Persia the people and the treasures of the provinces '45.

Boldness and fuccess of Odenathus against Sapor.

At the time when the East trembled at the name of Sapor, he received a present not unworthy of the greatest kings; a long train of camels laden with the most rare and valuable merchandises. The rich offering was accompanied by an epiftle, respectful but not fervile, from Odenathus, one of the noblest and most opulent senators of Palmyra. "Who is this Odenathus (faid the haughty victor, " and he commanded that the prefents should be cast into the Eu-" phrates), that he thus infolently prefumes to write to his lord? If " he entertains a hope of mitigating his punishment, let him fall pro-" ftrate before the foot of our throne with his hands bound behind " his back. Should he hesitate, swift destruction shall be poured " on his head, on his whole race, and on his country 146." The desperate extremity to which the Palmyrenian was reduced, called into action all the latent powers of his foul. He met Sapor; but he met him in arms. Infusing his own spirit into a little army collected from the villages of Syria 147, and the tents of the defert 147, he hovered round the Persian host, harassed their retreat, carried off part of the treasure, and, what was dearer than any treasure, several of the women of the Great King; who was at last obliged to repass the Euphrates with fome marks of haste and confusion 147. By this exploit, Odenathus laid the foundations of his future fame and for-racens.

<sup>245</sup> Zosimus, I. i. p. 25. afferts, that Sa- in making Odenathus a citizen of Palmyra. por, had he not preferred spoil to conquest, might have remained mafter of Afia.

<sup>146</sup> Peter Patricius in Excerpt, Leg. p. 29. 147 Syrorum Agrestium manû. Sextus Rufus, c. 23. Rufus, Victor, the Augustan Hiftory (p. 192.), and feveral inscriptions agree tunes. The majefty of Rome, oppreffed by a Persian, was protected CHAP. by a Syrian or Arab of Palmyra.

<sup>148</sup> He possessed so powerful an interest. among the wandering tribes, that Procopius (Rell. Perfic. I. ii. c. 5.) and John Malala (tom. i. p. 391.) ftyle him Prince of the Sa-

<sup>149</sup> Peter Patricius, p. 25.

Х.

of Valerian.

The voice of history, which is often little more than the organ Treatment of hatred or flattery, reproaches Sapor with a proud abuse of the rights of conquest. We are told that Valerian, in chains, but invefted with the Imperial purple, was exposed to the multitude a conflant spectacle of fallen greatness; and that whenever the Persian monarch mounted on horseback, he placed his foot on the neck of a Roman emperor. Notwithstanding all the remonstrances of his allies, who repeatedly advised him to remember the vicisfitude of fortune, to dread the returning power of Rome, and to make his illustrious captive the pledge of peace, not the object of infult, Sapor fill remained inflexible. When Valerian funk under the weight of shame and grief, his skin, stuffed with straw, and formed into the likeness of a human figure, was preserved for ages in the most celebrated temple of Persia; a more real monument of triumph, than the fancied trophies of brass and marble so often erected by Roman vanity '50. The tale is moral and pathetic, but the truth of it may very fairly be called in question. The letters still extant from the princes of the East to Sapor, are manifest forgeries 's'; nor is it natural to suppose that a jealous monarch should, even in the person of a rival, thus publickly degrade the majesty of kings. Whatever treatment the unfortunate Valerian might experience in Persia, it is at least certain, that the only emperor of Rome who had ever fallen into the hands of the enemy, languished away his life in hopeless captivity.

tian infult, the misfortunes of Valerian. Their various testimonies are accurately collected by Tillemont, tom. iii. p. 739, &c. So little has been preferved of eaftern history before Mahomet, that the modern Persians are totally ignorant of the victory of Sapor, an

The Pagan writers lament, the Chrif- event fo glorious to their nation. See Bibliothêque Orientale.

> 151 One of these epiftles is from Artavasdes, king of Armenia: fince Armenia was then a province in Persia, the king, the kingdom, and the epiftle, must be sictitious.

C H A P.
X.
Character and adminifiration of Gallienus.

The emperor Gallienus, who had long supported with impatience the cenforial feverity of his father and colleague, received the intelligence of his misfortunes with fecret pleafure and avowed indifference. "I knew that my father was a mortal," faid he, " and fince he has acted as becomes a brave man, I am fatisfied." Whilft Rome lamented the fate of her fovereign, the favage coldness of his fon was extolled by the servile courtiers, as the perfect firmness of a hero and a stoic 152. It is difficult to paint the light, the various, the inconftant character of Gallienus, which he difplayed without constraint, as soon as he became sole possessor of the empire. In every art that he attempted, his lively genius enabled him to fucceed; and as his genius was deflitute of judgment, he attempted every art, except the important ones of war and government. He was a master of several curious but useless sciences, a ready orator, an elegant poet 153, a skilful gardener, an excellent cook, and most contemptible prince. When the great emergencies of the flate required his presence and attention, he was engaged in conversation with the philosopher Plotinus 154, wasting his time in trifling or licentious pleasures, preparing his initiation to the Grecian mysteries, or foliciting a place in the Areopagus of Athens. His profuse magnificence infulted the general poverty; the folemn ridicule of his triumphs impressed a deeper sense of the public disgrace "55. The repeated 152 See his life in the Augustan History.

353 There is still extant a very pretty Epithalamium, composed by Gallienus, for the nuptials of his nephews.

Ite ait, O Juvenes, pariter fudate medullis Omnibus, inter vos; non murmura vestra columbæ.

Brachia non Hederæ, non vincant ofcula Conchæ.

<sup>354</sup> He was on the point of giving Plotinus a ruined city of Campania, to try the experiment of realizing Plato's Republic. See the Life of Plotinus, by Porphyry, in Fabricius's Biblioth. Græc. l. iv.

155 A medal which bears the head of Gallienus has perplexed the antiquarians by its legend and reverfe; the former Gallienus Augustes, the latter Ubique Pax. M. Spanheim fuppofes that the coin was flruck by fome of the enemies of Gallienus, and was defigned as a fevere fatire on that effeminate prince. But as the use of irony may feem unworthy of the gravity of the Roman mint, M. de Vallemont has deduced from a passage of Trebellius Polito (Hist.)

peated intelligence of invalions, defeats, and rebellions, he received CHAP. with a careless smile; and singling out, with affected contempt, fome particular production of the lost province, he carelessly asked, whether Rome must be ruined, unless it was supplied with linen from Egypt and Arras cloth from Gaul? There were, however, a few fhort moments, in the life of Gallienus, when, exasperated by fome recent injury, he fuddenly appeared the intrepid foldier, and the cruel tyrant; till fatiated with blood, or fatigued by refistance, he infensibly funk into the natural mildness and indolence of his character 155.

At a time when the reins of government were held with fo loofe The thirty a hand, it is not furprifing, that a crowd of usurpers should start up in every province of the empire, against the fon of Valerian. It was probably fome ingenious fancy, of comparing the thirty tyrants of Rome with the thirty tyrants of Athens, that induced the writers of the Augustan history to select that celebrated number. which has been gradually received into a popular appellation 157. But in every light the parallel is idle and defective. What refemblance can we discover between a council of thirty persons, the united oppressors of a single city, and an uncertain list of independent rivals, who rose and fell in irregular succession through the extent of a vast empire? Nor can the number of thirty be completed unless we include in the account the women and children who were honoured with the Imperial title. The reign of Gallienus, distracted tural folution. Galliena was first cousin to the emperor. By delivering Africa from the usurper Celfus, she deserved the title of Augusta. On a medal in the French king's collection, we read a fimilar infcription of Fauflina Augusta round the head of Marcus Aurelius. With regard to the Ubique Pax, it is eafily explained by the vanity of Gallienus, the character of Gallienus. who feized, perhaps, the occasion of some (Hift. August. p. 198.) an ingenious and na- publique des Lettres. Janvier 1700. p. 21-

34. This fingular character has, I believe, been fairly transmitted to us. The reign of his immediate fuccessor was short and busy; and the historians who wrote before the elevation of the family of Constantine, could not have the most remote interest to misrepresent 157 Pollio expresses the most minute anxiety momentary calm. See Nouvelles de la Re- to complete the number.

CHAP. Their real number was no more than nineteen.

as it was, produced only nineteen pretenders to the throne; Cyriades, Macrianus, Balista, Odenathus, and Zenobia in the east; in Gaul, and the western provinces, Postumus, Lollianus, Victorinus and his mother Victoria, Marius, and Tetricus. In Illyricum and the confines of the Danube, Ingenuus, Regillianus, and Aureolus; in Pontus 158, Saturninus; in Isauria, Trebellianus; Piso in Thessaly; Valens in Achaia; Æmilianus in Egypt; and Celsus in Africa. To illustrate the obscure monuments of the life and death of each individual, would prove a laborious task, alike barren of instruction and of amusement. We may content ourselves with invefligating fome general characters, that most strongly mark the condition of the times, and the manners of the men, their pretenfions, their motives, their fate, and the destructive consequences of their usurpation 150.

Character and merit of the tyrants.

It is fufficiently known, that the odious appellation of Tyrant was often employed by the ancients to express the illegal seizure of supreme power, without any reference to the abuse of it. Several of the pretenders, who raifed the flandard of rebellion against the emperor Gallienus, were shining models of virtue, and almost all possessed a considerable share of vigour and ability. Their merit had recommended them to the favour of Valerian, and gradually promoted them to the most important commands of the empire. The generals, who assumed the title of Augustus, were either respected by their troops for their able conduct and severe discipline, or admired for valour and fuccess in war, or beloved for frankness and generofity. The field of victory was often the scene of their election, and even the armourer Marius, the most contemptible of all the candidates for the purple, was diflinguished however by intrepid courage, matchless strength, and blunt honesty 163. His CHAP. mean and recent trade cast indeed an air of ridicule on his elcvation; but his birth could not be more obscure than was that of the greater part of his rivals, who were born of peafants, and inlifted in the army as private foldiers. In times of confusion, Their obevery active genius finds the place affigned him by Nature: in a general state of war, military merit is the road to glory and to greatness. Of the nineteen tyrants, Tetricus only was a senator; Piso alone was a noble. The blood of Numa, through twenty-eight fuccessive generations, ran in the veins of Calphurnius Pifo 151, who, by female alliances, claimed a right of exhibiting in his house, the images of Crassus and of the great Pompey 162. His ancestors had been repeatedly dignified with all the honours which the commonwealth could bestow; and of all the ancient families of Rome, the Calphurnian alone had furvived the tyranny of the Cæfars. The personal qualities of Piso added new lustre to his race. usurper Valens, by whose order he was killed, confessed, with deep remorfe, that even an enemy ought to have respected the fanctity of Pifo; and although he died in arms against Gallienus, the senate, with the emperor's generous permission, decreed the triumphal ornaments to the memory of so virtuous a rebel 163.

<sup>15:</sup> The place of his reign is fomewhat doubtful; but there quas a tyrant in Pontus, and them somewhat differently. we are acquainted with the feat of all the others.

<sup>159</sup> Tillemont, tom. iii. p. 1163, reckons

foure birth.

The lieutenants of Valerian were grateful to the father, whom The causes they esteemed. They disdained to serve the luxurious indolence of bellion. his unworthy fon. The throne of the Roman world was unsup-

160 See the speech of Marius, in the Au- generation from Augustus to Alexander Segustan History, p. 197. The accidental idencould tempt Pollio to imitate Salluft.

address to the Pisos. See Art. Poet. v. 202, and a third was adopted, and declared Cæsar. with Dacier's and Sanadon's notes..

162 Tacit. Annal. xv. 48. Hift. i. 15. In the former of these passages we may venture a moment of enthusiasm, seems to have preverus, one or more Pifos appear as confuls. tity of names was the only circumstance that A Piso was deemed worthy of the throne by Augustus (Tacit. Annal. i. 13.). A second 164 Vos, O Pompilius fanguis! is Horace's headed a formidable confpiracy against Nero; by Galba.

3.

163 Hift. August. p. 195. The senate, in to change paterna into materna. In every fumed on the approbation of Gallienus.

CHAP. ported by any principle of loyalty; and treason, against such a prince, might eafily be confidered as patriotism to the state. Yet if we examine with candour the conduct of these usurpers, it will appear, that they were much oftener driven into rebellion by their fears, than urged to it by their ambition. They dreaded the cruel fuspicions of Gallienus; they equally dreaded the capricious violence of their troops. If the dangerous favour of the army had imprudently declared them deferving of the purple, they were marked for fure destruction; and even prudence would counsel them, to fecure a short enjoyment of empire, and rather to try the fortune of war, than to expect the hand of an executioner. When the clamour of the foldiers invested the reluctant victims with the enfigns of fovereign authority, they fometimes mourned in fecret their approaching fate. "You have loft," faid Saturninus, on the day of his elevation, "you have loft a ufeful commander, and " you have made a very wretched emperor 154.

Their violent deaths.

The apprehensions of Saturninus were justified by the repeated experience of revolutions. Of the nineteen tyrants who flarted up under the reign of Gallienus, there was not one who enjoyed a life of peace, or a natural death. As foon as they were invested with the bloody purple, they inspired their adherents with the same fears and ambition which had occasioned their own revolt. Encompassed with domestic conspiracy, military sedition, and civil war, they trembled on the edge of precipices, in which, after a longer or shorter term of anxiety, they were inevitably lost. These precarious monarchs received, however, fuch honours, as the flattery of their respective armies and provinces could bestow; but their claim. founded on rebellion, could never obtain the fanction of law or history. Italy, Rome, and the fenate, constantly adhered to the cause of Gallienus, and he alone was considered as the sovereign of the empire. That prince condescended indeed to acknowledge the CHAP. victorious arms of Odenathus, who deserved the honourable distinction, by the respectful conduct which he always maintained towards the fon of Valerian. With the general applause of the Romans and the confent of Gallienus, the fenate conferred the title of Augustus on the brave Palmyrenian; and seemed to intrust him with the government of the East, which he already possessed, in fo independent a manner, that, like a private succession, he bequeathed it to his illustrious widow Zenobia 165.

16; Hift. August. p. 196.

6

The rapid and perpetual transitions from the cottage to the Fatal confethrone, and from the throne to the grave, might have amused an quences of these usurpaindifferent philosopher; were it possible for a philosopher to remain indifferent amidst the general calamities of human kind. election of these precarious emperors, their power and their death, were equally destructive to their subjects and adherents. The price of their fatal elevation was inflantly discharged to the troops, by an immense donative, drawn from the bowels of the exhausted people. However virtuous was their character, however pure their intentions, they found themselves reduced to the hard necessity of supporting their usurpation by frequent acts of rapine and cruelty. When they fell, they involved armies and provinces in their fall. There is still extant a most savage mandate from Gallienus to one of his ministers, after the suppression of Ingenuus, who had assumed the purple in Illyricum. "It is not enough," fays that foft but inhuman prince, "that you exterminate fuch as have appeared in " arms: the chance of battle might have ferved me as effectually. "The male fex of every age must be extirpated; provided that, in " the execution of the children and old men, you can contrive " means to fave our reputation. Let every one die who has dropt

165 The affociation of the brave Palmyre- reign of Gallienus, Hift. August. p. 180. nian was the most popular act of the whole

CHAP. " an expression, who has entertained a thought against me, against " me; the fon of Valerian, the father and brother of fo many princes 166. Remember that Ingenuus was made emperor: tear, 4 kill, hew in pieces. I write to you with my own hand, and would inspire you with my own feelings 167.39 Whilst the public forces of the flate were diffipated in private quarrels, the defencelefs provinces lay expofed to every invader. The braveft usurpers were compelled, by the perplexity of their fituation, to conclude ignominious treaties with the common enemy, to purchase with oppreffive tributes the neutrality or fervices of the barbarians, and to introduce hostile and independent nations into the heart of the Roman monarchy 168.

> Such were the barbarians, and fuch the tyrants, who, under the reigns of Valerian and Gallienus, difmembered the provinces, and reduced the empire to the lowest pitch of disgrace and ruin, from whence it feemed impossible that it should ever emerge. As far as the barrenness of materials would permit, we have attempted to trace, with order and perspicuity, the general events of that calamitous period. There still remain some particular facts; I. The diforders of Sicily; II. The tumults of Alexandria; and III. The rebellion of the Isaurians, which may serve to reslect a strong light on the horrid picture.

Disorders of

. I. Whenever numerous troops of banditti, multiplied by fuccess and impunity, publickly defy, instead of eluding the justice of their country, we may fafely infer, that the excessive weakness of the 166 Gallienus had given the titles of Cæfar mont, tom. iii. and M. de Brequigny in the and Augustus to his fon Saloninus, slain at Cologn by the usurper Posthumus. A fecond fon of Gallienus succeeded to the name and rank of his elder brother. Valerian, the brother of Gallienus, was also associated to the empire, several other brothers, sufers, nephews, and nieces of the emperor, formed a very numerous royal family. See Tille-Memoires de l'Academie, tom. xxxii. p. 262.

167 Hift. August. p. 188.

168 Regillianus had fome bands of Roxolani in his fervice. Posthumus a body of Franks. It was perhaps in the character of auxiliaries that the latter introduced themfelves into Spain.

government

= government is felt and abused by the lowest ranks of the com- CHAP. = munity. The fituation of Sicily preserved it from the barbarians; nor could the difarmed province have supported an usurper. The fufferings of that once flourishing and still fertile island, were inflicted by baser hands. A licentious crowd of slaves and peasants reigned for a while over the plundered country, and renewed the memory of the fervile wars of more ancient times 169. Devastations, of which the husbandman was either the victim or the accomplice, must have ruined the agriculture of Sicily; and as the principal estates were the property of the opulent senators of Rome, who often enclosed within a farm the territory of an old republic, it is not improbable, that this private injury might affect the capital more deeply, than all the conquests of the Goths or the Persians.

II. The foundation of Alexandria was a noble defign, at once Tumults of conceived and executed by the fon of Philip. The beautiful and Alexandria. regular form of that great city, fecond only to Rome itself, comprehended a circumference of fifteen miles '70; it was peopled by three hundred thousand free inhabitants, besides at least an equal number of flaves '7'. The lucrative trade of Arabia and India flowed through the port of Alexandria, to the capital and provinces of the empire. Idleness was unknown. Some were employed in blowing of glass, others in weaving of linen, others again manufacturing the papyrus. Either fex, and every age, was engaged in the purfuits of industry, nor did even the blind or the lame want occupations fuited to their condition 172. But the people of Alexandria, a various mixture of nations, united the vanity and inconflancy of the Greeks, with the fuperstition and obstinacy of the Egyptians. The most trifling occasion, a transient scarcity of flesh or lentils, the

<sup>169</sup> The Augustan History, p. 177, calls 171 Diodor. Sicul. 1. xvii. p. 590. Edit. it fervile bellum. See Diodor. Sicul. 1. Wesseling.

<sup>170</sup> Plin, Hift. Natur. v. 104

<sup>172</sup> See a very curious letter of Hadrian in the Augustan History, p. 245.

X x 2

C H A P. neglect of an accustomed falutation, a mistake of precedency in the public baths, or even a religious dispute 173, were at any time sufficient to kindle a fedition among that vast multitude, whose resentments were furious and implacable 174. After the captivity of Valerian and the infolence of his fon had relaxed the authority of the laws, the Alexandrians abandoned themselves to the ungoverned rage of their passions, and their unhappy country was the theatre of a civil war, which continued (with a few short and suspicious truces) above twelve years 175. All intercourse was cut off between the several quarters of the afflicted city, every ftreet was polluted with blood, every building of firength converted into a citadel; nor did the tumults fubfide, till a confiderable part of Alexandria was irretrievably ruined. The spacious and magnificent district of Bruchion, with its palaces and museum, the residence of the kings and philofophers of Egypt, is described above a century afterwards, as already reduced to its present state of a dreary solitude 176.

Rebellion of the Isaurians.

III. The obscure rebellion of Trebellianus, who assumed the purple in Isauria, a petty province of Asia Minor, was attended with strange and memorable confequences. The pageant of royalty was foon destroyed by an officer of Gallienus; but his followers, despairing of mercy, resolved to shake off their allegiance, not only to the emperor, but to the empire, and fuddenly returned to the favage manners, from which they had never perfectly been reclaimed. Their craggy rocks, a branch of the wide extended Taurus, protected their inaccessible retreat. The tillage of some fertile vallies '77 supplied them with the necessaries, and a habit of rapine with the luxuries, of life. In the heart of the Roman monarchy,

<sup>173</sup> Such as the facrilegious murder of a divine cat. See Diodor. Sicul. 1. i.

<sup>174</sup> Hist. August. p. 195. This long and terrible fedition was first occasioned by a difpute between a foldier and a townsman about a pair of shoes.

<sup>*75</sup> Dionysius apud Euseb. Hist. Eccles. vol. vii. p. 21. Ammian. xxii. 16.

<sup>176</sup> Scaliger Animadver, ad Eufeb, Chron. p. 258. Three differtations of M. Bonamy, in the Mem, de l'Academie, tom, ix. 177 Strabo, I. xii. p. 569.

the Isaurians long continued a nation of wild barbarians. Suc- CHAP. ceeding princes, unable to reduce them to obedience, either by arms or policy, were compelled to acknowledge their weakness, by furrounding the hostile and independent spot, with a strong chain of fortifications 178, which often proved infufficient to reftrain the incursions of these domestic foes. The Isaurians, gradually extending their territory to the fea-coast, subdued the western and mountainous part of Cilicia, formerly the nest of those daring pyrates, against whom the republic had once been obliged to exert its utmost force, under the conduct of the great Pompey 179.

Our habits of thinking fo fondly connect the order of the Famine and universe with the fate of man, that this gloomy period of history pestilence, has been decorated with inundations, earthquakes, uncommon meteors, preternatural darkness, and a crowd of prodigies fictitious or exaggerated 120. But a long and general famine was a calamity of a more ferious kind. It was the inevitable confequence of rapine and oppression, which extirpated the produce of the present, and the hope of future harvests. Famine is almost always followed by epidemical diseases, the effect of scanty and unwholesome food. Other causes must however have contributed to the furious plague, which, from the year two hundred and fifty, to the year two hundred and fixty-five, raged without interruption in every province, every city, and almost every family, of the Roman empire. During some time five thousand persons died daily in Rome; and many towns, that had escaped the hands of the barbarians, were entirely depopulated 181

We have the knowledge of a very curious circumstance, of some use Diminution perhaps in the melancholy calculation of human calamities. An fpecies.

exact

131 Hist. August. p. 177. Zosimus, I. i.

<sup>178</sup> Hift. August. p. 197. 179 See Cellarius, Geog. Antiq. tom. ii. p. 24. Zonaras, l. xii. p. 623. Euseb. Chrop. 137, upon the limits of Isauria. 450 Hift. August. p. 177.

nicon. Victor in Epitom. Victor in Cæfar. Eutropius, ix. 5. Orofius, vii. 21.

CHAP. exact register was kept at Alexandria, of all the citizens entitled to receive the distribution of corn. It was found, that the ancient number of those comprised between the ages of forty and seventy, had been equal to the whole fum of claimants, from fourteen to fourfcore years of age, who remained alive after the reign of Gallienus 182. Applying this authentic fact to the most correct tables of mortality, it evidently proves, that above half the poople of Alexandria had perished; and could we venture to extend the analogy to the other provinces, we might fuspect, that war, pestilence, and famine, had confumed, in a few years, the moiety of the human species 183.

<sup>282</sup> Euseb. Hift, Eccles. vii. 21. The fact is taken from the Letters of Dionyfius, who, In the time of those troubles, was bishop of Alexandria.

<sup>183</sup> In a great number of parishes 11,000 persons were found between fourteen and eighty; 5365 between forty and feventy. See Buffon, Histoire Naturelle, tom. ii. p. 590.

CHAP. XI.

Reign of Claudius .- Defeat of the Goths .- Victories, triumph, and death, of Aurelian.

TNDER the deplorable reigns of Valerian and Gallienus, the CHAP. empire was oppressed and almost destroyed by the soldiers, the tyrants, and the barbarians. It was faved by a feries of great princes, who derived their obscure origin from the martial provinces of Illyricum. Within a period of about thirty years, Claudius, Aurelian, Probus, Diocletian and his colleagues, triumphed over the foreign and domestic enemies of the state, re-established with the military discipline, the strength of the frontiers, and deserved the glorious title of Restorers of the Roman world.

The removal of an effeminate tyrant made way for a fuccession of Aureolus inheroes. The indignation of the people imputed all their calamities defeated and to Gallienus, and the far greater part were, indeed, the confequence Milan, of his diffolute manners and careless administration. He was even destitute of a sense of honour, which so frequently supplies the abfence of public virtue; and as long as he was permitted to enjoy the possession of Italy, a victory of the barbarians, the loss of a province, or the rebellion of a general, feldom diffurbed the tranquil course of his pleasures. At length, a confiderable army, stationed As D. 268s on the Upper Danube, invested with the Imperial purple their leader Aureolus; who disdaining a confined and barren reign over the mountains of Rhætia, passed the Alps, occupied Milan, threatened Rome, and challenged Gallienus to dispute in the field the sovereignty of Italy. The emperor provoked by the infult, and alarmed by the inflant danger, fuddenly exerted that latent vigour, which fometimes broke through the indolence of his temper. Forcing himfelf

C H A P. himself from the luxury of the alace, he appeared in arms at the head of his legions, and advanced beyond the Po to encounter his competitor. The corrupted name of Pontirolo ' still preserves the memory of a bridge over the Adda, which, during the action, must have proved an object of the utmost importance to both armies. The Rhætian usurper, after receiving a total defeat and a dangerous wound, retired into Milan. The fiege of that great city was immediately formed; the walls were battered with every engine in use among the ancients; and Aureolus, doubtful of his internal strength, and hopeless of foreign succours, already anticipated the fatal confequences of unfuccefsful rebellion.

> His last resource was an attempt to seduce the loyalty of the befiegers. He feattered libels through their camp, inviting the troops to defert an unworthy master, who sacrificed the public happiness to his luxury, and the lives of his most valuable subjects to the flightest suspicions. The arts of Aureolus diffused fears and discontent among the principal officers of his rival. A conspiracy was formed by Heraclianus the Prætorian præfect, by Marcian a general of rank and reputation, and by Cecrops, who commanded a numerous body of Dalmatian guards. The death of Gallienus was refolved, and notwithstanding their defire of first terminating the fiege of Milan, the extreme danger which accompanied every moment's delay, obliged them to hasten the execution of their daring purpose. At a late hour of the night, but while the emperor still protracted the pleasures of the table, an alarm was suddenly given, that Aureolus, at the head of all his forces, had made a desperate fally from the town; Gallienus, who was never deficient in personal bravery, flarted from his filken couch, and, without allowing himfelf

1 Pons Aureoli, thirteen miles from Ber- and Austrians. The excellent relation of the gamo, and thirty-two from Milan. See Clu-ver. Italia Antiq. tom. i. p. 245. Near this place, in the year 1703, the obflinate battle lybe de Folard, tom. iii. p. 223-248.

of Casiano was fought between the French time either to put on his armour, or to affemble his guards, he CHAP. mounted on horseback, and rode full speed towards the supposed place of the attack. Encompassed by his declared or concealed enemies, he foon, amidst the nocturnal tumult, received a mortal dart from an uncertain hand. Before he expired, a patriotic fenti- A.D. 268. ment rifing in the mind of Gallienus, induced him to name a Death of deferving fuccesfor, and it was his last request, that the Imperial ornaments should be delivered to Claudius, who then commanded a detached army in the neighbourhood of Pavia. The report at least was diligently propagated, and the order cheerfully obeyed by the conspirators, who had already agreed to place Claudius on the throne. On the first news of the emperor's death, the troops expreffed fome suspicion and refentment, till the one was removed and the other affuaged by a donative of twenty pieces of gold to each foldier. They then ratified the election, and acknowledged the merit of their new fovereign 2.

The obscurity which covered the origin of Claudius, though it was Character afterwards embellished by some flattering sictions', sufficiently be- of the empetrays the meanness of his birth. We can only discover that he was a native of one of the provinces bordering on the Danube; that his youth was fpent in arms, and that his modest valour attracted the favour and confidence of Decius. The fenate and people already confidered him as an excellent officer, equal to the most important trufts; and cenfured the inattention of Valerian, who fuffered him to remain in the subordinate station of a tribune. But it was not long before that emperor diffinguished the merit of Claudius, by declaring him general and chief of the Illyrian frontier, with the command of lius Pollio in Hist. August. p. 181. Zosimus, 1. i. p. 37. Zonaras, l. xii. p. 634. Eutrop,

<sup>2</sup> On the death of Gallienus, fee Trebel- who feems to have had the best memoirs. all, but have chiefly followed Aurelius Victor, ancient kings of Troy.

ix. 11. Aurelius Victor in Epitom. Victor took advantage of the province of Dardania, in Cafar. I have compared and blended them to deduce his origin from Dardanus, and the

C H A P. all the troops in Thrace, Mæsia, Dacia, Pannonia, and Dalmatia, the appointments of the præfect of Egypt, the establishment of the proconful of Africa, and the fure prospect of the confulship. By his victories over the Goths, he deserved from the senate the honour of a statue, and excited the jealous apprehensions of Gallienus. It was impossible that a soldier could esteem so dissolute a sovereign, nor is it easy to conceal a just contempt. Some unguarded expressions which dropt from Claudius, were officiously transmitted to the royal ear. The emperor's answer to an officer of confidence, describes in very lively colours his own character and that of the times. "There is not " any thing capable of giving me more ferious concern, than the in-" telligence contained in your last dispatch +; that some malicious " fuggestions have indisposed towards us the mind of our friend and " parent Claudius. As you regard your allegiance, use every means " to appeale his refentment, but conduct your negociation with fe-" crecy; let it not reach the knowledge of the Dacian troops; they " are already provoked, and it might inflame their fury. I myfelf " have fent him fome prefents: be it your care that he accept them " with pleafure. Above all, let him not fuspect that I am made ac-" quainted with his imprudence. The fear of my anger might urge " him to desperate counsels "." The presents which accompanied this humble epiftle, in which the monarch folicited a reconciliation with his discontented subject, consisted of a considerable sum of money, a fplendid wardrobe, and a valuable fervice of filver and gold plate. By fuch arts Gallienus foftened the indignation, and difpelled the fears, of his Illyrian general; and, during the remainder of that reign, the formidable fword of Claudius was always drawn in the cause of a master whom he despised. At last, indeed, he received from the conspirators the bloody purple of Gallienus: but he had been absent C H A P. from their camp and counfels; and however he might applaud the deed, we may candidly prefume that he was innocent of the knowledge of it 6. When Claudius ascended the throne, he was about fifty-four years of age.

* Notoria, a periodical and official dispatch mentarii or agents dispersed through the pro- loved and understood those splendid trisles. vinces. Of these we may speak hereafter.

<sup>5</sup> Hift. August. p. 208. Gallienus describes which the Emperors received from the fru- the plate, vestments, &c. like a man who

covered, that the fuccess of his artifices had only raised up a more determined adverfary. He attempted to negociate with Claudius a treaty of alliance and partition. "Tell him," replied the intrepid emperor, "that fuch proposals should have been made to Gallienus; " be, perhaps, might have liftened to them with patience, and ac-" cepted a colleague as despicable as himself?." This stern refusal, and a last unsuccessful effort, obliged Aureolus to yield the city and himself to the discretion of the conqueror. The judgment of the army pronounced him worthy of death, and Claudius, after a feeble refistance, confented to the execution of the fentence. Nor was the zeal of the senate less ardent in the cause of their new sovereign. They ratified, perhaps with a fincere transport of zeal, the election of Claudius; and as his predeceffor had shewn himself the personal enemy of their order, they exercifed under the name of justice a fevere revenge against his friends and family. The senate was permitted to discharge the ungrateful office of punishment, and the emperor referved for himself the pleasure and merit of obtaining by his interceffion a general act of indemnity 3.

The fiege of Milan was still continued, and Aureolus foon dif- Death of Such oftentatious elemency discovers less of the real character of Clemency Claudius, than a trifling circumstance in which he seems to have con-

<sup>6</sup> Julian (Orat. i. p. 6.) affirms that Claudius acquired the empire in a just and even holy manner. But we may diffrust the partiality of a kinfman.

stances of the last defeat and death of Aureolus. under examination.

<sup>8</sup> Aurelius Victor in Gallien. The people loudly prayed for the damnation of Gallienus. The fenate decreed that his relations and fervants should be thrown down headlong Hith. August. p. 203. There are some from the Gemonian stairs. An obnoxious oftriffing differences concerning the circum- ficer of the revenue had his eyes torn out whilft

C H A P. fulted only the dictates of his heart. The frequent rebellions of the provinces had involved almost every person in the guilt of treason, almost every estate in the case of confiscation; and Gallienus often displayed his liberality, by distributing among his officers the property of his fubjects. On the accession of Claudius, an old woman threw herfelf at his feet, and complained that a general of the late emperor had obtained an arbitrary grant of her patrimony. This general was Claudius himfelf, who had not entirely escaped the contagion of the times. The emperor blushed at the reproach, but deserved the confidence which she had reposed in his equity. The confession of his fault was accompanied with immediate and ample restitution °.

He undertakes the reformation of the army.

In the arduous task which Claudius had undertaken, of restoring the empire to its ancient splendour, it was first necessary to revive among his troops a fense of order and obedience. With the authority of a veteran commander, he represented to them, that the relaxation of discipline had introduced a long train of disorders, the effects of which were at length experienced by the foldiers themselves; that a people ruined by oppression, and indolent from despair, could no longer supply a numerous army with the means of luxury, or even of fubfishence; that the danger of each individual had increased with the despotism of the military order, since princes who tremble on the throne, will guard their fafety by the instant facrifice of every obnoxious fubject. The emperor expatiated on the mischiefs of a lawless caprice which the foldiers could only gratify at the expence of their own blood; as their feditious elections had fo frequently been followed by civil wars, which confumed the flower of the legions either in the field of battle or in the cruel abuse of victory. He painted in the most lively colours the exhausted state of the treasury, the desolation of the provinces, the disgrace of the Roman name, and the infolent triumph of rapacious barbarians. It was against those barbarians, he declared, that he intended to point CHAP. the first effort of their arms. Tetricus might reign for a while over the West, and even Zenobia might preserve the dominion of the East 10. These usurpers were his personal adversaries; nor could he think of indulging any private refentment till he had faved an empire, whose impending ruin would, unless it was timely prevented, crush both the army and the people.

empire.

The various nations of Germany and Sarmatia, who fought under A. D. 269. the Gothic standard, had already collected an armament more for- invade the midable than any which had yet iffued from the Euxine. On the banks of the Niester, one of the great rivers that discharge themfelves into that fea, they conftructed a fleet of two thousand, or even of fix thousand vessels"; numbers which, however incredible they may feem, would have been infufficient to transport their pretended army of three hundred and twenty thousand barbarians. Whatever might be the real strength of the Goths, the vigour and success of the expedition were not adequate to the greatness of the preparations. In their passage through the Bosphorus, the unskilful pilots were overpowered by the violence of the current; and while the multitude of their ships were crowded in a narrow channel, many were dashed against each other, or against the shore. The barbarians made feveral descents on the coasts both of Europe and Asia; but the open country was already plundered, and they were repulfed with shame and loss from the fortified cities which they assaulted. A fpirit of discouragement and division arose in the fleet, and some of their chiefs failed away towards the islands of Crete and Cyprus; but the main body purfuing a more fleady courfe, anchored at length near the foot of mount Athos, and affaulted the city of Theffalonica.

<sup>10</sup> Zonaras on this occasion mentions Posthumus; but the registers of the fenate (Hist. fmaller, Zonaras the larger, number; the ready emperor of the western provinces.

&quot; The Augustan History mentions the August. p. 203.) prove that Tetricus was al- lively fancy of Montesquieu induced him to prefer the latter.

CHAP. the wealthy capital of all the Macedonian provinces. Their attacks, in which they displayed a fierce but artless bravery, were soon interrupted by the rapid approach of Claudius, hastening to a scene of action that deserved the presence of a warlike prince at the head of the remaining powers of the empire. Impatient for battle, the Goths immediately broke up their camp, relinquished the siege of Thessalonica, left their navy at the foot of mount Athos, traversed the hills of Macedonia, and pressed forwards to engage the last defence of Italy.

Diffrefs and firmness of Claudius.

We still possess an original letter addressed by Claudius to the fenate and people on this memorable occasion. "Conscript fathers," fays the emperor, "know that three hundred and twenty thousand "Goths have invaded the Roman territory. If I vanquish them, " your gratitude will reward my fervices. Should I fall, remember " that I am the fucceffor of Gallienus. The whole republic is fa-" tigued and exhausted. We shall fight after Valerian, after Ingenuus, " Regillianus, Lollianus, Posthumus, Celfus, and a thousand others, " whom a just contempt for Gallienus provoked into rebellion. We " are in want of darts, of spears, and of shields. The strength of the " empire, Gaul, and Spain, are usurped by Tetricus, and we blush " to acknowledge that the archers of the East serve under the ban-" ners of Zenobia. Whatever we shall perform, will be sufficiently " great "?" The melancholy firmness of this epistle announces a hero careless of his fate, conscious of his danger, but still deriving a well-grounded hope from the resources of his own mind.

His victory over the Goths.

The event furpaffed his own expectations and those of the world. By the most figual victories he delivered the empire from this host of barbarians, and was diffinguished by posterity under the glorious appellation of the Gothic Claudius. The imperfect historians of an irregular war " do not enable us to describe the order and circum-

flances

<sup>12</sup> Trebell. Pollio in Hift. August. p. 204. 1. xii. p. 638. Aurel. Victor in Epitom. 13 Hift. August. in Claud. Aarelian, et Victor Junior in Casfar. Eutrop. ix. 11. Eu-Prob. Zofimus, I. i. p. 38-42. Zonaras, feb. in Chron.

flances of his exploits; but, if we could be indulged in the allu- CHAP. fion, we might distribute into three acts this memorable tragedy. I. The decifive battle was fought near Naissus, a city of Dardania. The legions at first gave way, oppressed by numbers, and dismayed by misfortunes. Their ruin was inevitable, had not the abilities of their emperor prepared a feafonable relief. A large detachment rifing out of the fecret and difficult passes of the mountains, which, by his order, they had occupied, fuddenly affailed the rear of the victorious Goths. The favourable inflant was improved by the activity of Claudius. He revived the courage of his troops, restored their ranks, and preffed the barbarians on every fide. Fifty thousand men are reported to have been flain in the battle of Naiffus. Several large bodies of barbarians, covering their retreat with a moveable fortification of waggons, retired, or rather escaped, from the field of flaughter. II. We may prefume that fome infurmountable difficulty, the fatigue, perhaps, or the disobedience, of the conquerors. prevented Claudius from completing in one day the destruction of the Goths. The war was diffused over the provinces of Mæsia. Thrace, and Macedonia, and its operations drawn out into a variety of marches, furprifes, and tumultuary engagements, as well by fea as by land. When the Romans fuffered any lofs, it was commonly occasioned by their own cowardice or rashness; but the superior talents of the emperor, his perfect knowledge of the country, and his judicious choice of measures as well as officers, assured on most occafions the fuccess of his arms. The immense booty, the fruit of so many victories, confifted for the greater part of cattle and flaves. A felect body of the Gothic youth was received among the Imperial troops: the remainder was fold into fervitude; and fo confiderable was the number of female captives, that every foldier obtained to his share two or three women. A circumstance from which we may conclude, that the invaders entertained fome defigns of fettlement as well as of plunder; fince even in a naval expedition they were accompanied CHAP. companied by their families. III. The lofs of their fleet, which was either taken or funk, had intercepted the retreat of the Goths. A vaft circle of Roman posts distributed with skill, supported with firmness, and gradually clofing towards a common centre, forced the barbarians into the most inaccessible parts of mount Hæmus, where they found a fafe refuge, but a very fcanty subfishence. During the course of a rigorous winter, in which they were befieged by the emperor's troops, famine and pestilence, desertion and the sword, continually diminished the imprisoned multitude. On the return of spring, nothing appeared in arms except a hardy and desperate band, the remnant of that mighty hoft which had embarked at the mouth of the Niefter.

A. D. 270.

Death of the emperor, who recommends Aurelian for his fuccessor.

The pestilence which swept away such numbers of the barbarians, at length proved fatal to their conqueror. After a short but glorious reign of two years, Claudius expired at Sirmium, amidst the tears and acclamations of his fubjects. In his last illness, he convened the principal officers of the flate and army, and in their prefence recommended Aurelian, one of his generals, as the most deferving of the throne, and the best qualified to execute the great defign which he himfelf had been permitted only to undertake. The virtues of Claudius, his valour, affability 14, justice, and temperance, his love of fame and of his country, place him in that fhort lift of emperors who added luftre to the Roman purple. Those virtues, however, were celebrated with peculiar zeal and complacency by the courtly writers of the age of Constantine, who was the great grandson of Crispus, the elder brother of Claudius. The voice of flattery was foon taught to repeat, that the gods, who fo hastily had fnatched Claudius from the earth, rewarded his merit and piety by the perpetual establishment of the empire in his family ".

<sup>14</sup> According to Zonaras (1, xii, p. 638.). the orations of Mamertinus, Eumenius, and Claudius, before his death, invested him with Julian. See likewife the Casars of Julian, the purple; but this fingular fact is rather p. 313. In Julian it was not adulation, but fuperitation and vanity.

Notwith-

contradicted than confirmed by other writers.

<sup>15</sup> See the life of Claudius by Pollio, and

Notwithstanding these oracles, the greatness of the Flavian family C H A P. (a name which it had pleafed them to affume) was deferred above twenty years, and the elevation of Claudius occasioned the immediate and fall of ruin of his brother Quintilius, who possessed not sufficient moderation or courage to descend into the private station to which the patriotism of the late emperor had condemned him. Without delay or reflection, he affumed the purple at Aquileia, where he commanded a confiderable force; and though his reign lasted only seventeen days, he had time to obtain the fanction of the fenate, and to experience a mutiny of the troops. As foon as he was informed that the great army of the Danube had invested the well-known valour of Aurelian with Imperial power, he funk under the fame and merit of his rival; and ordering his veins to be opened, prudently with- April. drew himself from the unequal contest 16.

The general defign of this work will not permit us minutely to Origin and relate the actions of every emperor after he afcended the throne, Aurelian. much lefs to deduce the various fortunes of his private life. We shall only observe, that the father of Aurelian was a peasant of the territory of Sirmium, who occupied a fmall farm, the property of Aurelius, a rich fenator. His warlike fon inlifted in the troops as a common foldier, fuccessively rose to the rank of a centurion, a tribune, the præfect of a legion, the inspector of the camp, the general, or, as it was then called, the duke, of a frontier; and at length, during the Gothic war, exercised the important office of commander in chief of the cavalry. In every station he distinguished himself by matchless valour '7, rigid discipline, and successful conduct. He gust. p. 207.) allows him virtues, and fays, matians, and in several subsequent engagethat like Pertinax he was killed by the licen- ments nine hundred and fifty. This heroic tious foldiers. According to Dexippus he valour was admired by the foldiers, and celedied of a difeafe.

17 Theoclius (as quoted in the Augustan which was mille, mille, mille occidit. History, p. 211.) affirms, that in one day he

16 Zofimus, l. i. p. 42. Pollio (Hift. Au- killed, with his own hand, forty-eight Sarbrated in their rude fongs, the burden of

C H A P. was invested with the confulfhip by the emperor Valerian, who styles him, in the pompous language of that age, the deliverer of Illyricum, the restorer of Gaul, and the rival of the Scipios. At the recommendation of Valerian, a fenator of the highest rank and merit, Ulpius Crinitus, whose blood was derived from the same source as that of Trajan, adopted the Pannonian peafant, gave him his daughter in marriage, and relieved with his ample fortune the honourable poverty which Aurelian had preferved inviolate 18.

Aurelian's fuccefsful reign.

The reign of Aurelian lasted only four years and about nine months; but every instant of that short period was filled by some memorable atchievement. He put an end to the Gothic war, chaftifed the Germans who invaded Italy, recovered Gaul, Spain, and Britain out of the hands of Tetricus, and destroyed the proud monarchy which Zenobia had erected in the East, on the ruins of the afflicted empire.

His fevere discipline.

It was the rigid attention of Aurelian, even to the minutest articles of discipline, which bestowed such uninterrupted success on his arms. His military regulations are contained in a very concife epistle to one of his inferior officers, who is commanded to enforce them, as he wishes to become a tribune, or as he is desirous to live. Gaming, drinking, and the arts of divination, were feverely pro-Aurelian expected that his foldiers should be modest, frugal, and laborious; that their armour should be constantly kept bright, their weapons sharp, their cloathing and horses ready for immediate fervice; that they should live in their quarters with chaftity and fobriety, without damaging the corn fields, without flealing even a sheep, a fowl, or a bunch of grapes, without exacting from their landlords either falt, or oil, or wood. "The public allow-" ance," continues the emperor, " is fufficient for their support;

<sup>*8</sup> Acholius (ap. Hift. August. p. 213.) de- was performed at Byzantium, in the presence scribes the ceremony of the adoption, as it of the emperor and his great officers.

" their wealth should be collected from the spoil of the enemy, not CHAP. " from the tears of the provincials "." A fingle instance will serve to display the rigour, and even cruelty, of Aurelian. One of the foldiers had feduced the wife of his hoft. The guilty wretch was fastened to two trees forcibly drawn towards each other, and his limbs were torn afunder by their fudden separation. A few such examples impressed a falutary consternation. The punishments of Aurelian were terrible; but he had feldom occasion to punish more than once the fame offence. His own conduct gave a fanction to his laws, and the feditious legions dreaded a chief who had learned to obey, and who was worthy to command.

The death of Claudius had revived the fainting spirit of the Goths. He concludes a treaty with The troops which guarded the passes of Mount Hæmus, and the banks the Goths, of the Danube, had been drawn away by the apprehension of a civil war; and it feems probable that the remaining body of the Gothic and Vandalic tribes embraced the favourable opportunity, abandoned their fettlements of the Ukraine, traversed the rivers, and fwelled with new multitudes the destroying host of their countrymen. Their united numbers were at length encountered by Aurelian, and the bloody and doubtful conflict ended only with the approach of night 20. Exhausted by so many calamities, which they had mutually endured and inflicted during a twenty years war, the Goths and the Romans confented to a lasting and beneficial treaty. It was earnefly folicited by the barbarians, and cheerfully ratified by the legions, to whose suffrage the prudence of Aurelian referred the decision of that important question. The Gothic nation engaged to fupply the armies of Rome with a body of two thouland auxiliaries, confisting entirely of cavalry, and stipulated in return an undisturbed 19 Hift. August. p. 211. This laconic plained by Salmasius. The former of the ** Fifth. August. p. 211. Into accome planted by Samanus. The Joine of the epifle is truly the work of a foldier; it abounds with military phrases and words, contrasted with Arma, defensive armour. The fome of which cannot be understood without difficulty. Ferramenta famiata is well expressions.

Zz2

retreat,

C H A P. retreat, with a regular market as far as the Danube, provided by the emperor's care, but at their own expence. The treaty was observed with fuch religious fidelity, that when a party of five hundred men straggled from the camp in quest of plunder, the king or general of the barbarians commanded that the guilty leader should be apprehended and shot to death with darts, as a victim devoted to the fanctity of their engagements. It is, however, not unlikely, that the precaution of Aurelian, who had exacted as hostages the sons and daughters of the Gothic chiefs, contributed fomething to this pacific temper. The youths he trained in the exercise of arms, and near his own person; to the damsels he gave a liberal and Roman education, and by bestowing them in marriage on some of his principal officers, gradually introduced between the two nations the closest and most endearing connexions ".

and refigns to them the province of Dacia.

But the most important condition of peace was understood rather than expressed in the treaty. Aurelian withdrew the Roman forces from Dacia, and tacitly relinquished that great province to the Goths and Vandals 22. His manly judgement convinced him of the folid advantages, and taught him to despise the seeming disgrace, of thus contracting the frontiers of the monarchy. The Dacian fubjects, removed from those distant possessions which they were unable to cultivate or defend, added firength and populoufness to the fouthern fide of the Danube. A fertile territory, which the repetition of barbarous inroads had changed into a defert, was yielded to their industry, and a new province of Dacia still preserved the memory of Trajan's conquests. The old country of that name detained, however, a confiderable number of its inhabitants, who dreaded exile more than a Gothic mafter ". These degenerate Ro- CHAP. mans continued to ferve the empire, whose allegiance they had renounced by introducing among their conquerors the first notions of agriculture, the useful arts, and the conveniences of civilised life. An intercourse of commerce and language was gradually established between the opposite banks of the Danube; and after Dacia became an independent state, it often proved the firmest barrier of the empire against the invasions of the savages of the North. A sense of interest attached these more settled barbarians to the alliance of Rome, and a permanent interest very frequently ripens into fincere and useful friendship. This various colony which filled the ancient province, and was infenfibly blended into one great people, ftill acknowledged the fuperior renown and authority of the Gothic tribe, and claimed the fancied honour of a Scandinavian origin. At the fame time the lucky though accidental refemblance of the name of Getæ, infufed among the credulous Goths, a vain perfuasion, that in a remote age, their own ancestors, already seated in the Dacian provinces, had received the instruction of Zamolxis, and checked the victorious arms of Sefoftris and Darius 24.

<sup>21</sup> Dexippus (ap. Excerpta Legat. p. 12.) cover their secrets. Hist. August. p. 247. relates the whole transaction under the name of Vandals. Aurelian married one of the Gothic ladies to his general Bonofus, who was able to drink with the Goths and dif-

<sup>22</sup> Hift. August. p. 222. Eutrop. ix. 15. Sextus Rufus, c. q. Laclantius de mortibus Persecutorum, c. 9.

While the vigorous and moderate conduct of Aurelian restored The Alethe Illyrian frontier, the nation of the Alemanni 15 violated the conditions of peace, which either Gallienus had purchased, or Claudius had imposed, and inflamed by their impatient youth, fuddenly flew to arms. Forty thousand horse appeared in the mannic war.

<sup>23</sup> The Walachians still preserve many traces of the Latin language, and have boafted in every age of their Roman descent. They are furrounded by, but not mixed with, the barbarians. See a Memoire of M. Danville on ancient Dacia, in the Academy of Inscriptions, tom. xxx.

<sup>24</sup> See the first chapter of Jornandes. The Vandals however (c. 22.) maintained a short independence between the rivers Marifia and

Criffia (Maros and Keres) which fell into the <sup>25</sup> Dexippus, p. 7-12. Zosimus, 1. i. p. 43. Vopifcus in Aurelian in Hift, August. However these historians differ in names (Alemanni, Juthungi, and Marcomanni) it is evident that they mean the fame people, and the fame war, but it requires fome care to conciliate and explain them.

CHAP. field 26, and the numbers of the infantry doubled those of the ca-- valry 27. The first objects of their avarice were a few cities of the Rhætian frontier; but their hopes foon rifing with fuccefs, the rapid march of the Alemanni traced a line of devastation from the Danube to the Po 28.

A. D. 270. September.

The emperor was almost at the same time informed of the irruption, and of the retreat, of the barbarians. Collecting an active body of troops, he marched with filence and celerity along the skirts of the Hercynian forest; and the Alemanni, laden with the fpoils of Italy, arrived at the Danube, without suspecting, that on the opposite bank, and in an advantageous post, a Roman army lay concealed and prepared to intercept their return. Aurelian indulged the fatal fecurity of the barbarians, and permitted about half their forces to pass the river without disturbance and without precaution. Their fituation and aftonishment gave him an easy victory; his skilful conduct improved the advantage. Disposing the legions in a femicircular form, he advanced the two horns of the crefcent across the Danube, and wheeling them on a fudden towards the centre, inclosed the rear of the German hoft. The difmayed barbarians, on whatfoever fide they cast their eyes, beheld with despair, a wasted country, a deep and rapid stream, a victorious and implacable enemy.

Reduced to this diffressed condition, the Alemanni no longer diffained to fue for peace. Aurelian received their ambaffadors at the head of his camp, and with every circumstance of martial pomp that could display the greatness and discipline of Rome. legions flood to their arms in well-ordered ranks and awful filence. The principal commanders, distinguished by the ensigns of their chuses to translate three hundred thousand: his version is equally repugnant to fense and to grammar.

2 Cantoclarus, with his usual accuracy, fantry of the Alemanni the technical terms proper only to the Grecian Phalanx.

<sup>47</sup> We may remark, as an instance of bad tafle, that Dexippus applies to the light in-rank, appeared on horseback on either side of the Imperial throne. C II A P. Behind the throne, the confecrated images of the emperor, and his predecessors 29, the golden eagles, and the various titles of the legions, engraved in letters of gold, were exalted in the air on lofty pikes covered with filver. When Aurelian affumed his feat, his manly grace and majestic figure 3° taught the barbarians to revere the person as well as the purple of their conqueror. The ambassadors fell prostrate on the ground in silence. They were commanded to rife, and permitted to speak. By the affishance of interpreters they extenuated their perfidy, magnified their exploits, expatiated on the viciflitudes of fortune and the advantages of peace, and, with an ill-timed confidence, demanded a large fubfidy, as the price of the alliance which they offered to the Romans. The answer of the emperor was stern and imperious. He treated their offer with contempt, and their demand with indignation, reproached the barbarians, that they were as ignorant of the arts of war as of the laws of peace, and finally difmiffed them with the choice only of fubmitting to his unconditioned mercy, or awaiting the utmost severity of his resentment 31. Aurelian had resigned a diffant province to the Goths; but it was dangerous to trust or to pardon these perfidious barbarians, whose formidable power kept Italy itself in perpetual alarms.

<sup>28</sup> In Dexippus, we at present read Rhodanus, M. de Valois very judiciously alters the words to Eridanus.

Immediately after this conference, it should feem that some un- The Aleexpected emergency required the emperor's presence in Pannonia. manninvade He devolved on his lieutenants the care of finishing the destruction of the Alemanni, either by the fword, or by the furer operation of famine. But an active despair has often triumphed over the indolent affurance of fuccefs. The barbarians, finding it impossible to

<sup>27</sup> The emperor Claudius was certainly of fpectacle; along line of the masters of the world. the number; but we are ignorant how far this mark of respect was extended; if to Casfar and

<sup>30</sup> Vopifcus in Hift. August. p. 210.

<sup>31</sup> Dexippus gives them a fubtle and prolix Augustus, it must have produced a very awful oration, worthy of a Grecian Sophist.

CHAP. traverse the Danube and the Roman camp, broke through the posts in their rear, which were more feebly or less carefully guarded; and with incredible diligence, but by a different road, returned towards the mountains of Italy 32. Aurelian, who confidered the war as totally extinguished, received the mortifying intelligence of the escape of the Alemanni, and of the ravage which they already committed in the territory of Milan. The legions were commanded to follow, with as much expedition as those heavy bodies were capable of exerting, the rapid flight of an enemy, whose infantry and cavalry moved with almost equal swiftness. A few days afterwards the emperor himself marched to the relief of Italy, at the head of a chosen body of auxiliaries (among whom were the hostages and cavalry of the Vandals), and of all the Prætorian guards who had ferved in the wars on the Danube ".

and are at laft vanquished by Aurelian.

As the light troops of the Alemanni had fpread themselves from the Alps to the Apennine, the inceffant vigilance of Aurelian and his officers was exercifed in the discovery, the attack, and the pursuit Notwithstanding this defultory of the numerous detachments. war, three confiderable battles are mentioned, in which the principal force of both armies was obstinately engaged 34. The success was various. In the first, fought near Placentia, the Romans received fo fevere a blow, that, according to the expression of a writer extremely partial to Aurelian, the immediate diffolution of the empire was apprehended 35. The crafty barbarians, who had lined the woods, fuddenly attacked the legions in the dusk of the evening, and, as it is most probable, after the fatigue and disorder of a long march. The fury of their charge was irrefiftible; but at length, after a dreadful flaughter, the patient firmness of the emperor rallied his troops, and reftored, in some degree, the honour of his arms:

<sup>32</sup> Hift. August. p. 215. 33 Dexippus, p. 12.

<sup>34</sup> Victor Junior, in Aurelian. 35 Vopifcus in Hift. August. p. 216.

The fecond battle was fought near Fano in Umbria; on the spot CHAP. which, five hundred years before, had been fatal to the brother of Hannibal 16. Thus far the fuccessful Germans had advanced along the Æmilian and Flaminian way, with a defign of facking the defenceless mistress of the world. But Aurelian, who, watchful for the fafety of Rome, still hung on their rear, found in this place the decifive moment, of giving them a total and irretrievable defeat 17. The flying remnant of their hoft was exterminated in a third and last battle near Pavia; and Italy was delivered from the inroads of the Alemanni.

Fear has been the original parent of superstition, and every new Superstitious calamity urges trembling mortals to deprecate the wrath of their invifible enemies. Though the best hope of the republic was in the valour and conduct of Aurelian, yet fuch was the public consternation, when the barbarians were hourly expected at the gates of Rome, that, by a decree of the fenate, the Sibylline books were confulted. Even the emperor himself, from a motive either of religion or of policy, recommended this falutary measure, chided the tardiness of the fenate 18, and offered to fupply whatever expence, whatever animals, whatfoever captives of any nation, the gods should require. Notwithstanding this liberal offer, it does not appear, that any human victims expiated with their blood the fins of the Roman people. The Sibylline books enjoined ceremonies of a more harm- A. D. 271. less nature, processions of priests in white robes, attended by a chorus of youths and virgins; lustrations of the city and adjacent country; and facrifices, whose powerful influence disabled the barbarians from passing the mystic ground on which they had been celebrated. However puerile in themselves, these superstitious arts

January 11.

<sup>36</sup> The little river or rather torrent of Metaurus near Fano, has been immortalized, by finding such an historian as Livy, and such a poet as Horace.

<sup>37</sup> It is recorded by an infcription found at Pezaro. See Gruter. cclxxvi. 3.

<sup>38</sup> One should imagine, he faid, that you were affembled in a Christian church, not in the temple of all the gods.

C H A P. were subservient to the success of the war; and if, in the decisive battle of Fano, the Alemanni fancied they faw an army of spectres combating on the fide of Aurelian, he received a real and effectual aid from this imaginary reinforcement 39.

Fortifications of Rome.

But whatever confidence might be placed in ideal ramparts, the experience of the past, and the dread of the future, induced the Romans to construct fortifications of a groffer and more substantial kind. The feven hills of Rome had been furrounded by the fucceffors of Romulus, with an ancient wall of more than thirteen miles 4°. The vast inclosure may feem disproportioned to the ftrength and numbers of the infant state. But it was necessary to fecure an ample extent of pasture and arable land, against the frequent and fudden incursions of the tribes of Latium, the perpetual enemies of the republic. With the progress of Roman greatness, the city and its inhabitants gradually increased, filled up the vacant space, pierced through the useless walls, covered the field of Mars, and, on every fide, followed the public highways in long and beautiful fuburbs 41. The extent of the new walls, erected by Aurelian, and finished in the reign of Probus, was magnified by popular estimation to near fifty 42, but is reduced by accurate measurement to about twenty-one, miles 43. It was a great but a melancholy labour, fince the defence of the capital betrayed the decline of the monarchy. The Romans of a more prosperous age, who trusted to 39 Vopifcus in Hift. Aug. p. 215, 216. gives a long account of these ceremonies, from the Registers of the senate.

40 Plin. Hift. Natur. iii. 5. To confirm our idea, we may observe, that for a long time Mount Caliuswas a grove of oaks, and Mount Viminal was over-run with ofiers; that, in the fourth century, the Aventine was a vacant and folitary retirement, that till the time of Augustus, the Esquiline was an unwholesome burying-ground; and that the numerous inequalities, remarked by the ancients in the Quirinal, fufficiently prove that it was not covered with buildings. Of the feven hills, the Capitoline and Palatine only, with the adjacent vallies, were the primitive habitation of the Roman people. But this fubject would require a differtation.

41. Exfratiantia tecta multas addidere urbes, is the expression of Pliny.

42 Hift. August. p. 222. Both Lipfius and Ifaac Vossius have eagerly embraced this mea-

43 See Nardini, Roma Antica, l. i. c. 8.

the arms of the legions the fafety of the frontier camps 44, were very C H A P. far from entertaining a fuspicion, that it would ever become necessary to fortify the feat of empire against the inroads of the barbarians 45.

The victory of Claudius over the Goths, and the fuccess of Aurelian Aurelian against the Alemanni, had already restored to the arms of the two Rome their ancient superiority over the barbarous nations of the North. To chastise domestic tyrants, and to reunite the dismembered parts of the empire, was a task reserved for the second of those warlike emperors. Though he was acknowledged by the fenate and people, the frontiers of Italy, Africa, Illyricum, and Thrace, confined the limits of his reign. Gaul, Spain, and Britain, Egypt, Syria, and Afia Minor, were still possessed by two rebels, who alone, out of so numerous a lift, had hitherto escaped the dangers of their fituation; and to complete the ignominy of Rome, these rival thrones had been usurped by women.

usurpers.

A rapid fuccession of monarchs had arisen and fallen in the pro- Succession of vinces of Gaul. The rigid virtues of Posthumus served only to hasten his destruction. After suppressing a competitor, who had assumed the purple at Mentz, he refused to gratify his troops with the plunder of the rebellious city; and in the feventh year of his reign, became the victim of their disappointed avarice 46. The death of Victorinus, his friend and affociate, was occasioned by a less worthy cause. The shining accomplishments 47 of that prince were stained by a licentious passion, which he indulged in acts of violence, 44 Tacit. Hift. iv. 23.

45 For Aurelian's walls, fee Vopifcus in Hist. August. p. 216. 222. Zosimus, l. i. p. 43. Eutropius, ix 15. Aurel, Victor in Aurelian, Victor Junior in Aurelian, Euseb. Hieronym. et Idatius in Chronic.

46 His competitor was Lollianus, or Ælianus, if indeed these names mean the same person. See Tillemont, tom. iii. p. 1177.

transcribing, as it seems fair and impartial. Victorino qui post Junium Posthumium Gallias rexit neminem existimo præferendum; non in virtute Trajanum; non Antoninum in clementia; non in gravitate Nervam; non in gubernando arario Vespasianum; non in Cenfura totius vitæ ac feveritate militari Pertinacem vel Severum. Sed omnia hac libido et cupiditas voluptatis mulierariæ sic perdidit, ut 47 The character of this prince by Julius nemo audeat virtutes ejus in literas mittere Aterianus (ap. Hift. August. p. 187.) is worth quem constat omnium judicio meruisse puniri, with CHAP. with too little regard to the laws of fociety, or even to those of love 48. He was flain at Cologne, by a conspiracy of jealous husbands, whose revenge would have appeared more justifiable, had they spared the innocence of his son. After the murder of so many valiant princes, it is fomewhat remarkable, that a female for a long time controlled the fierce legions of Gaul, and fill more fingular, that she was the mother of the unfortunate Victorinus. arts and treasures of Victoria enabled her successively to place Marius and Tetricus on the throne, and to reign with a manly vigour under the name of those dependent emperors. Money of copper, of filver, and of gold, was coined in her name; she affumed the titles of Augusta and Mother of the Camps: her power ended only with her life; but her life was perhaps shortened by the ingratitude of Tetricus 49.

The reign and defeat of Tetricus.

When, at the infligation of his ambitious patroness, Tetricus affumed the enfigns of royalty, he was governor of the peaceful province of Aquitaine, an employment fuited to his character and education. He reigned four or five years over Gaul, Spain, and Britain, the flave and fovereign of a licentious army, whom he dreaded, and by whom he was despised. The valour and fortune of Aurelian at length opened the prospect of a deliverance. He ventured to disclose his melancholy situation, and conjured the emperor to hasten to the relief of his unhappy rival. Had this secret correspondence reached the ears of the foldiers, it would most probably have cost Tetricus his life; nor could he refign the sceptre of the West, without committing an act of treason against himself. He affected the appearances of a civil war, led his forces into the field against Aurelian, posted them in the most disadvantageous manner, betrayed his own counsels to the enemy, and with a few chosen friends deserted in the beginning of the action. The rebel CHAP. legions, though difordered and difmayed by the unexpected treachery of their chief, defended themselves with a desperate valour, till they were cut in pieces almost to a man, in this bloody and memorable battle, which was fought near Chalons in Champagne 50. The retreat of the irregular auxiliaries, Franks and Batavians 51, whom the conqueror foon compelled or perfuaded to repass the Rhine, restored the general tranquillity, and the power of Aurelian was acknowledged from the wall of Antoninus to the columns of Hercules.

A. D. 271. Summer.

<sup>47</sup> He ravished the wife of Attitianus, an 4) Pollio assigns her an article among the actuary, or army agent. Hift. August. p. 186. thirty tyrants. Hist. Aug. p. 200. Aurel. Victor in Aurelian.

As early as the reign of Claudius, the city of Autun, alone and unaffifted, had ventured to declare against the legions of Gaul. After a fiege of feven months, they flormed and plundered that unfortunate city, already wasted by famine 52. Lyons, on the contrary, had refifted with obstinate disaffection the arms of Aurelian. We read of the punishment of Lyons 53, but there is not any mention of the rewards of Autun. Such, indeed, is the policy of civil war; feverely to remember injuries, and to forget the most important fervices. Revenge is profitable, gratitude is expensive.

Aurelian had no fooner fecured the person and provinces of Tetricus, than he turned his arms against Zenobia, the celebrated queen Character Zenobia; of Palmyra and the East. Modern Europe has produced several illustrious women who have fustained with glory the weight of empire; nor is our own age destitute of such distinguished characters.

Character of

<sup>50</sup> Pollio in Hift. August. p. 196. Vopif- fairer than the one, and bolder than the cus in Hist. August. p. 220. The two Vic- other. tors, in the lives of Gallienus and Aurelian, Eutropius, ix. 13. Eufeb. in Chron. Of all these_writers, only the two last (but with ftrong probability) place the fall of Tetricus before that of Zenobia. M. de Boze (in the Academy of Infcriptions, tom. xxx.) does not wish, and Tillemont (tom. iii. p. 1189.) does not dare, to follow them. I have been her beauty and learning;

<sup>51</sup> Victor Junior in Aurelian. Eumenius mentions Batavica; fome critics, without any reason, would fain alter the word to Bagaudicæ.

<sup>52</sup> Eumen. in Vel. Panegyr. iv. 9.

<sup>53</sup> Vopifcus in Hist. August. p. 246. Autun was not restored till the reign of Diocletian. See Eumenius de restaurandis scholis.

C H A P. But if we except the doubtful atchievements of Semiramis, Zenobia is perhaps the only female, whose superior genius broke through the fervile indolence imposed on her fex by the climate and manners of Afia 54. She claimed her descent from the Macedonian kings of Egypt, equalled in beauty her ancestor Cleopatra, and far surpassed that princess in chastity " and valour. Zenobia was esteemed the most lovely as well as the most heroic of her fex. She was of a dark complexion (for in speaking of a lady, these trifles become important). Her teeth were of a pearly whiteness, and her large black eyes sparkled with uncommon fire, tempered by the most attractive fweetness. Her voice was strong and harmonious. Her manly understanding was strengthened and adorned by study. She was not ignorant of the Latin tongue, but possessed in equal perfection the Greek, the Syriac, and the Egyptian languages. She had drawn up for her own use an epitome of oriental history, and familiarly compared the beauties of Homer and Plato under the tuition of the fublime Longinus.

her valour.

This accomplished woman gave her hand to Odenathus, who from a private flation raifed himself to the dominion of the East. She foon became the friend and companion of a hero. In the intervals of war. Odenathus passionately delighted in the exercise of hunting; he purfued with ardour the wild beafts of the defert, lions, panthers, and bears; and the ardour of Zenobia in that dangerous amusement was not inferior to his own. She had inured her conflitution to fatigue, difdained the use of a covered carriage, generally appeared on horseback in a military habit, and sometimes marched feveral miles on foot at the head of the troops. The fuccefs of Odenathus was in a great measure ascribed to her incomparable prudence and fortitude. Their splendid victories over the CHAP. Great King, whom they twice purfued as far as the gates of Ctefiphon, laid the foundations of their united fame and power. The armies which they commanded, and the provinces which they had faved, acknowledged not any other fovereigns than their invincible chiefs. The fenate and people of Rome revered a stranger who had avenged their captive emperor, and even the infensible fon of Valerian accepted Odenathus for his legitimate colleague.

<sup>54</sup> Almost every thing that is faid of the manners of Odenathus and Zenobia is taken from their lives in the Augustan History, by hopes were baffled, in the ensuing month she Trebellius Pollio, fee p. 192. 198.

<sup>55</sup> She never admitted her hufband's embraces but for the fake of posterity. If her reiterated the experiment.

After a fuccessful expedition against the Gothic plunderers of Asia, She revenges the Palmyrenian prince returned to the city of Emela in Syria. In- death, vincible in war, he was there cut off by domestic treason, and his favourite amusement of hunting was the cause, or at least the occafion, of his death 16. His nephew, Mæonius, prefumed to dart his javelin before that of his uncle; and though admonished of his error, repeated the fame infolence. As a monarch and as a sportsman, Odenathus was provoked, took away his horfe, a mark of ignominy among the barbarians, and chaftifed the rash youth by a short confinement. The offence was foon forgot, but the punishment was remembered; and Mæonius, with a few daring affociates, affaffinated his uncle in the midft of a great entertainment. Herod, the fon of A. D. 267. Odenathus, though not of Zenobia, a young man of a foft and effeminate temper 57, was killed with his father. But Mæonius obtained only the pleasure of revenge by this bloody deed. He had fearcely time to assume the title of Augustus, before he was facrificed by Zenobia to the memory of her husband 58.

With the assistance of his most faithful friends, she immediately and reigns filled the vacant throne, and governed with manly counfels Palmyra, and Egypt.

<sup>1.</sup> i. p. 36. Zonaras, 1. xii. p. 633. The last is clear and probable, the others confused and inconfistent. The text of Syncellus, if not corrupt, is absolute nonsense.

<sup>57</sup> Odenathus and Zenobia, often fent him hufband's death.

<sup>55</sup> Hift. August. p. 192, 193. Zosimus, from the spoils of the enemy, presents of gems and toys, which he received with infinite delight.

<sup>58</sup> Some very unjust fuspicions have been cast on Zenobia, as if the was accessary to her CHAP. Syria, and the East, above five years. By the death of Odenathus, that authority was at an end which the fenate had granted him only as a personal distinction; but his martial widow, disdaining both the fenate and Gallienus, obliged one of the Roman generals, who was fent against her, to retreat into Europe, with the loss of his army and his reputation 59. Instead of the little passions which so frequently perplex a female reign, the fleady administration of Zenobia was guided by the most judicious maxims of policy. If it was expedient to pardon, the could calm her refentment: if it was necessary to punish, the could impose filence on the voice of pity. Her strict occonomy was accused of avarice; yet on every proper occasion she appeared magnificent and liberal. The neighbouring states of Arabia, Armenia, and Perfia, dreaded her enmity, and folicited her alliance. To the dominions of Odenathus, which extended from the Euphrates to the frontiers of Bithynia, his widow added the inheritance of her ancestors, the populous and fertile kingdom of Egypt. The emperor Claudius acknowledged her merit, and was content, that, while he purfued the Gothic war, The should affert the dignity of the empire in the East 60. The conduct, however, of Zenobia, was attended with fome ambiguity; nor is it unlikely that she had conceived the defign of erecting an independent and hostile monarchy. She blended with the popular manners of Roman princes the stately pomp of the courts of Asia, and exacted from her subjects the same adoration that was paid to the fuccessors of Cyrus. She bestowed on her three fons 61 a Latin education, and often shewed them to the troops adorned with the Imperial purple. For herfelf she reserved the diadem, with the splendid but doubtful title of Queen of the East.

<sup>50</sup> Hift. August. p. 180, 181.

testimony to her merit, and for the conquest of Egypt. Zofimus, 1. i. p. 39, 40.

It is supposed that the two former were al-61 See in Hift. August. p. 198. Aurelian's ready dead before the war. On the last, Aurelian bestowed a small province of Armenia with the title of king; feveral of his medals 61 Timolaus, Herennianus, and Vaballathus. are slill extant. See Tillem. tom. iii. p. 1190.

The expedi-

When Aurelian passed over into Asia, against an adversary whose CHAP. fex alone could render her an object of contempt, his prefence reftored obedience to the province of Bithynia, already shaken by the arms and tion of Au intrigues of Zenobia 62. Advancing at the head of his legions, he ac- relian.
A. D. 272. cepted the fubmission of Ancyra, and was admitted into Tyana after an obstinate siege, by the help of a perfidious citizen. The generous though fierce temper of Aurelian abandoned the traitor to the rage of the foldiers: a superstitious reverence induced him to treat with lenity the countrymen of Apollonius the philosopher 63. Antioch was deferted on his approach, till the emperor, by his falutary edicts, recalled the fugitives, and granted a general pardon to all who, from necessity rather than choice, had been engaged in the fervice of the Palmyrenian queen. The unexpected mildness of such a conduct reconciled the minds of the Syrians, and, as far as the gates of Emesa, the wishes of the people seconded the terror of his Zenobia would have ill deferved her reputation, had fhe indo- The emperor lently permitted the emperor of the West to approach within an hundred miles of her capital. The fate of the East was decided in ans in the two great battles; fo fimilar in almost every circumstance, that we Antioch and can scarcely distinguish them from each other, except by observing that the first was fought near Antioch 65, and the second near Emefa 66. In both, the queen of Palmyra animated the armies by her presence, and devolved the execution of her orders on Zabdas, who had already fignalized his military talents by the conquest of Egypt. The numerous forces of Zenobia, confifted for the most defeats the battles of Emesa.

arms 64.

<sup>62</sup> Zofimus, 1. i. p. 44.

<sup>63</sup> Vopiscus (in Hist. August. p. 217.) gives us an authentic letter, and a doubtful vision of Aurelian. Apollonius of Ty-ana was born about the same time as Jefus Christ. His life (that of the former) is related in fo fabulous a manner by his disciples, that we are at a loss to discover tions only the second.

whether he was a fage, an impostor, or a fanatic.

<sup>6,</sup> Zohmus, 1. i. p. 46.

<sup>65</sup> At a place called Immæ. Eutropius, Sextus Rufus, and Jerome, mention only this first battle.

<sup>66</sup> Vopifcus in Hift. August. p. 217, men-

CHAP. part of light archers, and of heavy cavalry clothed in complete steel. The Moorith and Illyrian horse of Aurelian were unable to fustain the ponderous charge of their antagonists. They fled in real or affected diforder, engaged the Palmyrenians in a laborious purfuit, haraffed them by a defultory combat, and at length difcomfited this impenetrable but unwieldy body of cavalry. The light infantry, in the mean time, when they had exhausted their quivers, remaining without protection against a closer onset, exposed their naked fides to the fwords of the legions. Aurelian had chofen these veteran troops, who were usually stationed on the Upper Danube, and whose valour had been severely tried in the Alemannic war 67. After the defeat of Emela, Zenobia found it impossible to collect a third army. As far as the frontier of Egypt, the nations fubject to her empire had joined the standard of the conqueror, who detached Probus the bravest of his generals to possess himself of the Egyptian provinces. Palmyra was the last resource of the widow of Odenathus. She retired within the walls of her capital, made every preparation for a vigorous relistance, and declared with the intrepidity of a heroine, that the last moment of her reign and of her life should be the same.

"The flate of Palmyra.

Amid the barren deferts of Arabia, a few cultivated spots rife like islands out of the fandy ocean. Even the name of Tadmor, or Palmyra, by its fignification in the Syriac as well as in the Latin language, denoted the multitude of palm trees which afforded shade and verdure to that temperate region. The air was pure, and the foil, watered by some invaluable springs, was capable of producing fruits as well as corn. A place possessed of such fingular advantages, and fituated at a convenient diftance 68 between the gulph of Perfia and the

O Zofimus, I. i. p. 44-48. His account three from the nearest coast of Syria, accord-of the two battles is clear and circumstantial. ing to the reckoning of Pliny, who, in a few O It was five hundred and thirty-feven words, (Hist. Natur. v. 21.) gives an excelmiles from Seleucia, and two hundred and lent description of Palmyra.

Mediterranean, was foon frequented by the caravans which con- C ff A P. veyed to the nations of Europe a confiderable part of the rich commodities of India. Palmyra infenfibly increased into an opulent and independent city, and connecting the Roman and the Parthian monarchies by the mutual benefits of commerce, was fuffered to observe an humble neutrality, till at length, after the victories of Trajan, the little republic funk into the bosom of Rome, and flourished more than one hundred and fifty years in the subordinate though honourable rank of a colony. It was during that peaceful period, if we may judge from a few remaining inscriptions, that the wealthy Palmyrenians conftructed those temples, palaces, and porticos of Grecian architecture, whose ruins, scattered over an extent of feveral miles, have deferved the curiofity of our travellers. The elevation of Odenathus and Zenobia appeared to reflect new fplendour on their country, and Palmyra, for a while, flood forth the rival of Rome: but the competition was fatal, and ages of profperity were facrificed to a moment of glory 69.

In his march over the fandy defert, between Emela and Palmyra, It is befreged the emperor Aurelian was perpetually haraffed by the Arabs; nor could he always defend his army, and especially his baggage, from those flying troops, of active and daring robbers, who watched the moment of furprise, and eluded the flow pursuit of the legions. The fiege of Palmyra was an object far more difficult and important, and the emperor, who with inceffant vigour preffed the attacks in person, was himself wounded with a dart. "The Roman people," fays Aurelian, in an original letter, " speak with contempt of the " war which I am waging against a woman. They are ignorant both by Aurelian,

<sup>69</sup> Some English travellers from Aleppo the history of Palmyra, we may consult the diferenced the ruins of Palmyra, about the mafterly differtation of Dr. Halley in the end of the last century. Our curiofity has philosophical Transactions; Lowthorp's A- fince been gratissed in a more splendid man-bridgement, vol. iii. p. 518. ner by Messieurs Wood and Dawkins. For CHAP. " of the character and of the power of Zenobia. It is impossible to " enumerate her warlike preparations, of flones, of arrows, and of " every species of missile weapons. Every part of the walls is pro-" vided with two or three balifte, and artificial fires are thrown " from her military engines. The fear of punishment has armed " her with a desperate courage. Yet still I trust in the protecting " deities of Rome, who have hitherto been favourable to all my " undertakings "." Doubtful, however, of the protection of the gods, and of the event of the fiege, Aurelian judged it more prudent to offer terms of an advantageous capitulation: to the queen, a splendid retreat; to the citizens, their ancient privileges. His propofals were obstinately rejected, and the refusal was accompanied with infult.

who becomes master of Zepobin and of the city.

The firmness of Zenobia was supported by the hope, that in a very short time famine would compel the Roman army to repass the defert; and by the reasonable expectation that the kings of the East, and particularly the Perfian monarch, would arm in the defence of their most natural ally. But Fortune and the perseverance of Aurelian overcame every obstacle. The death of Sapor, which happened about this time 7t, distracted the councils of Persia, and the inconfiderable fuccours that attempted to relieve Palmyra, were eafily intercepted either by the arms or the liberality of the emperor. From every part of Syria, a regular fuccession of convoys safely arrived in the camp, which was increased by the return of Probus with his victorious troops from the conquest of Egypt. It was then that Zenobia refolved to fly. She mounted the fleetest of her dromedaries 72, and had already reached the banks of the Euphrates,

<sup>70</sup> Vopifcus in Hift. August. p. 218.

p. 50. Though the camel is a heavy beaft eight or ten. See Buffon Hift. Naturelle, the fame or of a kindred species, is used by 71 From a very doubtful chronology I have the natives of Afia and Africa on all occasions endeavoured to extract the most probable which require celerity. The Arabs affirm, that he will run over as much ground in one 72 Hist. August. p. 218. Zosimus, I. i. day, as their sleetest horses can perform in of burden, the dromedary, who is either of tom. xi. p. 222, and Shaw's Travels, p. 167.

about fixty miles from Palmyra, when she was overtaken by the CHAP. pursuit of Aurelian's light horse, seized, and brought back a captive to the feet of the emperor. Her capital foon afterwards furrendered, and was treated with unexpected lenity. The arms, horses, and camels, with an immense treasure of gold, filver, filk, and precious stones, were all delivered to the conqueror, who leaving only a garrison of fix hundred archers, returned to Emesa, and employed some time in the distribution of rewards and punishments at the end of so memorable a war, which restored to the obedience of Rome those provinces that had renounced their allegiance fince the captivity of Valerian.

A. D. 273.

When the Syrian queen was brought into the presence of Aure-Behaviour of lian, he sternly asked her, How she had presumed to rise in arms against the emperors of Rome? The answer of Zenobia was a prudent mixture of respect and firmnels. "Because I disdained to con-" fider as Roman emperors an Aureolus or a Gallienus. You alone " I acknowledge as my conqueror and my fovereign 73." But as female fortitude is commonly artificial, so it is feldom steady or confistent. The courage of Zenobia deserted her in the hour of trial; she trembled at the angry clamours of the foldiers, who called aloud for her immediate execution, forgot the generous despair of Cleopatra, which the had proposed as her model, and ignominiously purchased life by the facrifice of her fame and her friends. It was to their counsels which governed the weakness of her sex, that she imputed the guilt of her obstinate resistance; it was on their heads that she directed the vengeance of the cruel Aurelian. The fame of Longinus, who was included among the numerous and perhaps innocent victims of her fear, will furvive that of the queen who betrayed, or the tyrant who condemned him. Genius and learning were incapable of moving a fierce unlettered foldier, but they had ferved to elevate and harmonife the foul of Longinus. Without uttering a complaint, he calmly and ruin of Palmyra. followed the executioner, pitying his unhappy miftrefs, and beflowing comfort on his afflicted friends 1t.

C H A P. XI. Rebellion

Returning from the conquest of the East, Aurelian had already croffed the Streights which divide Europe from Afia, when he was provoked by the intelligence that the Palmyrenians had maffacred the governor and garrifon which he had left among them, and again erected the standard of revolt. Without a moment's deliberation, he once more turned his face towards Syria. Antioch was alarmed by his rapid approach, and the helpless city of Palmyra felt the irrefishible weight of his resentment. We have a letter of Aurelian himself, in which he acknowledges 75, that old men, women, children, and peafants, had been involved in that dreadful execution, which should have been confined to armed rebellion; and although his principal concern feems directed to the re-establishment of a temple of the Sun, he discovers some pity for the remnant of the Palmyrenians, to whom he grants the permission of rebuilding and inhabiting their city. But it is easier to destroy than to restore. The feat of commerce, of arts, and of Zenobia, gradually funk into an obscure town, a trifling fortress, and at length a miserable village. The present citizens of Palmyra, consisting of thirty or forty families, have erected their mud cottages within the spacious court of a magnificent temple.

Aurelian fuppresses the rebellion of Firmus in Egypt.

Another and a last labour still awaited the indefatigable Aurelian; to suppress a dangerous though obscure rebel, who, during the revolt of Palmyra, had arisen on the banks of the Nile. Firmus, the friend and ally, as he proudly styled himself, of Odenathus and Zenobia, was no more than a wealthy merchant of Egypt. In the course of his trade to India, he had formed very intimate connexions with the Saracens and the Blemmyes, whose situation on either coast of the Red Sea gave them an easy introduction into the Upper

<sup>74</sup> Vopifcus in Hist. August. p. 219. Zo- 35 Hist. August. p. 219. simus, l. i. p. 51.

Egypt. The Egyptians he inflamed with the hope of freedom, CHAP. and, at the head of their furious multitude, broke into the city of Alexandria, where he affumed the Imperial purple, coined money, published edicts, and raised an army, which, as he vainly boasted, he was capable of maintaining from the fole profits of his paper trade. Such troops were a feeble defence against the approach of Aurelian; and it feems almost unnecessary to relate, that Firmus was routed, taken, tortured, and put to death. Aurelian might now congratulate the fenate, the people, and himfelf, that in little more than three years, he had restored universal peace and order to the Roman world 76,

Since the foundation of Rome, no general had more nobly deferved A. D. 274.
Triumph of a triumph than Aurelian; nor was a triumph ever celebrated with Aurelian. fuperior pride and magnificence 77. The pomp was opened by twenty elephants, four royal tigers, and above two hundred of the most curious animals from every climate of the North, the East, and the South. They were followed by fixteen hundred gladiators, devoted to the cruel amusement of the amphitheatre. The wealth of Asia, the arms and enfigns of fo many conquered nations, and the magnificent plate and wardrobe of the Syrian queen, were disposed in exact symmetry or artful disorder. The ambassadors of the most remote parts of the earth, of Æthiopia, Arabia, Perfia, Bactriana, India, and China, all remarkable by their rich or fingular dreffes, displayed the fame and power of the Roman emperor, who exposed likewise to the public view the prefents that he had received, and particularly a great number of crowns of gold, the offerings of grateful cities. The victories of Aurelian were attefted by the long train of cap-

<sup>242.</sup> As an inflance of luxury, it is observed, was already suppressed. that he had glafs windows. He was remark-able for his ftrength and appetite, his counge' by Vopifeus. He relates the particulars with and dexterity. From the letter of Aurelian, his usual minuteness; and on this occasion,

<sup>76</sup> See Vopifcus in Hift. August. p. 220. of the rebels, and consequently that Tetricus

we may juffly infer, that Firmus was the last they hoppen to be interesting. Hill, Aug. 220.

CHAP. tives who reluctantly attended his triumph, Goths, Vandals, Sarmatians, Alemanui, Franks, Gauls, Syrians, and Egyptians. Fach people was distinguished by its peculiar inscription, and the title of Amazons was bestowed on ten martial heroines of the Gothic nation who had been taken in arms 78. But every eye, difregarding the crowd of captives, was fixed on the emperor Tetricus, and the queen of the East. The former, as well as his fon, whom he had created Augustus, was dressed in Gallic trowsers 79, a saffron tunic, and a robe of purple. The beauteous figure of Zenobia was confined by fetters of gold; a flave supported the gold chain which encircled her neck, and she almost fainted under the intolerable weight of iewels. She preceded on foot the magnificent chariot, in which she once hoped to enter the gates of Rome. It was followed by two other chariots, still more fumptuous, of Odenathus and of the Persian monarch. The triumphal car of Aurelian (it had formerly been used by a Gothic king) was drawn, on this memorable occasion, either by four stags or by four elephants so. The most illustrious of the fenate, the people, and the army, closed the solemn procession. Unfeigned joy, wonder, and gratitude, fwelled the acclamations of the multitude; but the fatisfaction of the fenate was clouded by the appearance of Tetricus; nor could they suppress a rising murmur, that the haughty emperor should thus expose to public ignominy the person of a Roman and a magistrate 81.

> 78 Among barbarous nations, women have custom was confined to the rich and luxurious, often combated by the fide of their husbands. It gradually was adopted by the meanest of But it is almost impossible, that a society of the people. See a very curious note of Ca-Amazons should ever have existed either in faubon, ad Sueton. in August. c. 82. the old or new world.

79 The use of Braccæ, breeches, or trowfers, was still considered in Italy as a Gallie and Barbarian fashion. The Romans, however, had made great advances towards it. To encircle the legs and thighs with fasciæ, or bands, was understood in the time of Pompey and Horace, to be a proof of ill-health or effeminacy. In the age of Trajan, the " Most probably the former; the latter, feen on the medals of Aurelian, only denote (according to the learned Cardinal Noris) an oriental victory.

81 The expression of Calphurnius (Eclog. i. 50.) Nullos ducet captiva triumphos, as applied to Rome, contains a very manifest allusion and censure.

But however, in the treatment of his unfortunate rivals, Aure- CHAP. lian might indulge his pride, he behaved towards them with a generous clemency, which was feldom exercised by the ancient conquerors. Princes who, without fuccess, had defended their throne tricus and Zenobia. or freedom, were frequently strangled in prison, as soon as the triumphal pomp ascended the Capitol. These usurpers, whom their defeat had convicted of the crime of treason, were permitted to spend their lives in affluence and honourable repose. The emperor presented Zenobia with an elegant villa at Tibur, or Tivoli, about twenty miles from the capital; the Syrian queen infenfibly funk into a Roman matron, her daughters married into noble families, and her race was not yet extinct in the fifth century 82. Tetricus and his fou were reinstated in their rank and fortunes. They erected on the Cælian hill a magnificent palace, and as foon as it was finished, invited Aurelian to Supper. On his entrance, he was agreeably furprifed with a picture which represented their fingular history. They were delineated offering to the emperor a civic crown and the fceptre of Gaul, and again receiving at his hands the ornaments of the fenatorial dignity. The father was afterwards invefted with the government of Lucania 83, and Aurelian, who foon admitted the abdicated monarch to his friendship and conversation, familiarly asked him, Whether it were not more desirable to administer a province of Italy, than to reign beyond the Alps? The fon long continued a respectable member of the senate; nor was there any one of the Roman nobility more esteemed by Aurelian, as well as by his fucceffors 84.

So long and fo various was the pomp of Aurelian's triumph, that His magnifialthough it opened with the dawn of day, the flow majefly of the devotion,

VOL. I.

3 C

procession

<sup>82</sup> Vopifcus in Hift. August. p. 199. Hi- 83 Vopifc. in Hift. August. p. 222. Eueronym. in Chron. Prosper in Chron. Ba- tropius, ix. 13. Victor Junior. But Pollio in ronius supposes that Zenobius, bishop of Hist. August. p. 196, says that Tetricus was Florence, in the time of St. Ambrose, was made corrector of all Italy. of her family.

<sup>84</sup> Hift. August. p. 197.

C H A P. procession ascended not the Capitol before the ninth hour; and it was already dark when the emperor returned to the palace. The festival was protracted by theatrical representations, the games of the circus, the hunting of wild beafts, combats of gladiators, and naval engagements. Liberal donatives were distributed to the army and people, and feveral inflitutions, agreeable or beneficial to the city, contributed to perpetuate the glory of Aurelian. A confiderable portion of his oriental spoils was confecrated to the gods of Rome; the Capitol, and every other temple, glittered with the offerings of his oftentatious piety; and the temple of the Sun alone received above fifteen thousand pounds of gold 85. This last was a magnificent structure, erected by the emperor on the side of the Ouirinal hill, and dedicated, foon after the triumph, to that deity whom Aurelian adored as the parent of his life and fortunes. His mother had been an inferior priestess in a chapel of the Sun; a peculiar devotion to the god of Light, was a fentiment which the fortunate peafant imbibed in his infancy; and every step of his elevation, every victory of his reign, fortified superstition by gratitude 56.

He suppresses a fedition at Rome.

The arms of Aurelian had vanquished the foreign and domestic foes of the Republic. We are affured, that, by his falutary rigour, crimes and factions, mischievous arts and pernicious connivance, the luxuriant growth of a feeble and oppreffive government, were eradicated throughout the Roman world 87. But if we attentively reflect how much swifter is the progress of corruption than its cure, and if we remember that the years abandoned to public diforders exceeded

<sup>85</sup> Vopifcus in Hift. August. 222. Zofimus, 1. i. p. 56. He placed in it the images of Belus and of the Sun, which he had brought from Palmyra. It was dedicated in the fourth year of his reign (Eufeb. in Chron.) but was most assuredly begun immediately on his accession.

<sup>16</sup> See in the Augustan History, p. 210, the omens of his fortune. His devotion to the Sun appears in his letters, on his medals, and is mentioned in the Cæfars of Julian. Commentaire de Spanheim, p. 109.

<sup>17</sup> Vopiscus in Hist. August. p. 221.

exceeded the months allotted to the martial reign of Aurelian, we CHAP. must confess that a few short intervals of peace were insufficient for the arduous work of reformation. Even his attempt to reftore the integrity of the coin, was opposed by a formidable insurrection. The emperor's vexation breaks out in one of his private letters. " Surely," fays he, " the gods have decreed that my life should be " a perpetual warfare. A fedition within the walls has just now " given birth to a very ferious civil war. The workmen of the mint, " at the infligation of Felicissimus, a flave to whom I had intrusted " an employment in the finances, have rifen in rebellion. They " are at length suppressed; but seven thousand of my soldiers have " been flain in the contest, of those troops whose ordinary station is " in Dacia, and the camps along the Danube 88." Other writers, who confirm the same fact, add likewise, that it happened soon after Aurelian's triumph; that the decifive engagement was fought on the Cælian hill; that the workmen of the mint had adulterated the coin, and that the emperor reftored the public credit, by delivering out good money in exchange for the bad, which the people was commanded to bring into the treasury 89.

We might content ourselves with relating this extraordinary Observations transaction, but we cannot diffemble how much in its present form it appears to us inconfistent and incredible. The debasement of the coin is indeed well fuited to the administration of Gallienus; nor is it unlikely that the inftruments of the corruption might dread the inflexible justice of Aurelian. But the guilt, as well as the profit, must have been confined to a few; nor is it easy to conceive by what arts they could arm a people whom they had injured, against a monarch whom they had betrayed. We might naturally expect, that fuch miscreants should have shared the public detestation, with the

<sup>88</sup> Hist. August. p. 222. Aurelian calls 89 Zosimus, l.i. p. 56. Eutropius, ix. 14. those soldiers Hiberi Riparienses, Castriani, Aurel. Victor. and Dacifci.

C H A P. informers and the other ministers of oppression; and that the reformation of the coin should have been an action equally popular with the destruction of those obsolete accounts, which by the emperor's order were burnt in the forum of Trajan 90. In an age when the principles of commerce were so imperfectly understood, the most desirable end might perhaps be effected by harsh and injudicious means; but a temporary grievance of fuch a nature can fcarcely excite and support a serious civil war. The repetition of intolerable taxes, imposed either on the land or on the necessaries of life, may at last provoke those who will not, or who cannot, relinquish their country. But the case is far otherwise in every operation which, by whatfoever expedients, reftores the just value of money. The tranfient evil is foon obliterated by the permanent benefit, the lofs is divided among multitudes; and if a few wealthy individuals experience a fensible diminution of treasure, with their riches they at the fame time lofe the degree of weight and importance which they derived from the possession of them. However Aurelian might chuse to disguise the real cause of the insurrection, his reformation of the coin could furnish only a faint pretence to a party already powerful and discontented. Rome, though deprived of freedom, was distracted by faction. The people, towards whom the emperor, himfelf a plebeian, always expressed a peculiar fondness, lived in perpetual diffension with the fenate, the equestrian order, and the Prætorian guards 91. Nothing lefs than the firm though fecret conspiracy of those orders, of the authority of the first, the wealth of the second, and the arms of the third, could have displayed a strength capable of contending in battle with the veteran legions of the Danube, which, under the conduct of a martial fovereign, had atchieved the conquest of the West and of the East.

Whatever

oo Hift, August, p. 222. Aurel, Vistor. from Egypt. See Vopiscus, who quotes an It already raged before Aurelian's return original letter. Hist, August, p. 244.

Whatever was the cause or the object of this rebellion, imputed CHAP. with fo little probability to the workmen of the mint, Aurelian used his victory with unrelenting rigour 92. He was naturally of a Aurelian. fevere disposition. A peasant and a soldier, his nerves yielded not eafily to the impressions of sympathy, and he could sustain without emotion the fight of tortures and death. Trained from his earliest youth in the exercise of arms, he set too small a value on the life of a citizen, chastised by military execution the slightest offences, and transferred the stern discipline of the camp into the civil administration of the laws. His love of justice often became a blind and furious passion; and whenever he deemed his own or the public safety endangered, he difregarded the rules of evidence, and the proportion of punishments. The unprovoked rebellion with which the Romans rewarded his fervices, exasperated his haughty spirit. The noblest families of the capital were involved in the guilt or suspicion of this dark conspiracy. A hasty spirit of revenge urged the bloody prosecution, and it proved fatal to one of the nephews of the emperor. The executioners (if we may use the expression of a contemporary poet) were fatigued, the prisons were crowded, and the unhappy fenate lamented the death or absence of its most illustrious members 93. Nor was the pride of Aurelian less offensive to that affembly than his cruelty. Ignorant or impatient of the restraints of civil inflitutions, he disdained to hold his power by any other title than that of the fword, and governed by right of conquest an empire which he had faved and fubdued 94. It was observed by one of the most fagacious of the Roman He marches princes, that the talents of his predecessor Aurelian, were better into the East, 92 Vopiscus in Hist. August. p. 222. The Carnificum lassabit opus; nec carcere pleno two Victors. Eutropius, ix. 1.4. Zofimus Infelix raros numerabit curia Patres. (l. i. p. 43.) mentions only three fenators, and places their death before the eaftern Calphurn. Eclog. i. 60. 94 According to the younger Victor, he fometimes wore the diadem. Dous and Dominus appear on his medals.

93 Nulla catenati feralis pompa fenatûs

fuited

and is affaffinated.

A. D. 274. October.

C H A P. fuited to the command of an army, than to the government of an empire 95. Conscious of the character in which Nature and experience had enabled him to excel, he again took the field a few months after his triumph. It was expedient to exercise the reftless temper of the legions in some foreign war, and the Persian monarch, exulting in the shame of Valerian, still braved with impunity the offended majefty of Rome. At the head of an army, less formidable by its numbers than by its discipline and valour, the emperor advanced as far as the Streights which divide Europe from Afia. He there experienced, that the most absolute power is a weak defence against the effects of despair. He had threatened one of his secretaries who was accused of extortion; and it was known that he seldom threatened in vain. The last hope which remained for the criminal, was to involve fome of the principal officers of the army in his danger, or at least in his fears. Artfully counterfeiting his mafter's hand, he shewed them, in a long and bloody lift, their own names devoted to death. Without suspecting or examining the fraud, they refolved to fecure their lives by the murder of the emperor. On his march, between Byzantium and Heraclea, Aurelian was fuddenly attacked by the conspirators, whose stations gave them a right to furround his person; and, after a short resistance, fell by the hand of Mucapor, a general whom he had always loved and trufted. He died regretted by the army, detefted by the fenate, but univerfally acknowledged as a warlike and fortunate prince, the useful though fevere reformer of a degenerate state 96.

A. D. 275. January.

<sup>95</sup> It was the observation of Diocletian. simus, l.i. p. 57. Eutrop. ix. 15. The two See Vopiscus in Hist. August. p. 224. Victors. 95 Vopiscus in Hist. August. p. 221. Zo-

CHAP. XII.

Conduct of the Army and Senate after the death of Aurelian .- Reigns of Tacitus, Probus, Carus, and bis Sons.

CUCH was the unhappy condition of the Roman emperors, CHAP. that whatever might be their conduct, their fate was commonly the fame. A life of pleasure or virtue, of severity or mild- Extraordinaness, of indolence or glory, alike led to an untimely grave; and tween the almost every reign is closed by the same disgusting repetition of senate for the treason and murder. The death of Aurelian, however, is remark-emperor. able by its extraordinary confequences. The legions admired, lamented, and revenged, their victorious chief. The artifice of his perfidious fecretary was discovered and punished. The deluded conspirators attended the funeral of their injured sovereign, with fincere or well-feigned contrition, and fubmitted to the unanimous resolution of the military order, which was signified by the following epiftle. "The brave and fortunate armies to the fenate and " people of Rome. The crime of one man, and the error of many, " have deprived us of the late emperor Aurelian. May it please you, " venerable lords and fathers! to place him in the number of the " gods, and to appoint a fucceffor whom your judgment shall declare " worthy of the Imperial purple. None of those, whose guilt or " misfortune have contributed to our lofs, shall ever reign over " us '." The Roman fenators heard, without furprife, that another emperor had been affaffinated in his camp: they fecretly rejoiced in the fall of Aurelian; but the modest and dutiful address of the

ry contest be-

<sup>1</sup> Vopiscus in Hist. August. p. 222. Au- from the troops to the senate. relius Victor mentions a formal deputation

CHAP. legions, when it was communicated in full affembly by the conful, diffused the most pleasing astonishment. Such honours, as fear and perhaps efteem could extort, they liberally poured forth on the memory of their deceafed fovereign. Such acknowledgments as gratitude could inspire, they returned to the faithful armies of the republic, who entertained fo just a fense of the legal authority of the fenate in the choice of an emperor. Yet, notwithstanding this flattering appeal, the most prudent of the assembly declined expoling their fafety and dignity to the caprice of an armed multitude. The strength of the legions was, indeed, a pledge of their fincerity, fince those who may command are feldom reduced to the necessity of dissembling; but could it naturally be expected, that a hafty repentance would correct the inveterate habits of fourfcore years? Should the foldiers relapse into their accustomed seditions, their infolence might diffrace the majefty of the fenate, and prove fatal to the object of its choice. Motives like these dictated a decree, by which the election of a new emperor was referred to the fuffrage of the military order.

A. D. 275. February 3. A peaceful interregnum of eight months.

The contention that enfued is one of the best attested, but most improbable events in the history of mankind 2. The troops, as if fatiated with the exercise of power, again conjured the senate to invest one of its own body with the Imperial purple. The fenate still perfisted in its refusal; the army in its request. The reciprocal offer was pressed and rejected at least three times, and whilst the obstinate modesty of either party was resolved to receive a master from the hands of the other, eight months infenfibly elapfed: an amazing period of tranquil anarchy, during which the Roman world

&lt;sup>e</sup> Vopifcus, our principal authority, wrote at Rome, fixteen years only after the death and Zonaras appear as ignorant of this traufof the fafts, confiantly draws his materials confitution. from the Journals of the Senate, and the ori-

world remained without a fovereign, without an usurper, and without a fedition. The generals and magistrates appointed by Aurelian continued to execute their ordinary functions, and it is observed, that a proconful of Asia was the only considerable person removed from his office, in the whole course of the interregnum.

An event fomewhat fimilar, but much less authentic, is supposed to have happened after the death of Romulus, who, in his life and character, bore fome affinity with Aurelian. The throne was vacant during twelve months, till the election of a Sabine philosopher, and the public peace was guarded in the fame manner, by the union of the feveral orders of the state. But, in the time of Numa and Romulus, the arms of the people were controlled by the authority of the Patricians; and the balance of freedom was eafily preferved in a fmall and virtuous community '. The decline of the Roman state, far different from its infancy, was attended with every circumstance that could banish from an interregnum the prospect of obedience and harmony; an immense and tumultuous capital, a wide extent of empire, the fervile equality of despotisin, an army of four hundred thousand mercenaries, and the experience of frequent revolutions. Yet, notwithstanding all these temptations, the discipline and memory of Aurelian still restrained the feditious temper of the troops, as well as the fatal ambition of their leaders. The flower of the legions maintained their flation on the banks of the Bosphorus, and the Imperial standard awed the less powerful camps of Rome and of the provinces. A generous though transient enthusiasm seemed to animate the military order; and we may hope that a few real patriots cultivated the returning friendship of the army and the fenate, as the only expedient capable of refloring the republic to its ancient beauty and vigour.

Vol. I.

3 D

Or

&lt;sup>3</sup> Liv. i. 1". Dionyf. Halicarn. l. ii. p. ter, the fecond like a lawyer, and the third 115. Plutarch in Numa, p. 60. The first like a moralist, and none of them probably of these writers relates the story like an orawithout some intermixture of sable.

A. D. 275. Sept. 25. The conful affembles the fenate.

On the twenty-fifth of September, near eight months after the murder of Aurclian, the conful convoked an affembly of the fenate, and reported the doubtful and dangerous fituation of the empire. He flightly infinuated, that the precarious loyalty of the foldiers depended on the chance of every hour, and of every accident; but he represented, with the most convincing eloquence, the various dangers that might attend any farther delay in the choice of an emperor. Intelligence, he faid, was already received, that the Germans had passed the Rhine, and occupied some of the strongest and most opulent cities of Gaul. The ambition of the Persian king kept the East in perpetual alarms; Egypt, Africa, and Illyricum, were exposed to foreign and domestic arms, and the levity of Syria would prefer even a female sceptre to the sanctity of the Roman laws. The conful then addressing himself to Tacitus, the first of the fenators +, required his opinion on the important subject of a proper candidate for the vacant throne.

Character of Tacitus. If we can prefer personal merit to accidental greatness, we shall esteem the birth of Tacitus more truly noble than that of kings. He claimed his descent from the philosophic historian, whose writings will instruct the last generations of mankind. The senator Tacitus was then seventy-sive years of age. The long period of his innocent life was adorned with wealth and honours. He had twice been invested with the consular dignity, and enjoyed with elegance and sobriety his ample patrimony of between two and three millions

Vopifeus (in Hift. August. p. 227) calls him 'prime fententie confularis,' and foon afterwards, Princeps fonatis. It is natural to suppose, that the monarchs of Rome, disclaining that humble title, refigned it to the most ancient of the senators.

&lt;sup>5</sup> The only objection to this genealogy, is that the historian was named Cornelius, the emperor, Claudius. But under the lower empire, furnames were extremely various and uncertain.

&lt;sup>6</sup> Zonaras, l. xii. p. 637. The Alexandrian Chronicle, by an obvious mistake, transfers that age to Aurelian.

&lt;sup>7</sup> In the year 273, he was ordinary conful. But he must have been Suffectus many years before, and most probably under Valerian.

millions sterling 8. The experience of so many princes, whom CHAP. he had esteemed or endured, from the vain follies of Elagabalus to the useful rigour of Aurelian, taught him to form a just estimate of the duties, the dangers, and the temptations, of their fublime station. From the assiduous study of his immortal ancestor he derived the knowledge of the Roman constitution, and of human nature 9. The voice of the peoople had already named Tacitus as the citizen the most worthy of empire. The ungrateful rumour reached his ears, and induced him to feek the retirement of one of his villas in Campania. He had passed two months in the delightful privacy of Baiæ, when he reluctantly obeyed the fummons of the conful to refume his honourable place in the fenate, and to affift the republic with his counsels on this important occasion.

He arose to speak, when, from every quarter of the house, he was He is elected faluted with the names of Augustus and Emperor. "Tacitus Au-" gustus, the gods preserve thee, we chuse thee for our sovereign, " to thy care we intrust the republic and the world. Accept the " empire from the authority of the fenate. It is due to thy rank, " to thy conduct, to thy manners." As foon as the tumult of acclamations fubfided, Tacitus attempted to decline the dangerous honour, and to express his wonder, that they should elect his age and infirmities to fucceed the martial vigour of Aurelian. "Are " these limbs, conscript fathers! fitted to sustain the weight of armour, or to practife the exercises of the camp? The variety of " climates, and the hardships of a military life, would foon op-" press a feeble constitution, which sublists only by the most tender much of its weight and purity. 9 After his accession, he gave orders that nal. ii. 9.

<sup>8</sup> Bis millies oftingenties. Vopifcus in Hift. ten copies of the historian should be annually August. p. 229. This sum, according to the transcribed and placed in the public libraries. old flandard, was equivalent to eight hundred The Roman libraries have long fince perifhed, and forty theufand Roman pounds of filver, and the most valuable part of Tacitus was pree.ch of the value of three pounds sterling, ferved in a fingle MS, and discovered in a But in the age of Tacitus, the coin had lost monastery of Westphalia. See Baile, Dictionnaire, Art. Tucite, and Lipfius ad An-

- CHAP. " management. My exhausted strength scarcely enables me to " discharge the duty of a senator; how insufficient would it prove
  - " to the arduous labours of war and government. Can you hope, - " that the legions will respect a weak old man, whose days have
  - " been spent in the shade of peace and retirement? Can you desire
  - " that I should ever find reason to regret the favourable opinion of
  - " the fenate "?"

and accepts the purple.

The reluctance of Tacitus, and it might possibly be fincere, was encountered by the affectionate obstinacy of the senate. Five hundred voices repeated at once, in eloquent confusion, that the greatest of the Roman princes, Numa, Trajan, Hadrian, and the Antonines, had afcended the throne in a very advanced feafon of life; that the mind, not the body, a fovereign, not a foldier, was the object of their choice; and that they expected from him no more than to guide by his wisdom the valour of the legions. These pressing though tumultuary inflances were feconded by a more regular oration of Metius Falconius, the next on the confular bench to Tacitus himself. He reminded the assembly of the evils which Rome had endured from the vices of headstrong and capricious youths, congratulated them on the election of a virtuous and experienced fenator, and, with a manly, though perhaps a felfish, freedom, exhorted Tacitus to remember the reasons of his elevation, and to feek a fucceffor, not in his own family, but in the republic. The speech of Falconius was enforced by a general acclamation. The emperor elect fubmitted to the authority of his country, and received the voluntary homage of his equals. The judgment of the fenate was confirmed by the confent of the Roman people, and of the Prætorian guards ".

Authority of the fenate.

The administration of Tacitus was not unworthy of his life and principles. A grateful fervant of the fenate, he confidered that national

<sup>10</sup> Vopifcus in Hift. August. p. 227. milites, and the people by that of facratissimi 11 Hift. August. p. 228. Tacitus addressed Quirites. the Pratorians by the appellation of fanclissimi

tional council as the author, and himself as the subject, of the CHAP. laws 12. He studied to heal the wounds which imperial pride, civil discord, and military violence, had inflicted on the constitution, and to reftore, at least, the image of the ancient republic, as it had been preserved by the policy of Augustus, and the virtues of Trajan and the Antonines. It may not be useless to recapitulate some of the most important prerogatives which the senate appeared to have regained by the election of Tacitus ". 1. To invest one of their body, under the title of emperor, with the general command of the armies and the government of the frontier provinces. 2. To determine the lift, or as it was then styled, the College of Consuls. They were twelve in number, who, in fuccessive pairs, each, during the space of two months, filled the year, and represented the dignity of that ancient office. The authority of the senate, in the nomination of the confuls, was exercised with such independent freedom, that no regard was paid to an irregular request of the emperor in favour of his brother Florianus. "The fenate," exclaimed Tacitus, with the honest transport of a patriot, "understand the character of a prince " whom they have chosen." 3. To appoint the proconfuls and prefidents of the provinces, and to confer on all the magistrates their civil jurisdiction. 4. To receive appeals through the intermediate office of the præfect of the city from all the tribunals of the empire-5. To give force and validity, by their decrees, to fuch as they should approve of the emperor's edicts. 6. To these several branches of authority, we may add some inspection over the finances, since, even in the stern reign of Aurelian, it was in their power to divert a part of the revenue from the public fervice 14.

Circular

Caninian law, which was enacted under Augustus, and at length repealed by Justinian. See Cafaubon ad locum Vopisci.

<sup>13</sup> See the lives of Tacitus, Florianus, and and Salmafius with to correct it.

<sup>12</sup> In his manumiffions he never exceeded Probus, in the Augustan History; we may be the number of an hundred, as limited by the well affured, that whatever the foldier gave, the fenator had already given.

<sup>14</sup> Vopifcus in Hift. August. p. 216. The paffage is perfectly clear; yet both Cafaubon

C H A P. XII. Their joy and confidence.

Circular epiftles were fent, without delay, to all the principal cities of the empire, Treves, Milan, Aquileia, Theffalonica, Corinth, Athens, Antioch, Alexandria, and Carthage, to claim their obedience, and to inform them of the happy revolution, which had restored the Roman senate to its ancient dignity. Two of these epiftles are ftill extant. We likewise possess two very singular fragments of the private correspondence of the senators on this occasion. They discover the most excessive joy, and the most unbounded hopes. "Cast away your indolence," it is thus that one of the fenators addresses his friend, "emerge from your retire-" ments of Baiæ and Puteoli. Give yourfelf to the city, to the " fenate. Rome flourishes, the whole republic flourishes. Thanks " to the Roman army, to an army truly Roman; at length, we " have recovered our just authority, the end of all our defires. "We hear appeals, we appoint proconfuls, we create emperors; " perhaps too we may reftrain them-to the wife, a word is fuffi-"cient "5." These lofty expectations were, however, soon disappointed; nor, indeed, was it possible, that the armies and the provinces should long obey the luxurious and unwarlike nobles of Rome. On the flightest touch, the unsupported fabric of their pride and power fell to the ground. The expiring fenate displayed a fudden luftre, blazed for a moment, and was extinguished for ever.

A. D. 276. Tacitus is acknowledged by the army. All that had yet paffed at Rome was no more than a theatrical reprefentation, unless it was ratified by the more substantial power of the legions. Leaving the senators to enjoy their dream of freedom and ambition, Tacitus proceeded to the Thracian camp, and was there, by the Prætorian præsect, presented to the assembled troops, as the prince whom they themselves had demanded, and whom the

fenate

Yopifeus in Hift. August. p. 230. 232, storation with hecatombs and public rejoic-233. The senators celebrated the happy reings.

fenate had bestowed. As soon as the præsect was filent, the em- C H A P. peror addressed himself to the soldiers with eloquence and propriety. He gratified their avarice by a liberal distribution of treasure, under the names of pay and donative. He engaged their esteem by a spirited declaration, that although his age might disable him from the performance of military exploits, his counfels should never be unworthy of a Roman general, the successor of the brave Aurelian 16.

Whilft the deceafed emperor was making preparations for a fe- The Alani cond expedition into the East, he had negociated with the Alani, and are rea Scythian people, who pitched their tents in the neighbourhood of Tacitus. the lake Mootis. Those barbarians, allured by presents and subfidies, had promifed to invade Perfia with a numerous body of light cavalry. They were faithful to their engagements; but when they arrived on the Roman frontier, Aurelian was already dead, the defign of the Persian war was at least suspended, and the generals, who, during their interregnum, exercifed a doubtful authority, were unprepared either to receive or to oppose them. Provoked by such treatment, which they confidered as triffing and perfidious, the Alani had recourse to their own valour for their payment and revenge; and as they moved with the usual swiftness of Tartars, they had soon spread themselves over the provinces of Pontus, Cappadocia, Cilicia, and Galatia. The legions, who from the opposite shores of the Bosphorus could almost distinguish the slames of the cities and villages, impatiently urged their general to lead them against the invaders. The conduct of Tacitus was fuitable to his age and flation. He convinced the barbarians, of the faith, as well as of the power, of the empire. Great numbers of the Alani, appealed by the punctual discharge of the engagements which Aurelian had contracted with them, relinquished their booty and captives, and quietly retreated to their own

CHAP. deferts, beyond the Phasis. Against the remainder who refused peace, the Roman emperor waged, in person, a successful war. Seconded by an army of brave and experienced veterans, in a few weeks he delivered the provinces of Asia from the terror of the Scythian invalion 17.

Death of the emperor Tacitus.

But the glory and life of Tacitus were of short duration. Transported, in the depth of winter, from the foft retirement of Campania, to the foot of mount Caucasus, he sunk under the unaccustomed hardships of a military life. The fatigues of the body were aggravated by the cares of the mind. For a while, the angry and felfish passions of the soldiers had been suspended by the enthusiasm of public virtue. They foon broke out with redoubled violence, and raged in the camp, and even in the tent, of the aged emperor. His mild and amiable character ferved only to inspire contempt, and he was inceffantly tormented with factions which he could not affuage, and by demands which it was impossible to fatisfy. Whatever flattering expectations he had conceived of reconciling the public diforders, Tacitus soon was convinced, that the licentiousness of the army disdained the feeble restraint of laws, and his last hour was haftened by anguish and disappointment. It may be doubtful whether the foldiers imbrued their hands in the blood of this innocent prince 18. It is certain, that their infolence was the cause of his death. He expired at Tyana in Cappadocia, after a reign of only fix months and about twenty days 19.

A. D. 276. April 12.

> 17 Vopifcus in Hift. August. p. 230. Zofimus, l. i. p. 57. Zonarat, l. xii. p. 637. Two peffages in the life of Probus (p. 236. 238.) convince me, that these Scythian invacers of Pontus were Alani. If we may believe Zosimus (l. i. p. 58.), Florianus pursued them as far as the Cimmerian Bosphorus. But he had narcely time for fo long and difficult an expedition.

The

<sup>18</sup> Eutropius and Aurelius Victor only fay that he died; Victor Junior adds, that it was of a fever. Zofimus and Zonaras affirm, that he was killed by the foldiers. Vopifcus mentions both accounts, and feems to hefitate. Yet furely these jarring opinions are easily reconciled.

<sup>19</sup> According to the two Victors, he reigned exactly two hundred days.

and death of

The eyes of Tacitus were fcarcely closed, before his brother C H A P. Florianus shewed himself unworthy to reign, by the hasty usurpation of the purple, without expecting the approbation of the fenate. The reverence for the Roman constitution, which yet influenced his brother Florianus. the camp and the provinces, was fufficiently firong to dispose them to cenfure, but not to provoke them to oppose, the precipitate ambition of Florianus. The discontent would have evaporated in idle murmurs, had not the general of the East, the heroic Probus, boldly declared himself the avenger of the senate. The contest, however, was fill unequal; nor could the most able leader, at the head of the effeminate troops of Egypt and Syria, encounter, with any hopes of victory, the legions of Europe, whose irresistible ftrength appeared to support the brother of Tacitus. But the fortune and activity of Probus triumphed over every obstacle. The hardy veterans of his rival, accustomed to cold climates, fickened and confumed away in the fultry heats of Cilicia, where the fummer proved remarkably unwholesome. Their numbers were diminished by frequent desertion, the passes of the mountains were feebly defended; Tarfus opened its gates, and the foldiers of Florianus, when they had permitted him to enjoy the Imperial title about three months, delivered the empire from civil war by the eafy July. facrifice of a prince whom they despifed 20.

The perpetual revolutions of the throne had fo perfectly erafed Their family every notion of hereditary right, that the family of an unfortunate feurity, emperor was incapable of exciting the jealoufy of his fucceffors. The children of Tacitus and Florianus were permitted to descend into a private flation, and to mingle with the general mass of the people. Their poverty indeed became an additional fafeguard to 20 Hist. August. p. 231. Zosimus, l. i. adopted by a very learned man) would throw p. 58, 59. Zonaras, l. xii. p. 637. Aurethat period of history into inextricable conlius Victor fays, that Probus assumed the emfusion. pire in Illyricum; an opinion which (though

VOL. I.

3 E

their

CHAP, their innocence. When Tacitus was elected by the fenate, he refigned his ample patrimony to the public fervice ", an act of generofity specious in appearance, but which evidently disclosed his intention of transmitting the empire to his descendents. The only confolation of their fallen state, was the remembrance of transient greatness, and a distant hope, the child of a flattering prophecy, that, at the end of a thousand years, a monarch of the race of Tacitus fhould arife, the protector of the fenate, the reflorer of Rome, and the conqueror of the whole earth 22.

Character and elevation of the emperor Probus.

The peafants of Illyricum, who had already given Claudius and Aurelian to the finking empire, had an equal right to glory in the elevation of Probus 23. Above twenty years before, the emperor Valerian, with his usual penetration, had discovered the rising merit of the young foldier, on whom he conferred the rank of tribune, long before the age prescribed by the military regulations. The tribune foon justified his choice, by a victory over a great body of Sarmatians, in which he faved the life of a near relation of Valerian; and deferved to receive from the emperor's hand the collars, bracelets, spears, and banners, the mural and the civic crown, and all the honourable rewards referved by ancient Rome for successful valour. The third, and afterwards the tenth, legion were intrusted to the command of Probus, who, in every step of his promotion, shewed himself superior to the station which he filled. Africa and Pontus, the Rhine, the Danube, the Euphrates, and the Nile, by turns afforded him the most splendid occasions of displaying his personal prowess and his conduct in war. Aurelian was indebted to him for the conquest of Egypt, and still more indebted for the honest courage with which he

often

<sup>21</sup> Hift. August. p. 229.

<sup>22</sup> He was to fend judges to the Parthians, Persians, and Sarmatians, a president to Taprobana, and a proconful to the Roman island (supposed by Casaubon and Salmasius to mean Britain). Such a history as mine (fays Vopifcus with proper modefty) will not fubfift a thousand years to expose or justify the pre-often checked the cruelty of his master. Tacitus, who desired by CHAP. the abilities of his generals to fupply his own deficiency of military talents, named him commander in chief of all the eastern provinces, with five times the usual falary, the promise of the consulship, and the hope of a triumph. When Probus ascended the Imperial throne, he was about forty-four years of age 24; in the full possession of his fame, of the love of the army, and of a mature vigour of mind and body.

<sup>23</sup> For the private life of Probus, fee Vopifcus in Hist. August. p. 234-237.

-

His acknowledged merit, and the fuccess of his arms against His respect-Florianus, left him without an enemy or a competitor. Yet, if we ful conduct towards the may credit his own professions, very far from being desirous of the fenare. empire, he had accepted it with the most fincere reluctance. "But " it is no longer in my power," fays Probus, in a private letter, " to lay down a title fo full of envy and of danger. I must con-" tinue to personate the character which the soldiers have imposed " upon me 25." His dutiful address to the senate displayed the fentiments, or at least the language, of a Roman patriot: "When " you elected one of your order, confcript fathers! to succeed the " emperor Aurelian, you acted in a manner fuitable to your justice " and wisdom. For you are the legal sovereigns of the world, " and the power which you derive from your ancestors, will de-" fcend to your posterity. Happy would it have been, if Flori-" anus, instead of usurping the purple of his brother, like a pri-" vate inheritance, had expected what your majefty might deter-" mine, either in his favour, or in that of any other person. The " prudent foldiers have punished his rashness. To me they have " offered the title of Augustus. But I submit to your elemency my "pretentions and my merits 25." When this respectful epittle was A. D. 276. August 3.

he was fifty at the time of his death.

rian prafect, whom (on condition of his good of Non. Februar. we may read Non. Augs f. behaviour) he promifed to continue in his

<sup>24</sup> According to the Alexandrian Chronicle, great office. See Hist. August. p. 237. 26 Vopiscus in Hist. August. p. 237. The 29 The letter was addressed to the Præto- date of the letter is assuredly faulty. Inslead

CHAP. read by the conful, the fenators were unable to difguife their fatiffaction, that Probus should condescend thus humbly to solicit a fceptre which he already possessed. They celebrated with the warmest gratitude his virtues, his exploits, and above all his moderation. A decree immediately passed, without a differting voice, to ratify the election of the eastern armies, and to confer on their chief all the feveral branches of the Imperial dignity: the names of Cæfar and Augustus, the title of Father of his country, the right of making in the fame day three motions in the fenate 27, the office of Pontifex Maximus, the tribunitian power, and the proconfular command; a mode of investiture, which, though it feemed to multiply the authority of the emperor, expressed the constitution of the ancient republic. The reign of Probus corresponded with this fair beginning. The fenate was permitted to direct the civil adminifiration of the empire. Their faithful general afferted the honour of the Roman arms, and often laid at their feet crowns of gold and barbaric trophies, the fruits of his numerous victories 28. Yet, whilst he gratified their vanity, he must secretly have despised their indolence and weakness. Though it was every moment in their power to repeal the difgraceful edict of Gallienus, the proud fucceffors of the Scipios patiently acquiefced in their exclusion from all military employments. They foon experienced, that those who refuse the fword, must renounce the sceptre.

Victories of Probus over the barbarians.

The strength of Aurelian had crushed on every side the enemies of Rome. After his death they seemed to revive with an increase of fury and of numbers. They were again vanquished by the active vigour of Probus, who, in a short reign of about fix years 29, equalled

the

<sup>27</sup> Hift. August. p. 238. It is odd, that the fenate should treat Probus less favourably than Marcus Antoninus. That prince had received, even before the death of Pius, Jus quintæ relationis. See Capitolin, in Hift, August. p. 24.

<sup>23</sup> See the dutiful letter of Probus to the fenate, after his German victories. Hist. Auguft. p. 239.

<sup>29</sup> The date and duration of the reign of Probus are very correctly afcertained by Cardinal Noris, in his learned work, De Epochis

_

the fame of ancient heroes, and restored peace and order to every province of the Roman world. The dangerous frontier of Rhætia he fo firmly fecured, that he left it without the fuspicion of an enemy. He broke the wandering power of the Sarmatian tribes, and by the terror of his arms compelled those barbarians to relinquish their spoil. The Gothic nation courted the alliance of fo warlike an emperor ". He attacked the Ifaurians in their mountains, befieged and took feveral of their strongest castles 31, and flattered himself that he had for ever suppressed a domestic foe, whose independence so deeply wounded the majefty of the empire. The troubles excited by the usurper Firmus in the Upper Egypt, had never been perfectly appealed, and the cities of Ptolemais and Coptos, fortified by the alliance of the Blemmyes, still maintained an obscure rebellion. The chastisement of those cities, and of their auxiliaries the favages of the South, is faid to have alarmed the court of Perfia 32, and the great King fued in vain for the friendship of Probus. Most of the exploits which diftinguished his reign, were atchieved by the personal valour and conduct of the emperor, infomuch that the writer of his life expresses fome amazement how, in fo short a time, a single man could be prefent in fo many diffant wars. The remaining actions he intrusted to the care of his lieutenants, the judicious choice of whom forms no inconfiderable part of his glory. Carus, Diocletian, Maximian, Constantius, Galerius, Asclepiodatus, Annibalianus, and a crowd of other chiefs, who afterwards ascended or supported the throne, were trained to arms in the fevere school of Aurelian and Probus 33.

Syro-Macedonum, p. 96—105. A passage of Eusebius connects the second year of Probus, with the æras of several of the Syrian Vopiscus in Hist. August. p. 239.

&lt;sup>21</sup> Zosimus (l. i. p. 62-65.) tells a very long and trifling story of Lycius the Isaurian robber.

&lt;sup>32</sup> Zofim, I. i. p. 65. Vopiscus in Hist. August. p. 239, 240. But it seems incredible, that the defeat of the Savages of Æthiopia could affect the Persian monarch.

<sup>33</sup> Befides these well-known chiefs, several others are named by Vopiscus (Hist. August. p. 241.), whose actions have not reached our knowledge.

CHAP. XII. A. D. 277. He delivers Gaul from the invasion of the Germans,

But the most important service which Probus rendered to the republic, was the deliverance of Gaul, and the recovery of feventy flourishing cities oppressed by the barbarians of Germany, who, fince the death of Aurelian, had ravaged that great province with impunity 34. Among the various multitude of those fierce invaders, we may diffinguish, with some degree of clearness, three great armies, or rather nations, fuccessively vanquished by the valour of Probus. He drove back the Franks into their moraffes; a descriptive circumstance from whence we may infer, that the confederacy known by the manly appellation of Free, already occupied the flat maritime country, interfected and almost overflown by the stagnating waters of the Rhine, and that feveral tribes of the Frifians and Batavians had acceded to their alliance. He vanquished the Burgundians, a confiderable people of the Vandalic race. They had wandered in quest of booty from the banks of the Oder to those of the Seine. They esteemed themselves sufficiently fortunate to purchase, by the restitution of all their booty, the permission of an undisturbed retreat. They attempted to elude that article of the treaty. Their punishment was immediate and terrible 35. But of all the invaders of Gaul, the most formidable were the Lygians, a distant people who reigned over a wide domain on the frontiers of Poland and Silefia 36. In the Lygian nation, the Arii held the first rank by their numbers and fierceness. "The Arii (it is thus that they are described by the " energy of Tacitus) study to improve by art and circumstances the " innate terrors of their barbarism. Their shields are black, their bodies are painted black. They chuse for the combat the darkest 66 hour of the night. Their hoft advances, covered as it were with . " a funereal shade 17; nor do they often find an enemy capable of 36 See Cluver. Germania Antiqua, 1. iii. Ptolemy places in their country the city of

<sup>34</sup> See the Cæfars of Julian and Hift. August. p. 238. 240, 241.

<sup>35</sup> Zofimus, I. i. p. 62. Hift. August. p. 240. But the latter supposes the punishment inflicted with the confent of their kings; if citus: it is furely a very bold one. fo, it was partial like the offence.

Califia, probably Califh in Silefia. 3. Feralis umbra, is the expression of Ta-

&quot; fustaining

" fuffaining fo strange and infernal an aspect. Of all our senses, C H A P. of the eyes are the first vanquished in battle 18." Yet the arms and discipline of the Romans easily discomfitted these horrid phantoms. The Lygii were defeated in a general engagement, and Semno, the most renowned of their chiefs, fell alive into the hands of Probus. That prudent emperor, unwilling to reduce a brave people to despair, granted them an honourable capitulation, and permitted them to return in fafety to their native country. But the losses which they fuffered in the march, the battle, and the retreat, broke the power of the nation: nor is the Lygian name ever repeated in the history either of Germany or of the empire. The deliverance of Gaul is reported to have cost the lives of four hundred thousand of the invaders; a work of labour to the Romans, and of expence to the emperor, who gave a piece of gold for the head of every barbarian 19. But as the fame of warriors is built on the destruction of human kind, we may naturally fuspect, that the fanguinary account was multiplied by the avarice of the foldiers, and accepted without any very fevere examination by the liberal vanity of Probus.

Since the expedition of Maximin, the Roman generals had con- and carries fined their ambition to a defensive war against the nations of Ger- Germany. many, who perpetually pressed on the frontiers of the empire. The more daring Probus purfued his Gallic victories, paffed the Rhine, and displayed his invincible eagles on the banks of the Elbe and the Necker. He was fully convinced that nothing could reconcile the minds of the barbarians to peace, unless they experienced in their own country the calamities of war. Germany, exhausted by the ill fuccess of the last emigration, was astonished by his presence. Nine of the most considerable princes repaired to his camp, and fell proftrate at his feet. Such a treaty was humbly received by the Germans, as it pleased the conqueror to dictate. He exacted a CHAP. Strict restitution of the effects and captives which they had carried away from the provinces; and obliged their own magistrates to punish the more obstinate robbers who presumed to detain any part of the spoil. A considerable tribute of corn, cattle, and horses, the only wealth of barbarians, was referved for the use of the garrisons which Probus established on the limits of their territory. He even entertained some thoughts of compelling the Germans to relinquish the exercise of arms, and to trust their differences to the justice, their fafety to the power of Rome. To accomplish these falutary ends, the conftant refidence of an Imperial governor, supported by a numerous army, was indifpenfably requifite. Probus therefore judged it more expedient to defer the execution of fo great a defign; which was indeed rather of specious than folid utility 40. Had Germany been reduced into the state of a province, the Romans, with immense labour and expence, would have acquired only a more extensive boundary to defend against the fiercer and more active barbarians of Scythia.

He builds a wall from the Rhine to the Banube.

Instead of reducing the warlike natives of Germany to the condition of subjects, Probus contented himself with the humble expedient of raifing a bulwark against their inroads. The country, which now forms the circle of Swabia, had been left defert in the age of Augustus by the emigration of its ancient inhabitants 41. The fertility of the foil foon attracted a new colony from the adjacent provinces of Gaul. Crowds of adventurers, of a roving temper and of desperate fortunes, occupied the doubtful possession, and acknowledged, by the payment of tythes, the majesty of the empire 42. To protect these new subjects, a line of frontier garrisons was in which he mentions his defign of reducing Swabia. Germany into a province.

Paterculus (ii. 108.) Maroboduus led his mania, c. 29.

<sup>47</sup> Hift. August. p. 238, 239. Vopiscus Marcomanni into Bohemia: Cluverius (Gerquotes a letter from the emperor to the senate, man. Antiq. iii. 8.) proves that it was from gradually extended from the Rhine to the Danube. About the reign C H A P. of Hadrian, when that mode of defence began to be practifed, these garrisons were connected and covered by a strong intrenchment of trees and palifades. In the place of fo rude a bulwark, the emperor Probus conftructed a stone-wall of a considerable height, and strengthened it by towers at convenient distances. From the neighbourhood of Newstadt and Ratisbon on the Danube, it stretched across hills, vallies, rivers, and moraffes, as far as Wimpfen on the Necker, and at length terminated on the banks of the Rhine, after a winding course of near two hundred miles 43. This important barrier, uniting the two mighty streams that protected the provinces of Europe, feemed to fill up the vacant space through which the barbarians, and particularly the Alemanni, could penetrate with the greatest facility into the heart of the empire. But the experience of the world from China to Britain, has exposed the vain attempt of fortifying any extensive tract of country 44. An active enemy, who can select and vary his points of attack, must, in the end, discover some feeble fpot or fome unguarded moment. The strength, as well as the attention, of the defenders is divided; and such are the blind effects of terror on the firmest troops, that a line broken in a single place, is almost instantly deserted. The fate of the wall which Probus erected, may confirm the general observation. Within a few years after his death, it was overthrown by the Alemanni. Its feattered ruins, univerfally ascribed to the power of the Dæmon, now serve only to excite the wonder of the Swabian peafant.

<sup>42</sup> These fettlers from the payment of tythes 41 Strabo, l. vii. According to Velleius were denominated, Decumates. Tacit. Ger-

43 Sec Notes de l'Abbè de la Bleterie à la globe in general, and with Germany in par-Germanie de Tacite, p. 183. His account ticular: with regard to the latter, he quotes of the wall is chiefly borrowed (as he fays him- a work of M. Hanfelman; but he feems to felf) from the Alfatia Illustrata of Scheepslin. confound the wall of Probus, designed against 44 See Recherches fur les Chinois et les the Alemanni, with the fortification of the Egyptiens, tom. ii. p. 81-102. The ano- Matriaci, confructed in the neighbourhood nymous author is well acquainted with the of Francfort against the Catti.

CHAP. XII. Introduction and fettlement of the barbarians,

Among the useful conditions of peace imposed by Probus on the vanquished nations of Germany, was the obligation of supplying the Roman army with fixteen thousand recruits, the bravest and most robust of their youth. The emperor dispersed them through all the provinces, and distributed this dangerous reinforcement in finall bands, of fifty or fixty each, among the national troops; judiciously observing, that the aid which the republic derived from the barbarians, should be felt but not feen 45. Their aid was now become necessary. The feeble elegance of Italy and the internal provinces could no longer fupport the weight of arms. The hardy frontier of the Rhine and Danube still produced minds and bodies equal to the labours of the camp; but a perpetual feries of wars had gradually diminished their numbers. The infrequency of marriage, and the ruin of agriculture, affected the principles of population, and not only deflroyed the strength of the present, but intercepted the hope of future, generations. The wildom of Probus embraced a great and beneficial plan of replenishing the exhausted frontiers, by new colonies of captive or fugitive barbarians, on whom he bestowed lands, cattle, inftruments of hufbandry, and every encouragement that might engage them to educate a race of foldiers for the fervice of the republic. Into Britain, and most probably into Cambridgefhire 46, he transported a considerable body of Vandals. The impossibility of an escape, reconciled them to their situation, and in the subsequent troubles of that island, they approved themselves the most faithful servants of the state 47. Great numbers of Franks and Gepidæ were fettled on the banks of the Danube and the Rhine. An hundred thousand Bastarnæ, expelled from their own country,

45 He diffributed about fifty or fixty Bar- but he fpeaks from a very doubtful conjec-

<sup>45</sup> He distributed about fifty or fixty Barbarians to a Numerus, as it was then called, a corps with whose established number we are not exactly acquainted.

<sup>46</sup> Camden's Britannia, Introduction, p. 136; faithful.

&lt;sup>47</sup> Zosimus, l. i. p. 62. According to Vopiscus, another body of Vandals was less faithful.

country, cheerfully accepted an establishment in Thrace, and soon C H A P. imbibed the manners and fentiments of Roman fubjects 48. But the expectations of Probus were too often disappointed. impatience and idleness of the barbarians could ill brook the flow labours of agriculture. Their unconquerable love of freedom, rifing against despotism, provoked them into hasty rebellions, alike fatal to themselves and to the provinces 49; nor could these artificial fupplies, however repeated by fucceeding emperors, reftore the important limit of Gaul and Illyricum to its ancient and native vigour.

Of all the barbarians who abandoned their new fettlements, and Daring endisturbed the public tranquillity, a very small number returned to their terprise of the Franks. own country. For a short season they might wander in arms through the empire; but in the end they were furely destroyed by the power of a warlike emperor. The fuccessful rashness of a party of Franks was attended, however, with fuch memorable confequences, that it ought not to be passed unnoticed. They had been established by Probus, on the sea-coast of Pontus, with a view of strengthening that frontier against the inroads of the Alani. A fleet stationed in one of the harbours of the Euxine, fell into the hands of the Franks; and they refolved, through unknown feas, to explore their way from the mouth of the Phasis to that of the Rhine. They easily escaped through the Bosphorus and the Hellespont, and cruizing along the Mediterranean, indulged their appetite for revenge and plunder, by frequent descents on the unsuspecting shores of Asia, Greece, and Africa. The opulent city of Syracuse, in whose port the navies of Athens and Carthage had formerly been funk, was facked by a handful of barbarians, who maffacred the greatest part of the trembling inhabitants. From the island of Sicily, the Franks proceeded to the columns of Hercules, trusted themselves to the ocean, 43 Hift. Aug. p. 240. They were probably 49 Hift. August. p. 240. expelled by the Goths. Zofim. l. i. p. 66.

3 F 2

coaffed

C H A P. coasted round Spain and Gaul, and steering their triumphant course through the British channel, at length finished their surprising voyage, by landing in fafety on the Batavian or Frisian shores 50. The example of their fuccess, instructing their countrymen to conceive the advantages, and to despise the dangers, of the sea, pointed out to their enterprifing spirit, a new road to wealth and glory.

Revolt of Saturninus in the Eaft;

Notwithstanding the vigilance and activity of Probus, it was almost impossible that he could at once contain in obedience every part of his wide extended dominions. The barbarians who broke their chains, had feized the favourable opportunity of a domestic war. When the emperor marched to the relief of Gaul, he devolved the command of the East, on Saturninus. That general, a man of merit and experience, was driven into rebellion by the absence of his sovereign, the levity of the Alexandrian people, the pressing inflances of his friends, and his own fears; but from the moment of his elevation, he never entertained a hope of empire, or even of life. "Alas!" he faid, "the republic has loft a ufeful fervant, " and the rashness of an hour has destroyed the services of many " years. You know not," continued he, " the mifery of fovereign " power; a fword is perpetually fuspended over our head. We " dread our very guards, we distrust our companions. The choice " of action or of repose is no longer in our disposition, nor is there " any age, or character, or conduct, that can protect us from the cen-" fure of envy. In thus exalting me to the throne, you have " doomed me to a life of cares, and to an untimely fate. The only " confolation which remains is, the affurance that I shall not fa!l " alone "." But as the former part of his prediction was verified by the victory, fo the latter was disappointed by the elemency

The unfortunate orator had fludied rhetoric

<sup>50</sup> Panegyr. Vet. v. 18. Zofimus, l. i. at Carthage, and was therefore more probably a Moor (Zosim. l. i. p. 60.) than a Gaul, p. 66. 51 Vopifcus in Hift. August. p. 245, 246. as Vopifcus calls him.

of Probus. That amiable prince attempted even to fave the un- C HAP. happy Saturninus from the fury of the foldiers. He had more than once folicited the usurper himself, to place some confidence in the mercy of a fovereign who so highly esteemed his character, that A. D. 279. he had punished, as a malicious informer, the first who related the improbable news of his defection 52. Saturninus might, perhaps, have embraced the generous offer, had he not been restrained by the obstinate distrust of his adherents. Their guilt was deeper, and their hopes more fanguine, than those of their experienced leader.

The revolt of Saturninus was feareely extinguished in the East, A. D. 280. before new troubles were excited in the West, by the rebellion of Bonosus and Proculus of Bonofus and Proculus, in Gaul. The most distinguished merit in Gaul. of those two officers was their respective prowess, of the one in the combats of Bacchus, of the other in those of Venus 53; yet neither of them were deflitute of courage and capacity, and both fuftained, with honour, the august character which the fear of punishment had engaged them to affume, till they funk at length beneath the fuperior genius of Probus. He used the victory with his accustomed moderation, and spared the fortunes as well as the lives of their innocent families 54.

The arms of Probus had now suppressed all the foreign and do- A.D. 281. mestic enemies of the state. His mild but steady administration confirmed the re-establishment of the public tranquillity; nor was there left in the provinces a hostile barbarian, a tyrant, or even a robber, to revive the memory of past diforders. It was time that the emperor should revisit Rome, and celebrate his own glory and the prowefs of Proculus. He had taken one hundred Sarmatian virgins. The rest of the flory he must relate in his own language; Ex his una nocte decem inivi : omnes tamen, quod in me erat, mulieres intra dies quindecem reddidi. Vopiscus in Hist. August. p. 246.

Triumph of Probus.

<sup>51</sup> Zonaras, 1. xii. p. 638.

<sup>54</sup> Proculus, who was a native of Albengue 53 A very furprifing inflance is recorded of on the Genoese coast, armed two thousand of his own flaves. His riches were great, but they were acquired by robbery. It was afterwards a faying of his family, Nec latrones esse, nec principes sibi placere. Vopiscus in Hift. August. p. 247.

CHAF. the general happiness. The triumph due to the valour of Probus was conducted with a magnificence fuitable to his fortune, and the people who had fo lately admired the trophies of Aurelian, gazed with equal pleasure on those of his heroic successor 55. We cannot, on this occasion, forget the desperate courage of about fourscore Gladiators, referved with near fix hundred others, for the inhuman sports of the amphitheatre. Disdaining to shed their blood for the amusement of the populace, they killed their keepers, broke from the place of their confinement, and filled the streets of Rome with blood and confusion. After an obstinate resistance they were overpowered and cut in pieces by the regular forces; but they obtained at least an honourable death, and the satisfaction of a just revenge 56.

His difcipline.

The military discipline which reigned in the camps of Probus, was less cruel than that of Aurelian, but it was equally rigid and exact. The latter had punished the irregularities of the foldiers with unrelenting feverity, the former prevented them by employing the legions in constant and useful labours. When Probus commanded in Egypt, he executed many confiderable works for the fplendour and benefit of that rich country. The navigation of the Nile, fo important to Rome itself, was improved; and temples, bridges, porticoes, and palaces, were constructed by the hands of the foldiers, who acted by turns as architects, as engineers, and as husbandmen 57. It was reported of Hannibal, that, in order to preferve his troops from the dangerous temptations of idlenefs, he had obliged them to form large plantations of olive trees along the coast of Africa 58. From a fimilar principle, Probus exercised his legions in covering, with rich vineyards, the hills of Gaul and

8

Pannonia.

<sup>55</sup> Hift. August. p. 240. 56 Zofim. 1. i. p. 66.

<sup>57</sup> Hift. August. p. 236.

<sup>58</sup> Aurel. Victor in Prob. But the policy of five, and immediately loft his army in the Hannibal, unnoticed by any more ancient decifive battle of Zama. Livius, xxx. 37.

writer, is irreconcilable with the history of his life. He left Africa when he was nine years old; returned to it when he was forty-

Pannonia, and two confiderable spots are described, which were CHAP. entirely dug and planted by military labour 59. One of these, known under the name of Mount Almo, was fituated near Sirmium, the country where Probus was born, for which he ever retained a partial affection, and whose gratitude he endeavoured to secure, by converting into tillage a large and unhealthy tract of marthy ground. An army thus employed, conflituted perhaps the most useful, as well as the braveft, portion of Roman subjects.

But in the profecution of a favourite scheme, the best of men, sa- His death. tisfied with the rectitude of their intentions, are fubiect to forget the bounds of moderation; nor did Probus himself sufficiently consult the patience and disposition of his fierce legionaries 60. The dangers of the military profession seem only to be compensated by a life of pleasure and idleness; but if the duties of the soldier are inceffantly aggravated by the labours of the peafant, he will at last fink under the intolerable burden, or shake it off with indignation. The imprudence of Probus is faid to have inflamed the discontent of his troops. More attentive to the interests of mankind than to those of the army, he expressed the vain hope, that, by the establishment of universal peace, he should soon abolish the necessity of a flanding and mercenary force 61. The unguarded expressions proved fatal to him. In one of the hottest days of summer, as he feverely urged the unwholesome labour of draining the marshes of Sirmium, the foldiers, impatient of fatigue, on a fudden threw down their tools, grasped their arms, and broke out into a furious mutiny. The emperor, conscious of his danger, took refuge in a lofty tower, constructed for the purpose of surveying the progress

<sup>59</sup> Hift. August. p. 240. Eutrop. ix. 17. Aurel. Victor. in Prob. Victor Junior. He revoked the prohibition of Domitian, and granted a general permission of planting vines to the Gauls, the Britons, and the Pannonians.

<sup>60</sup> Julian bestows a severe, and indeed excessive, censure on the rigour of Probus, who, as he thinks, almost deserved his fate.

<sup>61</sup> Vopifcus in Hift. August. p. 241. Helavishes on this idle hope a large stock of very foolish eloquence.

A. D. 282. August.

CHAP. of the work 62. The tower was instantly forced, and a thousand fwords were plunged at once into the bosom of the unfortunate Probus. The rage of the troops fubfided as foon as it had been gratified. They then lamented their fatal rashness, forgot the severity of the emperor, whom they had massacred, and hastened to perpetuate, by an honourable monument, the memory of his virtues and victories 63.

Election and character of Carus.

When the legions had indulged their grief and repentance for the death of Probus, their unanimous confent declared Carus, his Prætorian præfect, the most deserving of the Imperial throne. Every circumstance that relates to this prince appears of a mixed and doubtful nature. He gloried in the title of Roman Citizen; and affected to compare the purity of his blood, with the foreign and even barbarous origin of the preceding emperors; yet the most inquifitive of his contemporaries, very far from admitting his claim, have variously deduced his own birth, or that of his parents, from Illyricum, from Gaul, or from Africa 64. Though a foldier, he had received a learned education; though a fenator, he was invefted with the first dignity of the army; and in an age, when the civil and military professions began to be irrecoverably separated from each other, they were united in the person of Carus. Notwithflanding the fevere justice which he exercised against the assassins of Probus, to whose favour and esteem he was highly indebted, he could not escape the suspicion of being accessary to a deed from whence he derived the principal advantage. He enjoyed, at least before his elevation, an acknowledged character of virtue and 62 Turris ferrata. It feems to have been a founded by Eutropius with the more famous city of that name in Gaul. His father might 63 Probus, et vere probus fitus est : Victor be an African, and his mother a noble Roomnium gentium Barbararum: victor etiam man. Carus himself was educated in the capital. See Scaliger Animadversion. ad moveable tower, and cafed with iron.

tyrannorum.

<sup>64</sup> Yet all this may be conciliated. He Euseb. Chron. p. 241. awas born at Narbonne, in Illyricum, con-abilities 65; but his austere temper insensibly degenerated into CHAP. moroseness and cruelty; and the imperfect writers of his life almost hesitate whether they shall not rank him in the number of Roman tyrants 66. When Carus assumed the purple, he was about fixty years of age, and his two fons Carinus and Numerian had already attained the feafon of manhood 67.

The authority of the fenate expired with Probus; nor was the The fentirepentance of the foldiers displayed by the same dutiful regard for senate and the civil power, which they had testified after the unfortunate death of Aurelian. The election of Carus was decided without expecting the approbation of the fenate, and the new emperor contented himfelf with announcing, in a cold and flately epiftle, that he had ascended the vacant throne 68. A behaviour so very opposite to that of his amiable predeceffor, afforded no favourable prefage of the new reign; and the Romans, deprived of power and freedom, afferted their privilege of licentious murmurs 69. The voice of congratulation and flattery was not however filent; and we may still peruse, with pleasure and contempt, an eclogue, which was composed on the accession of the emperor Carus. Two shepherds, avoiding the noon-tide heat, retire into the cave of Faunus. On a fpreading beech they discover some recent characters. The rural deity had described, in prophetic verses, the felicity promised to the empire, under the reign of fo great a prince. Faunus hails the approach of that hero, who, receiving on his shoulders the finking weight of the authority of that ignorant Greek is very flight. He ridiculously derives from Carus, the city of Carrhæ, and the province of Caria, the latter of which is mentioned by Homer.

<sup>65</sup> Probus had requested of the fenate an equestrian statue, and a marble palace, at the public expence, as a just recompence of the fingular merit of Carus. Vopifcus in 'Hift. August. p. 249.

<sup>66</sup> Vopiscus in Hist. August. p. 242. 249. Julian excludes the emperor Carus and both his fons from the hanquet of the Casfars.

<sup>67</sup> John Malcla, tom. i. p. 401. But the

<sup>68</sup> Hift. August, p. 249. Carus congratulated the fenate, that one of their own order was made emperor.

<sup>69</sup> Hift. August. p. 242.

CHAP.

Carus defeats the Sarmatians, and marches into the East;

Roman world, shall extinguish war and faction, and once again restore the innocence and security of the golden age 70.

It is more than probable that these elegant trifles never reached the ears of a veteran general, who, with the confent of the legions, was preparing to execute the long fuspended design of the Persian war. Before his departure for this distant expedition, Carus conferred on his two fons, Carinus and Numerian, the title of Casfar, and invefling the former with almost an equal share of the Imperial power, directed the young prince, first to suppress some troubles which had arisen in Gaul, and afterwards to fix the feat of his residence at Rome, and to assume the government of the western provinces 71. The fafety of Illyricum was confirmed by a memorable defeat of the Sarmatians; fixteen thousand of those barbarians remained on the field of battle, and the number of captives amounted to twenty thousand. The old emperor, animated with the fame and prospect of victory, pursued his march, in the midst of winter, through the countries of Thrace and Afia Minor, and at length, with his younger fon Numerian, arrived on the confines of the Persian monarchy. There, encamping on the summit of a lofty mountain, he pointed out to his troops the opulence and luxury of the enemy whom they were about to invade.

A. D. 283. he gives audience to the Perfian am-

The fucceffor of Artaxerxes, Varanes or Bahram, though he had fubdued the Segestans, one of the most warlike nations of Upper Afia 72, was alarmed at the approach of the Romans, and endeavoured to retard their progress by a negociation of peace. His ambaffadors entered the camp about fun-fet, at the time when the troops were fatisfying their hunger with a frugal repast.

Perfians

defign of it is preferred by Fontenelle, to that his fayings in the Bibliotheque Orientale of of Virgil's Pollio. See tom. iii. p. 148.

<sup>72</sup> Hift. August. p. 353. Eutropius, ix. 18. nity includes all other virtues." Pagi, Annal.

<sup>70</sup> See the first ecloque of Calphurnius. The 72 Agathias, Liv. p. 135. We find one of M. d'Herbelot. " The definition of huma-Perfians expressed their defire of being introduced to the presence of CHAP. the Roman emperor. They were at length conducted to a foldier, who was feated on the grafs. A piece of stale bacon and a few hard peafe composed his supper. A coarse woollen garment of purple was the only circumftance that announced his dignity. The conference was conducted with the fame difregard of courtly elegance. Carus, taking off a cap which he wore to conceal his baldness, asfured the ambaffadors, that, unless their mafter acknowledged the fuperiority of Rome, he would fpeedily render Perlia as naked of trees, as his own head was destitute of hair ". Notwithstanding fome traces of art and preparation, we may discover in this scene the manners of Carus, and the fevere fimplicity which the martial princes, who fucceeded Gallienus, had already reflored in the Roman eamps. The ministers of the great king trembled and retired.

The threats of Carus were not without effect. He ravaged His victories Mesopotamia, cut in pieces whatever opposed his passage, made dinary death, himself master of the great cities of Seleucia and Ctesiphon (which feem to have furrendered without refistance), and carried his victorious arms beyond the Tigris 74. He had feized the favourable moment for an invasion. The Persian councils were distracted by domestic factions, and the greater part of their forces were detained on the frontiers of India. Rome and the East received with transport the news of fuch important advantages. Flattery and hope painted, in the most lively colours, the fall of Persia, the conquest of Arabia, the fubmission of Egypt, and a lasting deliverance from the inroads of the Scythian nations 75. But the reign of Carus was destined to expose the vanity of predictions. They were fearcely uttered A. D. 283.

<sup>71</sup> Synefius tells this flory of Carinus; and it is much more natural to understand it of the dialogue of the Philopatris, which has so Carus, than (as Petavius and Tillemont chuse to do) of Probus.

<sup>74</sup> Vopiscus in Hist. August. p. 250. Eu- nion, would require a differtation. tropius, ix. 18. The two Victors.

<sup>75</sup> To the Perfian victory of Carus, I refer long been an object of dispute among the learned. But to explain and justify my opi-

C H A P. before they were contradicted by his death; an event attended with fuch ambiguous circumstances, that it may best be related in a letter from his own fecretary to the præfect of the city. "Carus," fays he, "our dearest emperor, was confined by fickness to his bed, " when a furious tempest arose in the camp. The darkness which " overspread the sky was so thick, that we could no longer dif-" tinguish each other; and the incessant flashes of lightning took " from us the knowledge of all that passed in the general confusion. " Immediately after the most violent clap of thunder, we heard a " fudden cry, that the emperor was dead; and it foon appeared, " that his chamberlains, in a rage of grief, had fet fire to the royal " pavillion, a circumstance which gave rise to the report that Carus " was killed by lightning. But as far as we have been able to in-" vefligate the truth, his death was the natural effect of his diforder 76,"

He is fucceeded by his two fons Carinus and Numerian.

The vacancy of the throne was not productive of any diffurbance. The ambition of the afpiring generals was checked by their mutual fears, and young Numerian, with his absent brother Carinus, were unanimously acknowledged as Roman emperors. The public expected that the fuccessor of Carus would pursue his father's footfleps, and, without allowing the Persians to recover from their consternation, would advance fword in hand to the palaces of Susa and But the legions, however strong in numbers and difcipline, were difmayed by the most abject superstition. Notwithstanding all the arts that were practifed to disguise the manner of the late emperor's death, it was found impossible to remove the opinion of the multitude, and the power of opinion is irrefiftible. Places or perfons flruck with lightning were confidered by the ancients with pious horror, as fingularly devoted to the wrath of Heaven 78. An CHAP. oracle was remembered, which marked the river Tigris as the fatal boundary of the Roman arms. The troops, terrified with the fate of Carus and with their own danger, called aloud on young Numerian to obey the will of the gods, and to lead them away from this inauspicious scene of war. The feeble emperor was unable to fubdue their obstinate prejudice, and the Persians wondered at the unexpected retreat of a victorious enemy 79.

<sup>76</sup> Hift. August. p. 250. 1ct Battern., Festus, Rusus, the two Vistors, Jerome, Sining. Supposition, and Zona- 77 See Nemessan. Cynegeticon, v. 71, &c. 76 Hist. August. p. 250. Yet Eutropius, ras, all ascribe the death of Carus to light-

Vices of Ca-

The intelligence of the mysterious fate of the late emperor, was A. D. 284. foon carried from the frontiers of Persia to Rome; and the senate, rinus, as well as the provinces, congratulated the accession of the sons of Carus. These fortunate youths were strangers, however, to that confeious superiority either of birth or of merit, which can alone render the possession of a throne easy, and as it were natural. Born and educated in a private station, the election of their father raised them at once to the rank of princes; and his death, which happened about fixteen months afterwards, left them the unexpected legacy of a vaft empire. To fustain with temper this rapid elevation, an uncommon share of virtue and prudence was requisite; and Carinus, the elder of the brothers, was more than commonly deficient in those qualities. In the Gallic war, he discovered some degree of personal courage so; but from the moment of his arrival at Rome, he abandoned himself to the luxury of the capital, and to the abuse of his fortune. He was foft yet cruel; devoted to pleasure, but destitute of tafte; and though exquifitely susceptible of vanity, indifferent to the public efteem. In the course of a few months, he successively married and divorced nine wives, most of whom he left pregnant; and notwithstanding this legal inconstancy, found time to indulgeword Scribonianum. Places ftruck with lightning, were furrounded with a wall: things were buried with mysterious ceremony.

<sup>79</sup> Vopiscus in Hist. August. p. 250. Au-

<sup>78</sup> See Festus and his commentators, on the relius Victor seems to believe the prediction, and to approve the retreat.

to Nemesian. Cynegeticon, v. 69. He was a contemporary, but a poet.

C H A P. fuch a variety of irregular appetite, as brought dishonour on himself and on the noblest houses of Rome. He beheld with inveterate hatred all those who might remember his former obscurity, or censure his prefent conduct. He banished, or put to death, the friends and counfellors whom his father had placed about him, to guide his inexperienced youth; and he perfecuted with the meanest revenge his schoolfellows and companions, who had not fufficiently respected the latent majesty of the emperor. With the fenators, Carinus affected a lofty and regal demeanour, frequently declaring, that he defigned to diftribute their estates among the populace of Rome. From the dregs of that populace, he felected his favourites, and even his ministers. The palace, and even the Imperial table, was filled with fingers, dancers, profitutes, and all the various retinue of vice and folly. One of his door-keepers 81 he intrusted with the government of the city. In the room of the Prætorian præfect, whom he put to death, Carinus fubstituted one of the ministers of his loofer pleasures. Another who possessed the same, or even a more infamous, title to favour, was invested with the confulship. A confidential fecretary, who had acquired uncommon skill in the art of forgery, delivered the indolent emperor, with his own confent, from the irkfome duty of figning his name.

> When the emperor Carus undertook the Persian war, he was induced, by motives of affection as well as policy, to fecure the fortunes of his family, by leaving in the hands of his eldest fon the armies and provinces of the West. The intelligence which he foon received of the conduct of Carinus, filled him with shame and regret; nor had he concealed his refolution of fatisfying the republic by a fevere act of justice, and of adopting, in the place of an unworthy fon, the brave and virtuous Constantius, who at that time was governor of Dalmatia. But the elevation of Constantius was CHAP. for a while deferred; and as foon as a father's death had releafed -Carinus from the control of fear or decency, he displayed to the Romans the extravagancies of Elagabalus, aggravated by the cruelty of Domitian 82.

<sup>81</sup> Cancellarius. This word, fo humble in monarchies of Europe. See Cafaubon and its origin, has by a fingular fortune rofe into Salmafius, ad Hift. August. p. 253. the title of the first great office of state in the

The only merit of the administration of Carinus that history Hecelebrates the Roman could record or poetry celebrate, was the uncommon splendour with games. which, in his own and his brother's name, he exhibited the Roman games of the theatre, the circus, and the amphitheatre. More than twenty years afterwards, when the courtiers of Diocletian reprefented to their frugal fovereign the fame and popularity of his munificent predecessor, he acknowledged, that the reign of Carinus had indeed been a reign of pleasure 83. But this vain prodigality, which the prudence of Diocletian might juftly despife, was enjoyed with furprise and transport by the Roman people. The oldest of the citizens, recollecting the spectacles of former days, the triumphal pomp of Probus or Aurelian, and the fecular games of the emperor Philip, acknowledged that they were all furpaffed by the fuperior magnificence of Carinus 84.

The spectacles of Carinus may therefore be best illustrated by the Spectacles of observation of some particulars, which history has condescended to relate concerning those of his predecessors. If we confine ourselves folely to the hunting of wild beafts, however we may cenfure the vanity of the defign or the cruelty of the execution, we are obliged to confess, that neither before nor fince the time of the Romans, fo much art and expence have ever been lavished for the amuse-

Eutropius, ix. 19. Victor Junior. The obvious, and the words were often confounded reign of Diocletian indeed was so long and E+ See Calphurnius. Eclog. vii. 42. We

<sup>13</sup> Vopiscus in Hist. August. p. 254. He by the historian.

<sup>82</sup> Vopiscus in Hist. August. p. 253, 254. calls him Carus, but the sense is sufficiently

<sup>84</sup> See Calphurnius. Eclog. vii. 43. We prosperous, that it must have been very un- may observe, that the spectacles of Probus favourable to the reputation of Carinus. were still recent, and that the poet is seconded

CHAP. ment of the people 85. By the order of Probus, a great quantity of large trees, torn up by the roots, were transplanted into the midst of the circus. The spacious and shady forest was immediately filled with a thousand offriches, a thousand stags, a thousand fallow deer, and a thousand wild boars; and all this variety of game was abandoned to the riotous impetuofity of the multitude. The tragedy of the fucceeding day confifted in the maffacre of an hundred lions, an equal number of lionesses, two hundred leopards, and three hundred bears 86. The collection prepared by the younger Gordian for his triumph, and which his fucceffor exhibited in the fecular games, was less remarkable by the number than by the fingularity of the animals. Twenty zebras displayed their elegant forms and variegated beauty to the eyes of the Roman people 87. Ten elks, and as many camelopards, the loftiest and most harmless creatures that wander over the plains of Sarmatia and Æthiopia, were contrasted with thirty African hyanas, and ten Indian tygers, the most implacable favages of the torrid zone. The unoffending strength with which Nature has endowed the greater quadrupedes, was admired in the rhinoceros, the hippopotamus of the Nile 88, and a majestic troop of thirty-two elephants 89. While the populace gazed with flupid wonder on the splendid show, the naturalist might indeed obferve the figure and properties of fo many different species, transported from every part of the ancient world into the amphitheatre

<sup>25</sup> The philosopher Montaigne (Essais, 1. iii. 6.) gives a very just and lively view of Roman magnificence in these spectacles.

<sup>16</sup> Vopiscus in Hist. August. p. 240.

<sup>87</sup> They are called Onagri; but the number is too inconfiderable for mere wild-affes. Cuper (de Elephantis Exercitat. ii. 7.) has proved from Oppian, Dion, and an anonymous Greek, that zebras had been feen at Rome. They were brought from fome island of the ocean, perhaps Madagafcar.

<sup>85</sup> Carinus gave an hipporotamus (sce Calphurn. Eclog. vii. 66). In the latter spectacles, I do not recollect any crocodiles, of which Augustus once exhibited thirty-fix. Dion Cassius, 1. lv. p. 781.

<sup>89</sup> Capitolin, in Hift. August. p. 164, 165. We are not acquainted with the animals whom he calls archeleontes, some read argoleontes, others agrioleontes: both corrections are very nugatory.

of Rome. But this accidental benefit, which science might derive CHAP. from folly, is furely infufficient to justify fuch a wanton abuse of the public riches. There occurs, however, a fingle instance in the first Punic war, in which the fenate wifely connected this amusement of the multitude with the interest of the state. A considerable number of elephants, taken in the defeat of the Carthaginian army, were driven through the circus by a few flaves, armed only with blunt javelins 9°. The ufeful spectacle served to impress the Roman foldier with a just contempt for those unwieldy animals; and he no longer dreaded to encounter them in the ranks of war.

The hunting or exhibition of wild beafts, was conducted with a The amphimagnificence fuitable to a people who flyled themselves the masters theatre. of the world; nor was the edifice appropriated to that entertainment less expressive of Roman greatness. Posterity admires, and will long admire, the awful remains of the amphitheatre of Titus, which fo well deferved the epithet of Colossal 91. It was a building of an elliptic figure, five hundred and fixty-four feet in length, and four hundred and fixty-feven in breadth, founded on fourfcore arches, and rifing, with four fuccessive orders of architecture to the height of one hundred and forty feet 92. The outfide of the edifice was encrufted with marble, and decorated with flatues. The flopes of the vast concave, which formed the inside, were filled and furrounded with fixty or eighty rows of feats of marble likewife, covered with cushions, and capable of receiving with ease above fourscore thousand spectators 93. Sixty-four vomitories (for by that name much exaggerated by the ancients. It reached almost to the heavens, according to Calphurnius (Eclog. vii. 23.), and surpassed the ken mainder were contained in the upper covered of human fight, according to Ammianus Mar- galleries.

<sup>9&</sup>gt; Plin. Hist. Natur. viii. 6. from the an- cellinus (xvi. 10.). Yet how trifling to the nals of Pifo.

<sup>9</sup>º See Maffei, Verona Illustrata, P. iv.

great pyramid of Egypt, which rifes 500 feet perpendicular.

<sup>93</sup> According to different copies of Victor, 92 Maffei, l. ii. c. 2. The height was very we read 77,000, or 87,000 spectators; but Maffei (l. ii. c. 12.) finds room on the open feats for no more than 34,000. The re-

CHAP. the doors were very aptly diffinguished) poured forth the immenss multitude; and the entrances, passages, and stair-cases, were contrived with fuch exquisite skill, that each person, whether of the fenatorial, the equestrian, or the plebeian order, arrived at his deftined place without trouble or confusion 94. Nothing was omitted which, in any respect, could be subservient to the convenience and pleasure of the spectators. They were protected from the sun and rain by an ample canopy, occasionally drawn over their heads. The air was continually refreshed by the playing of fountains, and profufely impregnated by the grateful fcent of aromatics. In the centre of the edifice, the arena, or flage, was strewed with the finest fand, and fucceffively affumed the most different forms. At one moment it seemed to rise out of the earth, like the garden of the Hesperides, and was afterwards broken into the rocks and caverns of Thrace. The fubterraneous pipes conveyed an inexhaustible supply of water; and what had just before appeared a level plain, might be fuddenly converted into a wide lake, covered with armed veffels. and replenished with the monsters of the deep 95. In the decoration of these scenes, the Roman emperors displayed their wealth and liberality; and we read on various occasions, that the whole furniture of the amphitheatre confifted either of filver, or of gold, or of amber 96. The poet who describes the games of Carinus, in the character of a shepherd attracted to the capital by the same of their magnificence, affirms, that the nets defigned as a defence against the wild beafts, were of gold wire; that the porticos were gilded, and that the belt or circle which divided the feveral ranks of spectators from the very difficult fubject with all possible clearness, and like an archited, as well as an antiquarian.

<sup>95</sup> Calphurn. Eclog. vii. 64. 73. Thefe lines are curious, and the whole Eclogue has been of infinite use to Maffei. Calphurnius, <sup>94</sup> See Maffel, 1. ii. c. 5-12. He treats as well as Martial, (fee his first book) was a poet, but when they described the amphitheatre, they both wrote from their own fenses, and to those of the Romans.

<sup>56</sup> Confult Plin, Hift, Natur. xxxiii. 16... xxxvii. 11.

each other, was fludded with a precious Mosaic of beautiful C. HAP. ftones 97

XII.

Sept. 12.

In the midst of this glittering pageantry, the emperor Carinus, A. D. 284, fecure of his fortune, enjoyed the acclamations of the people, the flattery of his courtiers, and the fongs of the poets, who, for want of a more effential merit, were reduced to celebrate the divine graces of his person 98. In the same hour, but at the distance of nine hundred miles from Rome, his brother expired; and a fudden revolution transferred into the hands of a stranger the sceptre of the house of Carus 99.

The fons of Carus never faw each other after their father's death. Return of The arrangements which their new fituation required, were proba-with the bly deferred till the return of the younger brother to Rome, where Perfia, a triumph was decreed to the young emperors, for the glorious fuccess of the Persian war 100. It is uncertain whether they intended to divide between them the administration, or the provinces, of the empire; but it is very unlikely that their union would have proved of any long duration. The jealoufy of power must have been inflamed by the opposition of characters. In the most corrupt of times, Carinus was unworthy to live: Numerian deserved to reign in a happier period. His affable manners and gentle virtues fecured him, as foon as they became known, the regard and affections of the public. He possessed the elegant accomplishments of a poet and orator, which dignify as well as adorn the humblest and the most exalted station. His eloquence, however it was applauded by the fenate, was formed not fo much on the model of Cicero, as on that i. p. 403.

<sup>97</sup> Balteus en gemmis, en inlita porticus auro certatim radiant, &c. Calphurn. vii. 98 Et Martis vultus et Apollinis esse putavi, fays Calphurnius; but John Malela, who had perhaps feen pictures of Carinus, deferibes him as thick, fhort, and white, tom.

<sup>99</sup> With regard to the time when these Roman games were celebrated, Scaliger, Salmafitis, and Cuper, have given themselves a great deal of trouble to perplex a very clear fubiect.

<sup>100</sup> Nemelianus (in the Cynegeticons) feems to anticipate in his fancy that auspicious day.

CHAP. of the modern declaimers; but in an age very far from being destitute of poetical merit, he contended for the prize with the most celebrated of his contemporaries, and still remained the friend of his rivals; a circumstance which evinces either the goodness of his heart, or the fuperiority of his genius tot. But the talents of Numerian were rather of the contemplative, than of the active kind. When his father's elevation reluctantly forced him from the shade of retirement, neither his temper nor his pursuits had qualified him for the command of armies. His constitution was destroyed by the hardships of the Persian war; and he had contracted, from the heat of the climate 102, fuch a weakness in his eyes, as obliged him, in the course of a long retreat, to confine himself to the solitude and darkness of a tent or litter. The administration of all affairs, civil as well as military, was devolved on Arrius Aper, the Prætorian præfect, who, to the power of his important office, added the honour of being father-in-law to Numerian. The Imperial pavilion was frictly guarded by his most trufty adherents; and during many days, Aper delivered to the army the supposed mandates of their invisible sovereign "3.

Death of Numerian.

It was not till eight months after the death of Carus, that the Roman army, returning by flow marches from the banks of the Tigris, arrived on those of the Thracian Bosphorus. The legions halted at Chalcedon in Asia, while the court passed over to Heraclea, on the European fide of the Propontis 104. But a report foon circulated through the camp, at first in secret whispers, and at incessantly weeping for his father's death. 103 In the Perfian war, Aper was suspected of a defign to betray Carus. Hift. August.

<sup>101</sup> He won all the crowns from Nemesianus, with whom he vied in didactic poetry. The fenate erected a statue to the fon of Carus, with a very ambiguous inscription, "To the most powerful of orators," See Vopiscus in Hift. August. p. 251.

<sup>102</sup> A more natural cause at least, than that affigned by Vopifcus, (Hift. August. p. 251.)

<sup>104</sup> We are obliged to the Alexandrian Chronicle, p. 274, for the knowledge of the time and place where Diocletian was elected emperor.

421

length in loud clamours, of the emperor's death, and of the pre- CHAP. fumption of his ambitious minister, who still exercised the sovereign power in the name of a prince who was no more. The impatience of the foldiers could not long support a state of suspense. With rude curiofity they broke into the Imperial tent, and difcovered only the corpse of Numerian 105. The gradual decline of his health might have induced them to believe that his death was natural; but the concealment was interpreted as an evidence of guilt, and the measures which Aper had taken to secure his election. became the immediate occasion of his ruin. Yet, even in the transport of their rage and grief, the troops observed a regular proceeding, which proves how firmly discipline had been re-established by the martial fuccessors of Gallienus. A general assembly of the army was appointed to be held at Chalcedon, whether Aper was transported in chains, as a prisoner and a criminal. A vacant tribunal was erected in the midst of the camp, and the generals and tribunes formed a great military council. They foon announced to A. D. 284, the multitude, that their choice had fallen on Diocletian, com- Election of mander of the domestics or body-guards, as the person the most the emperor Diocletian. capable of revenging and fucceeding their beloved emperor. The future fortunes of the candidate depended on the chance or conduct of the prefent hour. Conscious that the Sation which he had filled, exposed him to fome fuspicions, Diocletian ascended the tribunal, and raifing his eyes towards the Sun, made a folemn profession of his own innocence, in the presence of that all-seeing Deity 106. Then, assuming the tone of a sovereign and a judge, he commanded that Aper should be brought in chains to the foot of the tribunal. "This man," faid he, "is the murderer of Numerian:"

F 165 Hift. August. p. 251. Eutrop. ix. 18. Could no aromatics be found in the Impe-Hieronym. in Chron. According to these rial household? judicious writers, the death of Numerian was 106 Aurel. Victor. Eutropius, ix. 20. Hie-discovered by the stench of his dead body. ronym. in Chron.

C H A P. and, without giving him time to enter on a dangerous justification, drew his fword, and buried it in the breaft of the unfortunate præfect. A charge supported by such decisive proof, was admitted without contradiction, and the legions, with repeated acclamations, acknowledged the justice and authority of the emperor Diocletian 107.

Defeat and death of Carinus.

Before we enter upon the memorable reign of that prince, it will be proper to punish and dismiss the unworthy brother of Numerian. Carinus possessed arms and treasures sufficient to support his legal title to the empire. But his personal vices overbalanced every advantage of birth and fituation. The most faithful fervants of the father despifed the incapacity, and dreaded the cruel arrogance, of the fon. The hearts of the people were engaged in favour of his rival, and even the fenate was inclined to prefer an usurper to a tyrant. The arts of Diocletian inflamed the general discontent; and the winter was employed in fecret intrigues, and open preparations for a civil war. In the fpring, the forces of the East and of the West encountered each other in the plains of Margus, a fmall city of Mæsia, in the neighbourhood of the Danube 108. The troops, so lately returned from the Persian war, had acquired their glory at the expence of health and numbers, nor were they in a condition to contend with the unexhausted strength of the legions of Europe. Their ranks were broken, and, for a moment, Diocletian despaired of the purple and of life. But the advantage which Carinus had obtained by the valour of his foldiers, he quickly loft by the infidelity of his officers. A Tribune, whose wife he had seduced, seized the opportunity of revenge, and by a single blow extinguished civil discord in the blood of the adulterer 109.

A. D. 285. May.

as foolish as they are well known.

<sup>.10</sup> Eutropius marks its fituation very ac-

<sup>107</sup> Vopifeus in Hift. August. p. 252. The and Viminiacum. M. Danville (Geograreason why Diocletian killed Aper, (a wild phie Ancienne, tom. i. p. 304.) places Marboar) was founded on a prophecy and a pun, gus at Kastolatz in Servia, a little below Belgrade and Semendria.

<sup>109</sup> Hift. August. p. 254. Eutropius, ix. 20. curately; it was between the Mons Aureus Aurelius Victor. Victor in Epitome.

CHAP. XIII.

The reign of Diocletian and his three affociates, Maximian, Galerius, and Constantius.—General re-establishment of order and tranquillity.—The Persian war, victory, and triumph.—The new form of administration.—Abdication and retirement of Diocletian and Maximian.

S the reign of Diocletian was more illustrious than that of any CHAP. of his predecessors, so was his birth more abject and obscure. The strong claims of merit and of violence had frequently superfeded Elevation the ideal prerogatives of nobility; but a diffinct line of feparation of Dioclewas hitherto preserved between the free and the servile part of man- A. D. 285. kind. The parents of Diocletian had been flaves in the house of Anulinus, a Roman fenator; nor was he himself distinguished by any other name, than that which he derived from a small town in Dalmatia, from whence his mother deduced her origin. It is, however, probable, that his father obtained the freedom of the family, and that he foon acquired an office of fcribe, which was commonly exercifed by persons of his condition 2. Favourable oracles, or rather the consciousness of superiour merit, prompted his aspiring son to purfue the profession of arms and the hopes of fortune; and it would be extremely curious to observe the gradation of arts and accidents which enabled him in the end to fulfil those oracles, town feems to have been properly called Do- He likewife assumed the Patrician name of clia, from a fmall tribe of Illyrians; (see Valerius, and it is usually given him by Au-

<sup>1</sup> Eutrop. ix. 19. Victor in Epitom. The length to the Roman majefly of Diocletianus. Cellarius, Geograph. Antiqua, tom. i. p.393.) relius Victor. and the original name of the fortunate flave to the Grecian harmony of Diocles, and at Vit. Eumen. c. 1.

<sup>2</sup> See Dacier on the fixth fatire of the fowas probably Docles; he first lengthened it cond book of Horace. Cornel. Nepos, in

C H A P. and to display that merit to the world. Diocletian was successively promoted to the government of Mæsia, the honours of the consulthip, and the important command of the guards of the palace. He diffinguished his abilities in the Persian war; and, after the death of Numerian, the flave, by the confession and judgment of his rivals, was declared the most worthy of the Imperial throne. The malice of religious zeal, whilst it arraigns the savage fierceness of his colleague Maximian, has affected to cast suspicions on the personal courage of the emperor Diocletian 3. It would not be eafy to perfuade us of the cowardice of a foldier of fortune, who acquired and preferved the efteem of the legions, as well as the favour of fo many warlike princes. Yet even calumny is fagacious enough to discover and to attack the most vulnerable part. The valour of Diocletian was never found inadequate to his duty or to the occasion; but he appears not to have possessed the daring and generous spirit of a hero, who courts danger and fame, difdains artifice, and boldly challenges the allegiance of his equals. His abilities were useful rather than fplendid; a vigorous mind, improved by the experience and fludy of mankind; dexterity and application in business; a judicious mixture of liberality and occonomy, of mildness and rigour; profound diffimulation under the disguise of military frankness; steadiness to pursue his ends; slexibility to vary his means; and above all the great art of submitting his own passions, as well as those of others, to the interest of his ambition, and of colouring his ambition with the most specious pretences of justice and public utility. Like Augustus, Diocletian may be considered as the founder of a new empire. Like the adopted fon of Cæsar, he was distinguished as a statesman rather than as a warrior; nor did either of those princes employ force, whenever their purpose could be effected C H A P. by policy.

<sup>3</sup> Lactantius (or whoever was the author of c. 7, 8. In Chap. 9, he fays of him, " erat the little treatife De Mortibus Perfecutorum) in omni tumultu meticulofus et animi difaccuses Diocletian of timidity in two places, jectus."

The victory of Diocletian was remarkable for its fingular mild- His clemennefs. A people accustomed to applaud the elemency of the con-cy and victory. queror, if the usual punishments of death, exile, and confiscation were inflicted with any degree of temper and equity, beheld, with the most pleasing astonishment, a civil war, the slames of which were extinguished in the field of battle. Diocletian received into his confidence Aristobulus, the principal minister of the house of Carus, refpected the lives, the fortunes, and the dignity of his adverfaries, and even continued in their respective stations the greater number of the fervants of Carinus 4. It is not improbable that motives of prudence might affift the humanity of the artful Dalmatian; of these fervants, many had purchased his favour by secret treachery; in others, he esteemed their grateful fidelity to an unfortunate master. The discerning judgment of Aurelian, of Probus, and of Carus, had filled the feveral departments of the state and army with officers of approved merit, whose removal would have injured the public fervice, without promoting the interest of the successor. Such a conduct, however, displayed to the Roman world the fairest prospect of the new reign, and the emperor affected to confirm this favourable prepoffession, by declaring, that among all the virtues of his predecessors, he was the most ambitious of imitating the humane philosophy of Marcus Antoninus 5.

The first considerable action of his reign seemed to evince his Affociation fincerity as well as his moderation. After the example of Marcus, and character of Maximian. he gave himself a colleague in the person of Maximian, on whom A.D. 286. April 1.

to convey a just, though indirect, censure of with Carinus. the cruelty of Constantius. It appears from 5 Aurelius Victor styles Diocletian, " Pathe Fasti, that Aristobulus remained præsect rentem potius quam Dominum." See Hist. of the city, and that he ended with Diocle- August. p. 30.

<sup>4</sup> In this encomium, Aurelius Victor feems tian, the confulship which he had commenced

CHAP. he bestowed at first the title of Crefar, and afterwards that of Augustus 6. But the motives of his conduct, as well as the object of his choice, were of a very different nature from those of his admired predeceffor. By investing a luxurious youth with the honours of the purple, Marcus had discharged a debt of private gratitude, at the expence, indeed, of the happiness of the state. By affociating a friend and a fellow-foldier to the labours of government, Diocletian, in a time of public danger, provided for the defence both of the East and of the West. Maximian was born a peafant, and, like Aurelian, in the territory of Sirmium. Ignorant of letters 7, careless of laws, the rusticity of his appearance and manners still betrayed in the most elevated fortune the meannels of his extraction. War was the only art which he professed. In a long course of service, he had distinguished himself on every frontier of the empire; and though his military talents were formed to obey rather than to command, though, perhaps, he never attained the skill of a confummate general, he was capable, by his valour, constancy, and experience, of executing the most arduous undertakings. Nor were the vices of Maximian less useful to his benefactor. Infensible to pity, and fearless of consequences, he was the ready instrument of every act of cruelty which the policy of that artful prince might at once fuggest and disclaim. As soon as a bloody facrifice had been offered to prudence or to revenge, Diocletian, by his feafonable intercession, faved the remaining few whom he had never defigned to punish, gently censured the severity

The question of the time when Maximian negyr. Vet. ii. 8.) Mamertinus expresses a doubt whether his hero, in imitating the conduct of Hannibal and Scipio, had ever heard of their names. From thence we may fairly infer, that Maximian was more defirous of being confidered as a foldier than as a man of letters: and it is in this manner that we can often translate the language of flattery into received the honours of Cæfar and Augustus has divided modern critics, and given occafion to a great deal of learned wrangling. I have followed M. de Tillemont, (Histoire des Empereurs, tom. iv. p. 500-505.) who has weighed the feveral reasons and difficulties with his ferupulous accuracy.

<sup>7</sup> In an oration delivered before him, (Pa- that of truth.

of his stern colleague, and enjoyed the comparison of a golden and CHAP. an iron age, which was univerfally applied to their opposite maxims of government. Notwithstanding the difference of their characters, the two emperors maintained, on the throne, that friendship which they had contracted in a private flation. The haughty turbulent fpirit of Maximian, fo fatal afterwards to himself and to the public peace, was accustomed to respect the genius of Diocletian, and confessed the ascendant of reason over brutal violence 8. From a motive either of pride or fuperstition, the two emperors assumed the titles, the one of Jovius, the other of Herculius. Whilst the motion of the world (fuch was the language of their venal orators) was maintained by the all-feeing wildom of Jupiter, the invincible arm of Hercules purged the earth from monsters and tyrants?

But even the omnipotence of Jovius and Herculius was infufficient to Affociation fustain the weight of the public administration. The prudence of Dio- Castars, Gacletian discovered, that the empire, assailed on every side by the barba- lerius and Constantius. rians, required on every fide the presence of a great army, and of an A.D. 292, March 1, emperor. With this view he refolved once more to divide his unwieldy power, and with the inferior title of Cefars, to confer on two generals of approved merit an equal share of the sovereign authority ". Galerius, furnamed Armentarius, from his original profession of a herdsman, and Constantius, who from his pale complexion had acquired the denomination of Chlorus ", were the two persons

* Lactantius de M. P. c. S. Aurelius Victor. As among the Panegyrics, we find orations pronounced in praise of Maximian, and others which flatter his adversaries at his expence, we derive fome knowledge from the contraft.

<sup>9</sup> See the fecond and third Panegyrics, particularly iii. 3. 10. 14. but it would be tedious to copy the diffuse and affected expresfions of their false eloquence. With regard to the titles, confult Aurel. Victor, Lactan-tius de M. P. c. 52. Spanheim de Usu Numismatum, &c. Differtat. xii. 8.

<sup>19</sup> Aurelius Victor. Victor in Epitome. Eutrop. ix. 22. Lactant. de M. P. c. 8. Hieronym. in Chron.

&quot;It is only among the modern Greeks that Tillemont can discover his appellation of Chlorus. Any remarkable degree of palenels feems inconfiftent with the ruber mentioned in Panegyric. v. 19.

XIII.

CHAP, invested with the second honours of the Imperial purple. In describing the country, extraction, and manners of Herculius, we have already delineated those of Galerius, who was often, and not improperly, flyled the younger Maximian, though, in many inflances both of virtue and ability, he appears to have possessed a manifest fuperiority over the elder. The birth of Constantius was less obscure than that of his colleagues. Eutropius, his father, was one of the most considerable nobles of Dardania, and his mother was the niece of the emperor Claudius 12. Although the youth of Constantius had been spent in arms, he was endowed with a mild and amiable dispofition, and the popular vice had long fince acknowledged him worthy of the rank which he at last attained. To strengthen the bonds of political, by those of domestic union, each of the emperors assumed the character of a father to one of the Cæsars, Diocletian to Galerius, and Maximian to Constantius; and each obliging them to repudiate their former wives, bestowed his daughter in marriage on his adopted fon 13. These four princes distributed among themselves the wide extent of the Roman empire. The defence of Gaul, Spain 14, and Britain, was intrusted to Constantius: Galerius was stationed on the banks of the Danube, as the fafeguard of the Illyrian provinces. Italy and Africa were confidered as the department of Maximian; and for his peculiar portion, Diocletian referved Thrace, Egypt, and the rich countries of Afia. Every one was fovereign within his own jurifdiction; but their united authority extended over the whole monarchy; and each of them was prepared to affift his colleagues with his counfels or presence. The Casfars, in their exalted rank, revered

Departments and harmony of the four princes.

<sup>12</sup> Julian, the grandfon of Constantius, boasts that his family was derived from the warlike Mæsians. Misopogon, p. 348. The Dardanians dwelt on the edge of Mæsia.

<sup>43</sup> Galerius married Valeria, the daughter of Diocletian; if we fpeak with strictness, Theodora, the wife of Conflantius, was daughter only to the wife of Maximian. Spanheim Differtat. xi. 2.

<sup>14</sup> This division agrees with that of the four præfectures; yet there is fome reason to doubt whether Spain was not a province of Maximian. See Tillemont, tom. iv. p. 517, the majefty of the emperors, and the three younger princes in- C H A P. variably acknowledged, by their gratitude and obedience, the common parent of their fortunes. The fuspicious jealousy of power found not any place among them; and the fingular happiness of their union has been compared to a chorus of music, whose harmony was regulated and maintained by the skilful hand of the first artift 15.

This important measure was not carried into execution till about Series of fix years after the affociation of Maximian, and that interval of time had not been destitute of memorable incidents. But we have preferred, for the fake of perspicuity, first to describe the more persect form of Diocletian's government, and afterwards to relate the actions of his reign, following rather the natural order of the events, than the dates of a very doubtful chronology.

The first exploit of Maximian, though it is mentioned in a few A. D. 287. words by our imperfect writers, deserves, from its fingularity, to be recorded in a history of human manners. He suppressed the Gaul. pealants of Gaul, who, under the appellation of Bagaudæ 16, had rifen in a general infurrection; very fimilar to those, which in the fourteenth century successively afflicted both France and England 17. It should feem, that very many of those institutions, referred by an eafy folution to the feudal fystem, are derived from the Celtic barbarians. When Cæfar fubdued the Gauls, that great nation was already divided into three orders of men; the clergy, the nobility, and the common people. The first governed by superstition, the fecond by arms, but the third and last was not of any weight or account in their public councils. It was very natural for the Plebeians, oppressed by debt or apprehensive of injuries, to implore the protection

State of the peafants of

notes to the French translation, p. 122.

<sup>16</sup> The general name of Bagaudæ (in the 17 Chronique de Froissart, vol. i. c. 182. fignification of Rebels) continued till the fifth it. 73-79. The naiveté of his story is lost in century in Gaul. Some critics derive it from our best modern writers.

<sup>15</sup> Julian in Cæsarib. p. 315. Spanheim's a Celtic word Bagad, a tumultuous assembly. Scaliger ad Eufeb. Du Cange Gloffar.

CHAP. protection of some powerful chief, who acquired over their persons and property, the fame absolute rights as, among the Greeks and Romans, a master exercised over his slaves 18. The greatest part of the nation was gradually reduced into a flate of fervitude; compelled to perpetual labour on the estates of the Gallic nobles, and confined to the foil, either by the real weight of fetters, or by the no less cruel and forcible restraints of the laws. During the long feries of troubles which agitated Gaul, from the reign of Gallienus to that of Diocletian, the condition of these servile peasants was peculiarly miferable; and they experienced at once the complicated tyranny of their mafters, of the barbarians, of the foldiers, and of the officers of the revenue 19.

Their rebellion,

Their patience was at last provoked into despair. On every side they rose in multitudes, armed with rustic weapons, and with irrefistible fury. The ploughman became a foot foldier, the shepherd mounted on horseback, the deferted villages and open towns were abandoned to the flames, and the ravages of the peafants equalled those of the fiercest barbarians 20. They afferted the natural rights of men, but they afferted those rights with the most favage cruelty. The Gallic nobles jufly dreading their revenge, either took refuge in the fortified cities, or fled from the wild fcene of anarchy. The peafants reigned without control; and two of their most daring leaders had the folly and rashness to assume the Imperial ornaments 21. Their power foon expired at the approach of the legions. The strength of union and discipline obtained an easy victory over a licentious and divided multitude 22. A fevere retaliation was inflicted on the peafants who were found in arms:

and chaftifement.

<sup>13</sup> Cæfar de Bell, Gallic, vi. 13. Orgetorix, the Helvetian, could arm for his defence a body of ten thousand flaves.

<sup>19</sup> Their oppression and misery are acknowledged by Eumenius, (Panegyr. vi. 8.) Gallias efferatus injuriis.

<sup>20</sup> Panegyr. Vet. ii. 4. Aurelius Victor.

<sup>21</sup> Ælianus and Amandus. We have medals coined by them. Goltzius in Thef. R. A. p. 117. 121.

<sup>22</sup> Levibus præliis domuit. Eutrop. ix. 20.

the affrighted remnant returned to their respective habitations, and CHAP. their unsuccessful effort for freedom served only to confirm their flavery. So ftrong and uniform is the current of popular paffions, that we might almost venture, from very scanty materials, to relate the particulars of this war; but we are not disposed to believe that the principal leaders Ælianus and Amandus were Christians 23, or to infinuate, that the rebellion, as it happened in the time of Luther, was occasioned by the abuse of those benevolent principles of Christianity, which inculcate the natural freedom of mankind.

Maximian had no fooner recovered Gaul from the hands of the A.D. 287peasants, than he lost Britain by the usurpation of Carausius. Ever Carausius in fince the rash but successful enterprise of the Franks under the reign of Probus, their daring countrymen had conftructed fquadrons of light brigantines, in which they inceffantly ravaged the provinces adjacent to the ocean 24. To repel their defultory incursions, it was found necessary to create a naval power; and the judicious meafure was profecuted with prudence and vigour. Gessoriacum, or Boulogne, in the straights of the British channel, was chosen by the emperor for the station of the Roman fleet; and the command of it was intrusted to Caraufius, a Menapian of the meanest origin 25, but who had long signalised his skill as a pilot, and his valour as a foldier. The integrity of the new admiral corresponded not with his abilities. When the German pyrates failed from their own harbours, he connived at their paffage, but

<sup>23</sup> The fact rests indeed on very slight authority, a life of St. Babolinus, which is probably of the seventh century. See Duchesne Scriptores Rer. Francicar. tom. i. p. 662.

<sup>24</sup> Aurelius Victor calls them Germans. own times.

<sup>25</sup> The three expressions of Eutropius, Au. relius Victor, and Eumenius, "viliffime natus," " Bataviæ alumnus," and " Menapiæ civis," give us a very doubtful account of the birth of Caranfius. Dr. Stukely, however, (Hift. of Caraufius, p. 62.) chuses to make Eutropius (ix. 21.) gives them the name of him a native of St. David's, and a prince of Saxons. But Eutropius lived in the enfuing the blood royal of Britain. The former century, and feems to use the language of his idea he had found in Richard of Cirencester, P. 44.

C H A P. he diligently intercepted their return, and appropriated to his own use an ample share of the spoil which they had acquired. The wealth of Caraufius was, on this occasion, very justly confidered as an evidence of his guilt; and Maximian had already given orders for his death. But the crafty Menapian forefaw and prevented the feverity of the emperor. By his liberality he had attached to his fortunes the fleet which he commanded, and fecured the barbarians in his interest. From the port of Boulogne he failed over to Britain, perfuaded the legion, and the auxiliaries which guarded that Island, to embrace his party, and boldly affuming, with the Imperial purple, the title of Augustus, defied the justice and the arms of his injured fovereign 26.

Importance of Britain.

When Britain was thus difinembered from the empire, its i mportance was fenfibly felt, and its loss fincerely lamented. The Romans celebrated, and perhaps magnified, the extent of that noble island, provided on every fide with convenient harbours; the temperature of the climate, and the fertility of the foil, alike adapted for the production of corn or of vines; the valuable minerals with which it abounded; its rich pastures covered with innumerable flocks, and its woods free from wild beafts or venomous ferpents. Above all, they regretted the large amount of the revenue of Britain, whilst they confessed, that such a province well deserved to become the feat of an independent monarchy 27. During the space of feven years, it was possessed by Carausius; and fortune continued propitious to a rebellion, supported with courage and ability, The British emperor defended the frontiers of his dominions against was fecure, and flightly guarded. conceive, that in the beginning of the fourth conceive, that in the beginning of the fourth tor Eumenius wished to exalt the glory of the mendations. A century and half before, hero (Constantius), with the importance of the it hardly paid its own establishment. See Apconquest. Notwithstanding our laudable par- pian in Proæm.

Power of Caraufius.

<sup>26</sup> Panegyr. v. 12. Britain at this time tiality for our native country, it is difficult to

the Caledonians of the North, invited, from the continent, a great CHAP. number of skilful artists, and displayed, on a variety of coins that are still extant, his taste and opulence. Born on the confines of the Franks, he courted the friendship of that formidable people, by the flattering imitation of their drefs and manners. The bravest of their youth he enlisted among his land or sea forces; and in return for their useful alliance, he communicated to the barbarians the dangerous knowledge of military and naval arts. Caraufius still preserved the possession of Boulogne and the adjacent country. His fleets rode triumphant in the channel, commanded the mouths of the Seine and of the Rhine, ravaged the coasts of the ocean, and diffused beyond the columns of Hercules the terror of his name. Under his command, Britain, destined in a future age to obtain the empire of the fea, already affumed its natural and respectable station of a maritime power 28.

By feizing the fleet of Boulogne, Caraufius had deprived his A. D. 289. master of the means of pursuit and revenge. And when, after a acknowled ed by the vast expence of time and labour, a new armament was launched other eminto the water 29, the Imperial troops, unaccustomed to that element, were eafily baffled and defeated by the veteran failors of the This disappointed effort was soon productive of a treaty of peace. Diocletian and his colleague, who justly dreaded the enterprising spirit of Carausius, resigned to him the sovereignty of Britain, and reluctantly admitted their perfidious fervant to a participation of the Imperial honours 30. But the adoption of the 28 As a great number of medals of Carau- mian were completed: and the orator prefaged an affured victory. His filence in the fecond Panegyric, might alone inform us, that the expedition had not fucceeded.

3. Aurelius Victor, Entropius, and the meda's (Pax Auggg.) informs us of this temporary reconciliation: though I will not prefume (as Dr. Stukely has done, Medallic Hiftory of Caraufius, p. 86, &c.) to infert the fius are still preserved, he is become a very favourite object of antiquarian curiofity, and every circumstance of his life and actions has been investigated with fagacious accuracy. Dr. Stukely in particular has devoted a large volume to the British emperor. I have used his materials, and rejected most of his fanciful conjectures.

VOL. I.

<sup>29</sup> When Mamertinus pronounced his first identical articles of the treaty. panegyric, the naval preparations of Maxi-

A. D. 292.

C H A P. two Cæfars restored new vigour to the Roman arms; and while the Rhine was guarded by the prefence of Maximian, his brave affociate Constantius assumed the conduct of the British war. His first enterprise was against the important place of Boulogne. A stupendous mole, raifed across the entrance of the harbour, intercepted all hopes of relief. The town furrendered after an obstinate defence; and a confiderable part of the naval strength of Carausius fell into the hands of the beliegers. During the three years, which Constantius employed in preparing a fleet adequate to the conquest of Britain, he secured the coast of Gaul, invaded the country of the Franks, and deprived the usurper of the affishance of those powerful allies.

A. D. 294. His death.

Before the preparations were finished, Constantius received the intelligence of the tyrant's death, and it was confidered as a fure prefage of the approaching victory. The fervants of Caraufius imitated the example of treason, which he had given. He was murdered by his first minister Allectus, and the affassin succeeded to his power and to his danger. But he possessed not equal abilities either to exercife the one, or to repel the other. He beheld, with anxious terror, the opposite shores of the continent, already filled with arms, with troops, and with veffels; for Constantius had very prudently divided his forces, that he might likewise divide the attention and refistance of the enemy. The attack was at length . made by the principal fquadron, which, under the command of the præfect Asclepiodotus, an officer of distinguished merit, had been affembled in the mouth of the Seine. So imperfect in those times was the art of navigation, that orators have celebrated the daring courage of the Romans, who ventured to fet fail with a fide-wind, and on a stormy day. The weather proved favourable to their enterprife. Under the cover of a thick fog, they escaped the fleet of Alectus, which had been flationed off the Isle of Wight to receive them, landed in fafety on some part of the western coast;

A. D. 296. Recovery of Britain by Conftantius.

CHAP.

and convinced the Britons, that a superiority of naval strength will not always protect their country from a foreign invasion. Aselepiodatus had no fooner difembarked the Imperial troops, than he fet fire to his ships; and as the expedition proved fortunate, his heroic conduct was univerfally admired. The usurper had posted himself near London, to expect the formidable attack of Constantius, who commanded in person the fleet of Boulogne; but the defcent of a new enemy required his immediate presence in the West. He performed this long march in fo precipitate a manner, that he encountered the whole force of the præfect with a fmall body of haraffed and disheartened troops. The engagement was soon terminated by the total defeat and death of Allectus; a fingle battle, as it has often happened, decided the fate of this great island; and when Constantius landed on the shores of Kent, he found them covered with obedient fubjects. Their acclamations were loud and unanimous; and the virtues of the conqueror may induce us to believe, that they fincerely rejoiced in a revolution, which, after a separation of ten years, restored Britain to the body of the Roman empire 11.

Britain had none but domestic enemies to dread; and as long as Defence of the governors preserved their fidelity, and the troops their discipline, the incursions of the naked favages of Scotland or Ireland could never materially affect the fafety of the province. The peace of the continent, and the defence of the principal rivers which bounded the empire, were objects of far greater difficulty and importance. The policy of Diocletian, which inspired the councils of his affociates, provided for the public tranquillity, by encouraging a spirit of diffension among the barbarians, and by strengthening the fortifications of the Roman limit. In the East he fixed a line of camps from Egypt to Fortificathe frontiers.

31 With regard to the recovery of Britain, and Eutropius. we obtain a few hints from Aurelius Victor

CHAP. XIII.

the Persian dominions, and, for every camp, he instituted an adequate number of stationary troops, commanded by their respective officers, and supplied with every kind of arms, from the new arfenals which he had formed at Antioch, Emesa, and Damascus 32. Nor was the precaution of the emperor less watchful against the well-known valour of the barbarians of Europe. From the mouth of the Rhine to that of the Danube, the ancient camps, towns, and citadels, were diligently re-established, and in the most exposed places, new ones were skilfully constructed; the strictest vigilance was introduced among the garrifons of the frontier, and every expedient was practifed that could render the long chain of fortifications firm and impenetrable 33. A barrier fo respectable was feldom violated, and the barbarians often turned against each other their disappointed rage. The Goths, the Vandals, the Gepidæ, the Burgundians, the Alemanni, wasted each other's strength by destructive hostilities, and whosoever vanquished, they vanquished the enemies of Rome. The subjects of Diocletian enjoyed the bloody spectacle, and congratulated each other, that the mischiefs of civil war were now experienced only by the barbarians 34.

Diffentions of the barbarians.

> Notwithstanding the policy of Diocletian, it was impossible to maintain an equal and undiffurbed tranquillity during a reign of twenty years, and along a frontier of many hundred miles. Sometimes the barbarians suspended their domestic animolities, and the relaxed vigilance of the garrisons sometimes gave a passage to their ftrength or dexterity. Whenever the provinces were invaded, Diocletian conducted himfelf with that calm dignity which he always

Conduct of the emperors.

tom. i. p. 408, 409.

affected

<sup>33</sup> Zofim. l. i. p. 3. That partial historian feems to celebrate the vigilance of Diocletian, with a defign of exposing the negligence of Constantine; we may, however, et cohortium castra percenseam, toto Rheni all the nations of the world.

<sup>32</sup> John Malela, in Chron. Antiochen, et Istri et Euphratis limite restituta." Panegyr. Vet. iv. 18.

<sup>34</sup> Ruunt omnes in fanguinem fuum populi, quibus non contigit esse Romanis, obslinatæque feritatis pænas nunc sponte persolvunt. Panegyr. Vet. iii. 16. Mamertinus listen to an orator, " Nam quid ego alarum illustrates the fact, by the example of almost affected or possessed; referved his presence for such occasions as were CHAP. worthy of his interpolition, never exposed his person or reputation to any unnecessary danger, ensured his success by every means that prudence could fuggeft, and displayed, with oftentation, the confequences of his victory. In wars of a more difficult nature, and more doubtful event, he employed the rough valour of Maximian, and that faithful foldier was content to afcribe his own victories to the wife counfels and aufpicious influence of his benefactor. But Valour of the after the adoption of the two Casfars, the emperors themselves, retiring to a lefs laborious scene of action, devolved on their adopted fons the defence of the Danube and of the Rhine. The vigilant Galerius was never reduced to the necessity of vanquishing an army of barbarians on the Roman territory 35. The brave and active Constantius delivered Gaul from a very furious inroad of the Alemanni; and his victories of Langres and Vindonissa appear to have been actions of confiderable danger and merit. As he traversed the open country with a feeble guard, he was encompassed on a fudden by the fuperior multitude of the enemy. He retreated with difficulty towards Langres; but, in the general conflernation, the citizens refused to open their gates, and the wounded prince was drawn up the wall by the means of a rope. But on the news of his diffrefs, the Roman troops haftened from all fides to his relief, and before the evening he had fatisfied his honour and revenge by the flaughter of fix thousand Alemanni 36. From the monuments of those times, the obscure traces of several other victories over the barbarians of Sarmatia and Germany might possibly be collected; but the tedious fearch would not be rewarded either with amusement or with instruction.

<sup>35</sup> He complained, though not with the ftrictest truth ; " Jam fluxisse annos quindecim in quibus, in Illyrico, ad ripam Danubii Lactant. de M. P. c. 18.

<sup>36</sup> In the Greek text of Eufebius, we read ferred to the fixty thousand of Jerome, Ororelegatus cum gentibus barbaris luctaret." fius, Eutropius, and his Greek translator Pleanius.

rians.

C H A P.
XIII.
Treatment of the barba-

The conduct which the emperor Probus had adopted in the difpofal of the vanquished, was imitated by Diocletian and his affociates. The captive barbarians, exchanging death for flavery, were distributed among the provincials, and assigned to those districts (in Gaul, the territories of Amiens, Beauvais, Cambray, Treves, Langres, and Troyes, are particularly specified 37) which had been depopulated by the calamities of war. They were ufefully employed as thepherds and hufbandmen, but were denied the exercise of arms, except when it was found expedient to enrol them in the military fervice. Nor did the emperors refuse the property of lands, with a lefs fervile tenure, to fuch of the barbarians as folicited the protection of Rome. They granted a fettlement to several colonies of the Carpi, the Bastarnæ, and the Sarmatians; and, by a dangerous indulgence, permitted them in some measure to retain their national manners and independence 38. Among the provincials, it was a fubject of flattering exultation, that the barbarian, fo lately an object of terror, now cultivated their lands, drove their cattle to the neighbouring fair, and contributed by his labour to the public plenty. They congratulated their mafters on the powerful accession of subjects and soldiers; but they forgot to observe, that multitudes of fecret enemies, infolent from favour, or desperate from oppression, were introduced into the heart of the empire 39.

Wars of Africa and Egypt. While the Cæfars exercifed their valour on the banks of the Rhine and Danube, the presence of the empetors was required on the southern confines of the Roman world. From the Nile to Mount Atlas, Africa was in arms. A confederacy of five Moorish nations

iffued

<sup>3&</sup>quot; Panegyr. Vet. vii. 21.

<sup>33</sup> There was a fettlement of the Sarmatians in the neighbourhood of Treves, which feems to have been deferted by those lazy Barbarians: Ausonius speaks of them in his Moselle.

Unde iter ingrediens nemorofa per avia

Et nulla humani spectans vestigia cultus

Arvaque Sauromatům nuper metata colonis. There was a town of the Carpi in the Lower issued from their deserts to invade the peaceful provinces 4°. Julian C H A P. had affumed the purple at Carthage 41. Achilleus at Alexandria, and even the Blemmyes, renewed, or rather continued, their incursions into the Upper Egypt. Scarcely any circumstances have been preserved of the exploits of Maximian in the western parts of Africa; but it appears by the event, that the progress of his arms was rapid and decifive, that he vanquished the fiercest barbarians of Mauritania, and that he removed them from the mountains, whose inaccessible strength had inspired their inhabitants with a lawless confidence, and habituated them to a life of rapine and violence 42. Diocletian, on his fide, opened the campaign in Egypt by A. D. 296. the fiege of Alexandria, cut off the aqueducts which conveyed Diocletian in the waters of the Nile into every quarter of that immense city 43, Egypt. and rendering his camp impregnable to the fallies of the belieged multitude, he pushed his reiterated attacks with caution and vigour. After a fiege of eight months, Alexandria, wasted by the sword and by fire, implored the clemency of the conqueror; but it experienced the full extent of his feverity. Many thousands of the citizens perished in a promiscuous slaughter, and there were few obnoxious persons in Egypt who escaped a sentence either of death or at least of exile 44. The fate of Busiris and of Coptos was still more melancholy than that of Alexandria; those proud cities, the former diffinguished by its antiquity, the latter enriched by the paffage of the Indian trade, were utterly destroyed by the arms and by the

<sup>39</sup> See the rhetorical exultation of Eumenius, Panegyr, vii. 9.

<sup>40</sup> Scaliger (Animadverf. ad Enfeb. p. 243.) decides in his usual manner, that the Quinque gentiani, or five African nations, were the five great cities, the Pentapolis of the inoffensive province of Cyrene.

<sup>43</sup> After his defeat, Julian stabbed himself with a dagger, and immediately leaped into the flames. Victor in Epitome.

<sup>4:</sup> Tu ferocissimos Mauritaniæ populos inaccessis montium jugis et naturali munitione fidentes, expugnafti, recepifti, transtulisti. Panegyr. Vet. vi. 8.

<sup>43</sup> See the description of Alexandria in Hirtius de Bel. Alexandrin. c. 5.

<sup>44</sup> Eutrop. ix. 24. Orofius, vii. 25. John Malela in Chron. Antioch. p. 409, 410. Yet Eumenius assures us, that Egypt was pacified by the clemency of Diocletian.

CHAP. fevere order of Diocletian 45. The character of the Egyptian nation, inscnsible to kindness, but extremely susceptible of fear, could alone justify this excessive rigour. The seditions of Alexandria had often affected the tranquillity and subfishence of Rome itself. Since the usurpation of Firmus, the province of Upper Egypt, inceffantly relapfing into rebellion, had embraced the alliance of the favages of Athiopia. The number of the Blemmyes, fcattered between the island of Meroe and the Red Sea, was very inconfiderable, their disposition was unwarlike, their weapons rude and inosfensive 46. Yet in the public diforders these barbarians, whom antiquity, shocked with the deformity of their figure, had almost excluded from the human species, presumed to rank themselves among the enemies of Rome 47. Such had been the unworthy allies of the Egyptians; and while the attention of the state was engaged in more serious wars, their vexatious inroads might again harafs the repose of the province. With a view of oppofing to the Blemmyes a fuitable adversary, Diocletian persuaded the Nobatæ, or people of Nubia, to remove from their ancient habitations in the deferts of Lybia, and refigned to them an extensive but unprofitable territory above Syene and the cataracts of the Nile, with the stipulation, that they should ever respect and guard the frontier of the empire. treaty long subfifted; and till the establishment of Christianity introduced stricter notions of religious worship, it was annually ratified by a folemn facrifice in the ifle of Elephantine, in which the Romans, as well as the barbarians, adored the fame visible or invisible powers of the universe 48.

struction several years sooner, and at a time when Egypt itself was in a state of rebellion against the Romans.

<sup>46</sup> Strabo, I. xvii. p. t. 172. Pomponius Mela, l. i. c. 4. His words are curious, "In-

<sup>45</sup> Eusebius (in Chron.) places their de- tra, si credere libet, vix homines magisque femiferi; Ægipanes, et Blemmres, et Satvri." 47 Aufus fese inscrere fortunæ et provocare arma Romana.

<sup>43</sup> See Procopius de Bell. Persic. 1. i.

At the same time that Diocletian chastised the past crimes of the CHAP. Egyptians, he provided for their future fafety and happiness by many wife regulations which were confirmed and enforced under the fucceeding reigns 49. One very remarkable edict, which he published, instead of being condemned as the effect of jealous tyranny, deferves to be applauded as an act of prudence and humanity. He caused a diligent inquiry to be made " for all the ancient books Hesuppresses "which treated of the admirable art of making gold and filver, chymy. " and without pity committed them to the flames; apprehensive, " as we are affured, left the opulence of the Egyptians should in-" fpire them with confidence to rebel against the empire "." But if Diocletian had been convinced of the reality of that valuable art, far from extinguishing the memory, he would have converted the operation, of it to the benefit of the public revenue. It is much more likely that his good fense discovered to him the folly of such magnificent pretentions, and that he was defirous of preferving the reason and fortunes of his subjects from the mischievous pursuit. It may be remarked, that these ancient books, so liberally ascribed Novelty and to Pythagoras, to Solomon, or to Hermes, were the pious frauds that art. of more recent adepts. The Greeks were inattentive either to the use or to the abuse of chymistry. In that immense register, where Pliny has deposited the discoveries, the arts, and the errors of mankind, there is not the least mention of the transmutation of metals; and the perfecution of Diocletian is the first authentic event in the history of alchymy. The conquest of Egypt by the Arabs diffused that vain science over the globe. Congenial to the avarice of the human heart, it was studied in China as in Europe, with equal eagerness, and with equal success. The darkness of the middle ages enfured a favourable reception to every tale of wonder, and the revival of learning gave new vigour to hope, and fuggefted more specious arts of deception. Philosophy, with the aid of experience, has at length banished the study of alchymy; and the prefent age, however defirous of riches, is content to feek them by the humbler means of commerce and industry 51.

<sup>49</sup> He fixed the public allowance of corn cop. Hist. Arcan. c. 26. for the people of Alexandria, at two millions 50 John Antioch in Excerp. Valesian. p. of medimni; about four hundred thousand 834. Suidas in Diocletian. quarters. Chron. Pafchal. p. 276. Pro-

CHAP.

The Persian war.

The reduction of Egypt was immediately followed by the Persian war. It was reserved for the reign of Diocletian to vanquish that powerful nation, and to extort a confession from the successors of Artaxerxes, of the fuperior majefty of the Roman empire.

Tiridates the Armenian.

We have observed, under the reign of Valerian, that Armenia was subdued by the perfidy and the arms of the Perfians, and that after the affaffination of Chofroes, his fon Tiridates, the infant heir of the monarchy, was faved by the fidelity of his friends, and educated under the protection of the emperors. Tiridates derived from his exile fuch advantages as he could never have obtained on the throne of Armenia; the early knowledge of adverfity, of mankind, and of the Roman discipline. He fignalized his youth by deeds of valour, and displayed a matchless dexterity, as well as flrength, in every martial exercise, and even in the less honourable contests of the Olympian games 52. Those qualities were more nobly exerted in the defence of his benefactor Licinius ". That officer, in the fedition which occasioned the death of Probus, was exposed to the most imminent danger, and the enraged soldiers were

A. D. 282.

51 See a fhort history and confutation of who supposes that in the year 323, Licinius Alchymy, in the works of that philosophical compiler, La Mothe le Vayer, tom. i. p.

52 See the education and frength of Tiridates in the Armenian history of Mofes of Chorene, l. ii. c. 76. He could feize two wild bulls by the horns, and break them off with his hands.

was only fixty years of age, he could fearcely be the same person, as the patron of Tiridates; but we know from much better authority (Euseb. Hist. Ecclesiast. 1. x. c. 8.) that Licinius was at that time in the last period of old age: fixteen years before, he is reprefented with grey hairs, and as the contemporary of Galerius. See Lactant. c. 32. Li-53 If we give credit to the younger Victor, cinius was probably born about the year 250.

forcing

forcing their way into his tent, when they were checked by the fingle arm of the Armenian prince. The gratitude of Tiridates contributed foon afterwards to his restoration. Licinius was in every station the friend and companion of Galerius, and the merit of Galerius, long before he was raifed to the dignity of Cæfar, had been known and efteemed by Diocletian. In the third year of that emperor's reign, Tiridates was invefted with the kingdom of Armenia. The justice of the measure was not less evident than its expediency. It was time to rescue from the usurpation of the Perfian monarch an important territory, which, fince the reign of Nero, had been always granted under the protection of the empire to a younger branch of the house of Arfaces 54.

When Tiridates appeared on the frontiers of Armenia, he was A. D. 286. received with an unfeigned transport of joy and loyalty. During tion to the twenty-fix years, the country had experienced the real and imaginary hardships of a foreign yoke. The Persian monarchs adorned their new conquest with magnificent buildings; but those monuments had been erected at the expence of the people, and were abhorred as badges of flavery. The apprehension of a revolt had inspired State of the the most rigorous precautions: oppression had been aggravated by infult, and the confciousness of the public hatred had been productive of every measure that could render it still more implacable. We have already remarked the intolerant spirit of the Magian religion. The statues of the deified kings of Armenia, and the facred images of the fun and moon, were broke in pieces by the zeal of the conqueror; and the perpetual fire of Ormuzd was kindled and preferved upon an altar erected on the fummit of mount Bagavan 55. It

<sup>54</sup> See the fixty-fecond and fixty-third books years before Christ, and was the first king of of Dion Cassius.

c. 74. The statues had been erected by Va- facides is mentioned by Justin (xli. 5.) and larfaces, who reigned in Armenia about 130 by Ammianus Marcellinus (xxiii. 6.).

the family of Arfaces (see Moses Hist. Ar-55 Moses of Chorene, Hist. Armen. l. ii. men. l. ii. 2, 3.). The deification of the Ar-

C H A P. XIII. Revolt of the people and nobles.

was natural, that a people exasperated by so many injuries, should arm with zeal in the cause of their independence, their religion, and their hereditary fovereign. The torrent bore down every obstacle, and the Persian garrisons retreated before its fury. The nobles of Armenia flew to the standard of Tiridates, all alleging their past merit, offering their future fervice, and foliciting from the new king those honours and rewards from which they had been excluded with difdain under the foreign government 56. The command of the army was bestowed on Artavasdes, whose father had saved the infancy of Tiridates, and whose family had been massacred for that generous action. The brother of Artavasdes obtained the government of a province. One of the first military dignities was conferred on the fatrap Otas, a man of fingular temperance and fortitude, who prefented to the king, his fifter 57 and a confiderable treasure, both of which, in a fequestered fortress, Otas had preserved from violation. Among the Armenian nobles appeared an ally, whose fortunes are too remarkable to pass unnoticed. His name was Mamgo, his origin was Scythian, and the horde which acknowledged his authority, had encamped a very few years before on the skirts of the Chinese empire 58, which at that time extended as far as the neighbourhood of Sogdina 59. Having incurred the displeasure of his master,

Sory of Mamgo.

> 56 The Armenian nobility was numerous and powerful. Mofes mentions many families which were diffinguifhed under the reign of Valarfaces (l. ii. 7.), and which fill fubfiled in his own time, about the middle of the fifth century. See the preface of his Editors.

> 57 She was named Chofroiduchta, and had not the or patulum like other women. (Hift. Armen. l. ii. c. 79.) I do not understand the expression.

<sup>58</sup> In the Armenian History (I. ii. 78.) as well as in the Geography, (p. 367.) China is called Zenia, or Zenastan. It is characterized by the production of filk, by the opu-

56 The Armenian nobility was numerous lence of the natives, and by their love of powerful. Mofes mentions many fa-

59 Vou-ti, the first emperor of the seventh dynasty, who then reigned in China, had political transactions with Fergana, a province of Sogdiana, and is said to have received a Roman embasty. (Histoire des Huns, tom. i. p. 38.) In those ages the Chinese kept a garrison at Kashgar, and one of their generals, about the time of Trajan, marched as far as the Casspian sea. With regard to the inter-course between China and the western countries, a curious memoir of M. de Guignes may be consulted in the Academic des Inscriptions, tom. xxxii. p. 355.

Mamgo, with his followers, retired to the banks of the Oxus, and C H A P. implored the protection of Sapor. The emperor of China claimed the fugitive, and alleged the rights of fovereignty. The Persian monarch pleaded the laws of hospitality, and with some difficulty avoided a war, by the promise that he would banish Mamgo to the uttermost parts of the West; a punishment, as he described it, not less dreadful than death itself. Armenia was chosen for the place of exile, and a large diffrict was affigned to the Scythian horde, on which they might feed their flocks and herds, and remove their encampment from one place to another, according to the different feafous of the year. They were employed to repel the invasion of Tiridates; but their leader, after weighing the obligations and injuries which he had received from the Persian monarch, resolved to abandon his party. The Armenian prince, who was well acquainted with the merit as well as power of Mamgo, treated him with diftinguished respect; and by admitting him into his confidence, acquired a brave and faithful servant, who contributed very effectually to his reftoration 60.

For a while, fortune appeared to favour the enterprising valour of The Persians. Tiridates. He not only expelled the enemies of his family and country from the whole extent of Armenia, but in the profecution of his revenge he carried his arms, or at least his incursions, into the heart of Affyria. The historian, who has preserved the name of Tiridates from oblivion, celebrates, with a degree of national enthulialm, his personal prowess; and, in the true spirit of eastern romance, defcribes the giants and the elephants that fell beneath his invincible arm. It is from other information that we discover the distracted state of the Persian monarchy, to which the king of Armenia was indebted for fome part of his advantages. The throne was disputed by the ambition of contending brothers; and Hormuz, after exerting without fuccess the strength of his own party, had recourse to the dangerous assistance of the barbarians who inhabited the banks of the Caspian Sea 4. The civil war was, however, soon terminated, either by a victory or by a reconciliation; and Narses, who was universally acknowledged as king of Persia, directed his whole force against the foreign enemy. The contest then became too unequal; nor was the valour of the hero able to withstand the power of the monarch. Tiridates, a second time expelled from the throne of Armenia, once more took refuge in the court of the emperors. Narses soon re-established his authority over the revolted province; and loudly complaining of the protection afforded by the Romans to rebels and fugitives, aspired to the conquest of the East 4.

C H A P.

War between the Persians and the Romans. A. D. 296. Neither prudence nor honour could permit the emperors to forfake the cause of the Armenian king, and it was resolved to exert the force of the empire in the Persian war. Diocletian, with the calm dignity which he constantly assumed, fixed his own station in the city of Antioch, from whence he prepared and directed the military operations 61. The conduct of the legions was intrusted to the intrepid valour of Galerius, who, for that important purpose, was removed from the banks of the Danube to those of the Euphrates. The armies soon encountered each other in the plains of Mesopotamia, and two battles were sought with various and doubtful success: but the third engagement was of a more decisive nature; and Defeat of Galerius.

"I Ipfos Perfas ipfumque Regem afcitis Saccis, et Ruffis, et Gellis, petit frater Ormies. Panegyric. Vet. iii. 1. The Sacæ were a nation of wandering Scythians, who encamped towards the fources of the Oxus and the Jaxart's. The Gelli were the inhabitants of Ghilan along the Cafpian fea, and who fo long, under the name of Dilemites, infeffed the Perfian Monarchy. See d'Herbelot Bibliotheque Orientale.

62 Mefes of Chorene takes no notice of this feeepd revolution, which I have been obliged to collect from a paffage of Anmianus Marcellinus (l. xxiii. 5.). Lactantius fpeaks of the ambition of Narfes, "Concitatus domeflicis exemplis avi fui Saporis ad occupandum orientem magnis copiis inhiabat." De Mort. Perfecut. c. 9.

63 We may readily believe, that LæCantius afcribes to cowardice the conduct of Diccletian. Julian, in his oration fays, that he remained with all the forces of the empire; a very hyperbolical expression.

the

the Roman army received a total overthrow, which is attributed to CHAP. the rashness of Galerius, who, with an inconsiderable body of troops, attacked the innumerable hoft of the Persians 64. But the confideration of the country that was the scene of action, may suggest another reason for his defeat. The same ground on which Galerius was vanquished, had been rendered memorable by the death of Craffus, and the flaughter of ten legions. It was a plain of more than fixty miles, which extended from the hills of Carrhæ to the Euphrates; a fmooth and barren furface of fandy defert, without a hillock, without a tree, and without a fpring of fresh water 65. The fleady infantry of the Romans, fainting with heat and thirst, could neither hope for victory if they preferved their ranks, nor break their ranks without exposing themselves to the most imminent danger. In this fituation they were gradually encompassed by the superior numbers, haraffed by the rapid evolutions, and destroyed by the arrows of the barbarian cavalry. The king of Armenia had fignalized his valour in the battle, and acquired perfonal glory by the public misfortune. He was purfued as far as the Euphrates; his horse was wounded, and it appeared impossible for him to escape the victorious enemy. In this extremity Tiridates embraced the only refuge which he saw before him; he difmounted and plunged into the stream. His armour was heavy, the river very deep, and in those parts at least half a mile in breadth 66; yet fuch was his strength and dexterity, that he reached in fafety the opposite bank 67. With regard to the Roman general, we are ignorant of the circumstances of his escape; but when <sup>64</sup> Our five abbreviators, Eutropius, Festus, the two Victors, and Orofius, all relate the last and great battle; but Orofius is the only one who fpeaks of the two former.

<sup>65</sup> The nature of the country is finely deferibed by Plutarch, in the life of Craffus, and by Xenophon, in the first book of the Anabasis.

<sup>66</sup> See Foster's Differtation in the secondvolume of the translation of the Anabasis by Spelman; which I will venture to recommend as one of the best versions extant.

&lt;sup>67</sup> Hift, Armen. I. ii. c. 76. I have transferred this exploit of Tiridates from an imaginary defeat to the real one of Galerius.

XIII. His reception by Diocletian.

C H A P. he returned to Antioch, Diocletian received him, not with the tenderness of a friend and colleague, but with the indignation of an offended fovereign. The haughtieft of men, clothed in his purple, but humbled by the fense of his fault and misfortune, was obliged to follow the emperor's chariot above a mile on foot, and to exhibit, before the whole court, the spectacle of his disgrace 63.

Second campaign of Galerius. A. D. 297.

As foon as Diocletian had indulged his private refentment, and afferted the majefty of supreme power, he yielded to the submissive entreaties of the Cæfar, and permitted him to retrieve his own honour as well as that of the Roman arms. In the room of the unwarlike troops of Afia, which had most probably ferved in the first expedition, a fecond army was drawn from the veterans and new levies of the Illyrian frontier, and a confiderable body of Gothic auxiliaries were taken into the Imperial pay 69. At the head of a chosen army of twenty-five thousand men, Gallerius again passed the Euphrates; but, instead of exposing his legions in the open plains of Mesopotamia, he advanced through the mountains of Armenia, where he found the inhabitants devoted to his cause, and the country as favourable to the operations of infantry, as it was inconvenient for the motions of cavalry 70. Advertity had confirmed the Roman discipline, while the barbarians, elated by success, were become fo negligent and remifs, that in the moment when they least expected it, they were furprifed by the active conduct of Galerius, who, attended only by two horsemen, had with his own eyes secretly examined the flate and position of their camp. A furprise, especially in the night-time, was for the most part fatal to a Persian army. "Their horses were tied, and generally shackled, to prevent their runes Ammian. Marcellin. I. xiv. The mile, in the hands of Eutropius (ix. 24.), of Festus in hostes contendit, quæ ferme sola, seu faci-(c. 25.), and of Orofius (vii. 25.), eafily in- lior vincendi via eft." He followed the concreafed to feveral miles.

His victory.

<sup>69</sup> Aurelius Victor. Jornandes de rebus far. Geticis, c. 21.

<sup>70</sup> Aurelius Victor fays, " Per Armeniam duct of Trajan, and the idea of Julius Ca-

XIII.

"ning away; and if an alarm happened, a Perfian had his houfing CHAP. " to fix, his horse to bridle, and his corflet to put on, before he could "mount 71." On this occasion, the impetuous attack of Galerius spread disorder and disinay over the camp of the barbarians. A flight refistance was followed by a dreadful carnage, and in the general confusion, the wounded monarch (for Narses commanded his armies in person) fled towards the deserts of Media. His fumptuous tents, and those of his fatraps, afforded an immense booty to the conqueror; and an incident is mentioned, which proves the ruftic but martial ignorance of the legions in the elegant superfluities of life. A bag of shining leather filled with pearls, fell into the hands of a private foldier; he carefully preferved the bag, but he threw away its contents, judging, that whatever was of no use could not possibly be of any value 72. The principal loss and behaviof Narles was of a much more affecting nature. Several of his royal capwives, his fifters, and children, who had attended the army, were made captives in the defeat. But though the character of Galerius had in general very little affinity with that of Alexander, he imitated, after his victory, the amiable behaviour of the Macedonian towards the family of Darius. The wives and children of Narses were protected from violence and rapine, conveyed to a place of fafety, and treated with every mark of respect and tenderness, that was due from a generous enemy, to their age, their fex, and their royal dignity 73.

While the East anxiously expected the decision of this great Negociation contest, the emperor Diocletian, having affembled in Syria a strong army of observation, displayed from a distance the resources of the Roman power, and referved himself for any future emergency

Vol. I.

3 M

<sup>71</sup> Xenophon's Anabafis, 1. iii. For that reason the Persian cavalry encamped fixty sta- personity in morals as well as in arms. dia from the enemy.

Instead of faccum some read scutum.

<sup>73</sup> The Perfians confessed the Roman fu-Eutrop. ix. 24. But this respect and gratitude 72 The flory is told by Ammianus, 1. xxii. of enemies is very feldom to be found in their own accounts.

CHAP.

Speech of the Perfian

ambaffador.

gency of the war. On the intelligence of the victory, he condescended to advance towards the frontier; with a view of moderating, by his presence and counsels, the pride of Galerius. The interview of the Roman princes at Nisibis was accompanied with every expression of respect on one side, and of esteem on the other. It was in that city that they soon afterwards gave audience to the ambaffador of the great king 74. The power, or at least the spirit of Narses, had been broken by his last defeat; and he confidered an immediate peace, as the only means that could ftop the progress of the Roman arms. He dispatched Apharban, a fervant who possessed his favour and confidence, with a commission to negociate a treaty, or rather to receive whatever conditions the conqueror should impose. Apharban opened the conference by expressing his master's gratitude for the generous treatment of his family, and by foliciting the liberty of those illustrious captives. He celebrated the valour of Galerius without degrading the reputation of Narfes, and thought it no dishonour to confess the superiority of the victorious Casar, over a monarch who had furpassed in glory all the princes of his race. Notwithstanding the justice of the Persian cause, he was empowered to submit the present differences to the decision of the emperors themselves; convinced as he was, that in the midst of prosperity, they would not be unmindful of the viciflitudes of fortune. Apharban concluded his discourse in the style of eastern allegory, by observing that the Roman and Persian monarchies were the two eyes of the world, which would remain imperfect and mutilated if either of them fhould be put out.

Antiver of Galerius. "It well becomes the Persians," replied Galerius, with a transport of fury, which seemed to convulse his whole frame, "it well be-

66 comes

<sup>74</sup> The account of the negociation is taken tinian; but it is very evident, by the nature from the fragments of Peter the Patrician, of his materials, that they are drawn from the In the Excerpta Legationum published in the Byzanti ne Collection. Peter lived under Juf-

" comes the Perfians to expatiate on the viciffitudes of fortune, "and calmly to read us lectures on the virtues of moderation. "Let them remember their own moderation towards the unhappy "Valerian. They vanquished him by fraud, they treated him " with indignity. They detained him till the last moment of " his life in shameful captivity, and after his death they exposed "his body to perpetual ignominy." Softening, however, his tone, Galerius infinuated to the ambaffador, that it had never been the practice of the Romans to trample on a proftrate enemy; and that, on this occasion, they should consult their own dignity, rather than the Persian merit. He dismissed Apharban with a hope, that Narfes would foon be informed on what conditions he might obtain, from the elemency of the emperors, a lasting peace, and the restoration of his wives and children. In this conference we may discover the sierce passions of Galerius, as well as his deference to the fuperior wisdom and authority of Diocletian. The ambition of Moderation the former grasped at the conquest of the East, and had proposed to reduce Perfia into the ftate of a province. The prudence of the latter, who adhered to the moderate policy of Augustus and the Antonines, embraced the favourable opportunity of terminating a fuccefsful war by an honourable and advantageous peace 75.

of Diocletian.

In pursuance of their promise, the emperors soon afterwards Conclusion appointed Sicorius Probus, one of their fecretaries, to acquaint the Persian court with their final resolution. As the minister of peace, he was received with every mark of politeness and friendship; but, under the pretence of allowing him the necessary repose after fo long a journey, the audience of Probus was deferred from day to day; and he attended the flow motions of the king, till at length he was admitted to his presence, near the river Asprudus,

<sup>75</sup> Adeo Victor (fays Aurelius) ut ni Va- rentur. Vezum pars terrarum tamen nobis lerius, cujus nutu omnia gerebantur, abnuif- uti ler quæf ta,

CHAP. in Media. The fecret motive of Narses in this delay, had been to collect fuch a military force, as might enable him, though fincerely defirous of peace, to negociate with the greater weight and dignity. Three persons only affisted at this important conference, the minister Apharban, the præfect of the guards, and an officer who had commanded on the Armenian frontier 76. The first condition proposed by the ambassador, is not at present of a very intelligible nature; that the city of Nifibis might be established for the place of mutual exchange, or, as we should formerly have termed it, for the staple of trade, between the two empires. There is no difficulty in conceiving the intention of the Roman princes, to improve their revenue by fome restraints upon commerce; but as Nisibis was fituated within their own dominions, and as they were mafters both of the imports and exports, it should feem, that fuch restraints were the objects of an internal law, rather than of a foreign treaty. To render them more effectual, fome stipulations were probably required on the fide of the king of Persia, which appeared fo very repugnant either to his interest or to his dignity, that Narfes could not be perfuaded to fubscribe them. As this was the only article to which he refused his consent, it was no longer infifted on; and the emperors either fuffered the trade to flow in its natural channels, or contented themselves with such restrictions, as it depended on their own authority to establish.

and articles of the treaty.

As foon as this difficulty was removed, a folemn peace was concluded and ratified between the two nations. The conditions of a treaty fo glorious to the empire, and fo necessary to Persia, may deferve a more peculiar attention, as the history of Rome prefents very few transactions of a fimilar nature; most of her wars, having either been terminated by abfolute conquest, or waged against barbarians

<sup>76</sup> He had been governor of Sumium. (Pet. Chorene (Geograph. p. 360.), and lay to the Patricius in Excerpt. Legat. p. 30.). This East of Mount Ararat. province feems to be mentioned by Mofes of

XIII. The Aboras fixed as the tween the five provinthe Tigris.

barbarians ignorant of the use of letters. I. The Aboras, or as it is called by Xenophon, the Araxes, was fixed as the boundary between the two monarchies 77. That river, which rose near the Tigris, was increased a few miles below Nisibis, by the little stream of the Mygdonius, passed under the walls of Singara, and fell empires. into the Euphrates at Circefium, a frontier town, which, by the care of Diocletian, was very strongly fortified 78. Mesopotamia, the object of fo many wars, was ceded to the empire; and the Persians, by this treaty, renounced all pretentions to that great province. II. They relinquished to the Romans five provinces beyond the Cession of Tigris 79. Their fituation formed a very useful barrier, and their ces beyond natural strength was foon improved by art and military skill. of these, to the north of the river, were districts of obscure same and inconfiderable extent; Intiline, Zabdicene, Arzanene, and Moxoene: but on the east of the Tigris, the empire acquired the large and mountainous territory of Carduene, the ancient feat of the Carduchians, who preserved for many ages their manly freedom in the heart of the despotic monarchies of Asia. The ten thousand Greeks traversed their country, after a painful march, or rather engagement, of feven days; and it is confessed by their leader, in his incomparable relation of the retreat, that they suffered more from the arrows of the Carduchians, than from the power of the great king 84. Their posterity, the Curds, with very little alteration

77 By an error of the geographer Ptolemy, the position of Singara is removed from the Aboras to the Tigris, which may have produced the mistake of Peter, in assigning the latter river for the boundary, instead of the former. The line of the Roman frontier traverfed, but never followed, the course of the Tigris.

73 Procopius de Edificiis, I. ii. c. 6.

77 Three of the provinces, Zabdicene, Arzanene, and Carduene, are allowed on all fides. But inflead of the other two, Peter (in Excerpt. Leg. p. 30.) inserts Rehimene and Sophene. I have preferred Ammianus, (1. xxv. 7.) because it might be proved, that Sophene was never in the hands of the Perfians, either before the reign of Diocletian, or after that of Jovian. For want of correct maps, like those of M. Danville, almost all the moderns, with Tillemont and Valefus at their head, have imagined, that it was in respect to Persia, and not to Rome, that the five provinces were fituate beyond the Tigris.

1º Xenophon's Anabafis, I. iv. Their bows

Il la.

XIII. Armenia.

CHAP. either of name or manners, acknowledged the nominal fovereignty of the Turkish sultan. III. It is almost needless to observe, that Tiridates, the faithful ally of Rome, was reftored to the throne of his fathers, and that the rights of the Imperial supremacy were fully afferted and fecured. The limits of Armenia were extended as far as the fortress of Sintha in Media, and this increase of dominion was not fo much an act of liberality as of justice. Of the provinces already mentioned beyond the Tigris, the four first had been difmembered by the Parthians, from the crown of Armenia 81; and when the Romans acquired the possession of them, they stipulated, at the expence of the usurpers, an ample compensation, which invested their ally with the extensive and fertile country of Atropatene. Its principal city, in the fame fituation perhaps as the modern Tauris, was frequently honoured with the residence of Tiridates, and as it fometimes bore the name of Ecbatana, he imitated, in the buildings and fortifications, the splendid capital of the Mcdes 82. IV. The country of Iberia was barren, its inhabitants rude and favage. But they were accustomed to the use of arms, and they separated from the empire barbarians much fiercer and more formidable than themselves. The narrow defiles of Mount Caucasus were in their hands, and it was in their choice, either to admit or to exclude the wandering tribes of Sarmatia, whenever a rapacious spirit . urged them to penetrate into the richer climates of the South 83. The nomination of the kings of Iberia, which was refigned by the Persian monarch to the emperors, contributed to the strength > were three cubits in length, their arrows two; they rolled down flones that were each a waggon load. The Greeks found a great many villages in that rude country.

> at According to Eutropius (vi. 9. as the text is represented 'y the best MSS.) the city of Tigranoc rta was in Arranene. The names and fituation of the other three may be 82 Compare Herodotus, 1. i. c. 97. with Moses Choronens. Hist. Armen. 1. ii. c. 84. and the map of Armenia given by his edi-and fecurity of the Roman power in Afia 84. The East enjoyed CHAP. a profound tranquillity during forty years; and the treaty between the rival monarchies was strictly observed till the death of Tiridates; when a new generation, animated with different views and different passions, succeeded to the government of the world; and the grandfon of Narfes undertook a long and memorable war against the princes of the house of Constantine.

83 Hiberi, locorum potentes, Caspia via Sarmatam in Armenios raptim effundant. Tacit. Annal. vi. 34. See Strabon. Geograph.

The arduous work of rescuing the distressed empire from tyrants Triumph of and barbarians had now been completely atchieved by a fuccession and Maxiof Illyrian peafants. As foon as Diocletian entered into the twentieth year of his reign, he celebrated that memorable æra, as well as the fuccess of his arms, by the pomp of a Roman triumph 85. Maximian, the equal partner of his power, was his only companion in the glory of that day. The two Cæfars had fought and conquered, but the merit of their exploits was ascribed, according to the rigour of ancient maxims, to the auspicious influence of their fathers and emperors 86. The triumph of Diocletian and Maximian was less magnificent perhaps than those of Aurelian and Probus, but it was dignified by feveral circumstances of superior fame and good fortune. Africa and Britain, the Rhine, the Danube, and the Nile, furnished their respective trophies; but the most distinguished ornament was of a more fingular nature, a Perfian victory followed by an important conquest. The representations of rivers, mountains, and provinces, were carried before the Imperial-car. The images of the captive wives, the fifters, and the children of the great king, afforded a new and grateful spectacle to the vanity of the article of the treaty. 85 Eusebius in Chron. Pagi ad annum. Till the discovery of the treatise De Mortibus Perfecutorum, it was not certain that the

A. D. 303. November 20.

is the only writer who mentions the Iberian at the fame time.

<sup>3+</sup> Peter Patricius (in Excerpt, Leg. p. 30.) triumph and the Vicennalia were celebrated

<sup>86</sup> At the time of the Vincenalia, Galerius feems to have kept his station on the Danube. See Lactant. de M. P. c. 38.

CHAP. people 87. In the eyes of posterity this triumph is remarkable, by a distinction of a less honourable kind. It was the last that Rome ever beheld. Soon after this period, the emperors ceafed to vanquish, and Rome ceafed to be the capital of the empire.

Long abfence of the emperors from Rome.

The fpot on which Rome was founded, had been confecrated by ancient ceremonies and imaginary miracles. The prefence of some god, or the memory of some hero, seemed to animate every part of the city, and the empire of the world had been promised to the Capitol 88. The native Romans felt and confessed the power of this agreeable illusion. It was derived from their ancestors, had grown up with their earliest habits of life, and was protected, in some measure, by the opinion of political utility. The form and the feat of government were intimately blended together, nor was it esteemed possible to transport the one without destroying the other 89. But the sovereignty of the capital was gradually annihilated in the extent of conquest; the provinces rose to the fame level, and the vanquished nations acquired the name and privileges, without imbibing the partial affections, of Romans. During a long period, however, the remains of the ancient conflitution, and the influence of custom, preserved the dignity of Rome. The emperors, though perhaps of African or Illyrian extraction, respected their adopted country, as the feat of their power, and the centre of their extensive dominions. The emergencies of war very frequently required their presence on the frontiers; but Diocletian and Maximian were the first Roman princes part of the triumph. As the persons had been restored to Narses, nothing more than their images could be exhibited.

<sup>87</sup> Eutropius (ix. 27.) mentions them as a Rome to the neighbouring city of Veii. 89 Julius Cæfar was reproached with the intention of removing the empire to Ilium cr Alexandria. See Sucton. in Caefar, c. 79. Livy gives us a speech of Camillus on According to the ingenious conjecture of Le that subject (v. 51-55.), full of cloquence Fevre and Dacier, the third ode of the third and fenfibility, in opposition to a defign of book of Horace was intended to divert Avremoving the feat of government from gustus from the execution of a similar design, who fixed, in time of peace, their ordinary refidence in the pro- CHAP. vinces; and their conduct, however it might be fuggested by private motives, was justified by very specious considerations of policy. The court of the emperor of the West was, for the most part, established at Milan, whose situation, at the foot of the Alps, ap-Milan peared far more convenient than that of Rome, for the important purpose of watching the motions of the barbarians of Germany. Milan foon affumed the fplendour of an Imperial city. The houses are described as numerous and well built; the manners of the people as polified and liberal. A circus, a theatre, a mint, a palace, baths, which bore the name of their founder Maximian; porticos adorned with statues, and a double circumference of walls, contributed to the beauty of the new capital; nor did it feem oppressed even by the proximity of Rome 90. To rival the majesty of Rome was the ambition likewise of Diocletian, who employed and Nicomehis leifure, and the wealth of the East, in the embellishment of dia. Nicomedia, a city placed on the verge of Europe and Afia, almost at an equal distance between the Danube and the Euphrates. By the taste of the monarch, and at the expence of the people, Nicomedia acquired, in the space of a few years, a degree of magnificence which might appear to have required the labour of ages, and became inferior only to Rome, Alexandria, and Antioch, in extent or populousness 91. The life of Diocletian and Maximian was a life of action. and a confiderable portion of it was spent in camps, or in their long 90 See Aurelius Victor, who likewise mentions the buildings erected by Maximian at Carthage, probably during the Moorish war. We shall insert some verses of Ausonius de Clar. urb. v.

Et Mediolani mira omnia: copia rerum; Innumeræ cultæque domus; facunda virorum Ingenia, et mores læti, tum duplice muro Amplificata loci species; populique voluptas Circus; et inclusi moles cuneata Theatri

Templa, Palatinæque arces, opulenfque Mo-

Et regio Herculei celebris sub honore lavacri. Cunctaque marmoreis ornata Perystyla signis; Moniaque in valli formam circumdata labro, Omnia quæ magnis operum velut æmula Excellunt: nec junctæ premit vicinia Romæ. 91 Lastant. de M. P. c. 17. Libanius Orat. viii. p. 203.

VOL. I.

3 N

and

C H A P. XIII.

and frequent marches; but whenever the public business allowed them any relaxation, they seem to have retired with pleasure to their favourite residences of Nicomedia and Milan. Till Diocletian, in the twentieth year of his reign, celebrated his Roman triumph, it is extremely doubtful whether he ever visited the ancient capital of the empire. Even on that memorable occasion his stay did not exceed two months. Disgusted with the licentious familiarity of the people, he quitted Rome with precipitation thirteen days before it was expected that he should have appeared in the senate, invested with the ensigns of the consular dignity 9°.

Debasement of Rome and of the senate.

The diflike expressed by Diocletian towards Rome and Roman freedom, was not the effect of momentary caprice, but the refult of the most artful policy. That crafty prince had framed a new fystem of Imperial government, which was afterwards completed by the family of Constantine; and as the image of the old conflitution was religiously preserved in the senate, he resolved to deprive that order of its small remains of power and consideration. We may recollect about eight years before the elevation of Diocletian, the transient greatness, and the ambitious hopes, of the Roman senate. As long as that enthusiasm prevailed, many of the nobles imprudently displayed their zeal in the cause of freedom; and after the successors of Probus had withdrawn their countenance from the republican party, the fenators were unable to difguife their impotent refentment. As the fovereign of Italy, Maximian was intrusted with the care of extinguishing this troublesome, rather than dangerous, spirit, and the task was perfectly suited to his cruel temper. The most illustrious members of the senate, whom Diocletian always affected to esteem, were involved, by his colleague, in the accufation of imaginary plots; and the possession of an elegant villa, or a well cultivated effate, was interpreted as a CHAP. convincing evidence of guilt 93. The camp of the Prætorians, which had fo long oppressed, began to protect, the majesty of Rome; and as those haughty troops were conscious of the decline of their power, they were naturally disposed to unite their strength with the authority of the fenate. By the prudent measures of Diocletian, the numbers of the Prætorians were infenfibly reduced, their privileges abolished 94, and their place supplied by two faithful legions New bodies of Illyricum, who, under the new titles of Jovians and Herculians, were appointed to perform the fervice of the Imperial guards 95. But the most fatal though secret wound, which the senate received from the hands of Diocletian and Maximian, was inflicted by the inevitable operation of their absence. As long as the emperors resided at Rome, that affembly might be oppressed, but it could scarcely be neglected. The fucceffors of Augustus exercised the power of dictaring whatever laws their wifdom or caprice might fuggeft; but thofelaws were ratified by the fanction of the fenate. The model of ancient freedom was preserved in its deliberations and decrees; and wife princes, who respected the prejudices of the Roman people, were in fome meafure obliged to affume the language and behaviour fuitable to the general and first magistrate of the republic. In the armies and in the provinces, they displayed the dignity of monarchs; and when they fixed their residence at a distance from the capital, they for ever laid aside the diffimulation which Augustus had recommended to his

92 Lactant. de M. P. c. 17. On a fimilar plebis, as not very agreeable to an Imperial occasion Ammianus mentions the dieacitas car. (See l. xvi. c. 10.)

<sup>93</sup> Lactantius accuses Maximian of destroying fictis criminationibus lumina fenatûs. (De M. P. c. 8.) Aurelius Victor speaks very doubtfully of the faith of Diocletian towards

<sup>94</sup> Truncatæ vires urbis, imminuto prætoriarum cohortium atque in armis vulgi numero. Aurelius Victor. Lactantius attributes to Galerius the profecution of the fame i. 17. plan (c. 26.).

<sup>95</sup> They were old corps stationed in Illyricum; and according to the ancient establishment, they each confiited of fix thousand men. They had acquired much reputation by the use of the plumbatæ, or darts loaded with lead. Each foldier carried five of thefe, which he darted from a confiderable distance, with great strength and dexterity. See Vegetius,

XIII.

C H A P. fucceffors. In the exercise of the legislative as well as the executive power, the fovereign advised with his ministers, instead of consulting the great council of the nation. The name of the fenate was mentioned with honour till the last period of the empire; the vanity of its members was still flattered with honorary distinctions 96, but the affembly, which had fo long been the fource, and fo long the instrument of power, was respectfully suffered to fink into oblivion. The fenate of Rome, lofing all connexion with the Imperial court and the actual conftitution, was left a venerable but useless monument of antiquity on the Capitoline hill.

Civil magistracies laid afide.

When the Roman princes had loft fight of the fenate and of their ancient capital, they eafily forgot the origin and nature of their legal power. The civil offices of conful, of proconful, of cenfor, and of tribune, by the union of which it had been formed, betrayed to the people its republican extraction. Those modest titles were laid afide 97; and if they still distinguished their high station by the appellation of Emperor, or IMPERATOR, that word was understood in a new and more dignified fense, and no longer denoted the general of the Roman armies, but the fovereign of the Roman world. Imperial dig- The name of Emperor, which was at first of a military nature, was affociated with another of a more fervile kind. The epithet of DOMINUS, or Lord, in its primitive fignification, was expressive, not of the authority of a prince over his subjects, or of a commander over his foldiers, but of the despotic power of a master over his domestic flaves 98. Viewing it in that odious light, it had been rejected with abhorrence by the first Cæsars. Their resistance insen-nity and titles.

> 96 See the Theodofian Code, 1. vi. tit. ii. with Godefroy's commentary.

<sup>57</sup> See the 12th differtation in Spanheim's excellent work De usu Numismatum. From medals, inscriptions, and historians, he examines every title feparately, and traces it from Augustus to the moment of its difappearing.

<sup>98</sup> Pliny (in Panegyr. c. 3. 55, &c.) fpeaks of Dominus with execration, as fynonymous to Tyrant, and opposite to Prince. And the fame Pliny regularly gives that title (in the tenth book of the epittles) to his friend rather than mafter, the virtuous Trajan. This strange contradiction puzzles the commentators, who think, and the translators, who can write.

fibly became more feeble, and the name less odious; till at length the style of our Lord and Emperor was not only bestowed by flattery, but was regularly admitted into the laws and public monuments. Such lofty epithets were fufficient to elate and fatisfy the most excessive vanity; and if the successors of Diocletian still declined the title of King; it feems to have been the effect not fo much of their moderation as of their delicacy. Wherever the Latin tongue was in use, (and it was the language of government throughout the empire) the Imperial title, as it was peculiar to themselves, conveyed a more respectable idea than the name of King, which they must have shared with an hundred barbarian chieftains; or which, at the best, they could derive only from Romulus or from Tarquin. But the fentiments of the East were very different from those of the West. From the earliest period of history, the sovereigns of Afia had been celebrated in the Greek language by the title of BASILEUS, or King; and fince it was confidered as the first distinction among men, it was soon employed by the servile provincials of the East, in their humble addresses to the Roman throne 99. Even the attributes, or at least the titles of the DIVINITY, were usurped by Diocletian and Maximian, who transmitted them to a succession of Christian emperors 100. Such extravagant compliments, however, foon lose their impiety by loting their meaning; and when the ear is once accustomed to the found, they are heard with indifference as vague though excessive professions of respect.

From the time of Augustus to that of Diocletian, the Roman Diocletian princes converling in a familiar manner among their fellow-citizens, were faluted only with the fame respect that was usually paid introduces assumes the diadem, and? the Perfian ceremonial.

<sup>99</sup> Synefius de Regno, Edit. Petav. p. 15. men, sacred majesty, divine oracles, &c. Ac-I am indebted for this quotation to the Abbé cording to Tillemont, Gregory of Nazianzen de la Bleterie.

&amp;c. It was customary for the emperors to mention (in the preamble of laws) their nu-complains most bitterly of the profanation, 100 See Vendale de Confecratione; p. 354, especially when it was practifed by an Arian emperor.

C HAP. to fenators and magistrates. Their principal distinction was the Imperial or military robe of purple; whilft the fenatorial garment was marked by a broad, and the equestrian by a narrow, band or stripe of the same honourable colour. The pride, or rather the policy, of Diocletian, engaged that artful prince to introduce the flately magnificence of the court of Persia ". He ventured to assume the diadem, an ornament detested by the Romans as the odious enfign of royalty, and the use of which had been confidered as the most desperate act of the madness of Caligula. It was no more than a broad white fillet fet with pearls, which encircled the emperor's head. The fumptuous robes of Diocletian and his fucceffors were of filk and gold; and it is remarked with indignation, that even their shoes were studded with the most precious gems. The access to their facred person was every day rendered more difficult, by the inflitution of new forms and ceremonies. The avenues of the palace were firifily guarded by the various fchools, as they began to be called, of domestic officers. The interior apartments were intrusted to the jealous vigilance of the eunuchs; the increase of whose numbers and influence was the most infallible symptom of the progress of despotism. When a subject was at length admitted to the Imperial prefence, he was obliged, whatever might be his rank, to fall proftrate on the ground, and to adore, according to the eastern fashion, the divinity of his lord and master 102. Diocletian was a man of fenfe, who in the course of private as well as public life had formed a just estimate both of himself and of mankind: nor is it eafy to conceive, that in substituting the manners of Persia to those of Rome, he was seriously actuated by so mean a principle as that of vanity. He flattered himself, that an oftentation of Jo2 Aurelius Victor. Eutropius ix. 26. It mony of adoration.

<sup>101</sup> See Spanheim de Usu Numismat. Dif- appears by the Panegyrists, that the Romans fert. xii. were foon reconciled to the name and cere-fplendour and luxury would fubdue the imagination of the multi- CHAP. tude; that the monarch would be less exposed to the rude license of the people and the foldiers, as his person was secluded from the public view; and that habits of fubmission would insensibly be productive of fentiments of veneration. Like the modefly affected by Augustus, the state maintained by Diocletian was a theatrical representation; but it must be confessed, that of the two comedies, the former was of a much more liberal and manly character than the latter. It was the aim of the one to difguife, and the object of the other to display, the unbounded power which the emperors possessed over the Roman world.

Oftentation was the first principle of the new system instituted by New form of administra-Diocletian. The fecond was division. He divided the empire, the tion, two provinces, and every branch of the civil as well as military administration. He multiplied the wheels of the machine of government, and rendered its operations less rapid but more secure. Whatever advantages, and whatever defects might attend thefe innovations, they must be ascribed in a very great degree to the first inventor; but as the new frame of policy was gradually improved and completed by fucceeding princes, it will be more fatisfactory to delay the confideration of it till the feafon of its full maturity and perfection 103. Referving, therefore, for the reign of Constantine a more exact picture of the new empire, we shall content ourselves with describing the principal and decisive outline, as it was traced by the hand of Diocletian. He had affociated three colleagues in the exercise of the supreme power; and as he was convinced that the abilities of a fingle man were inadequate to the public defence, he confidered the joint administration of four princes

Augusti, and

<sup>103</sup> The innovations introduced by Dio- the Theodosian code, appear already estacletian, are chiefly deduced,- 1st, from fome blished in the beginning of the reign of Convery strong passages in Lactantius; and, zdly, stantine. from the new and various offices, which, in

C H A P. not as a temporary expedient, but as a fundamental law of the constitution. It was his intention, that the two elder princes should be diffinguished by the use of the diadem, and the title of Augusti: that, as affection or esteem might direct their choice, they should regularly call to their affiftance two fubordinate colleagues; and that the Cæfars, rifing in their turn to the first rank, should supply an uninterrupted succession of emperors. The empire was divided into four parts. The East and Italy were the most honourable, the Danube and the Rhine the most laborious stations. The former claimed the presence of the Augusti, the latter were intrusted to the administration of the Cafars. The strength of the legions was in the hands of the four partners of fovereignty, and the despair of fucceffively vanquishing four formidable rivals, might intimidate the ambition of an afpiring general. In their civil government, the emperors were supposed to exercise the undivided power of the monarch, and their edicts, infcribed with their joint names, were received in all the provinces, as promulgated by their mutual councils and authority. Notwithstanding these precautions, the political union of the Roman world was gradually diffolved, and a principle of division was introduced, which, in the course of a few years, occasioned the perpetual separation of the eastern and western empires.

Increase of faves.

The fystem of Diocletian was accompanied with another very material disadvantage, which cannot even at present be totally overlooked; a more expensive establishment, and consequently an increase of taxes, and the oppression of the people. Instead of a modest family of slaves and freedmen, such as had contented the fimple greatness of Augustus and Trajan, three or four magnificent courts were established in the various parts of the empire, and as many Roman kings contended with each other and with the Persian monarch for the vain superiority of pomp and luxury. The number of ministers, of magistrates, of officers, and of fervants, who filled filled the different departments of the flate, was multiplied beyond CHAP. the example of former times; and (if we may borrow the warm expreffion of a contemporary), " when the proportion of those who " received, exceeded the proportion of those who contributed, the " provinces were oppressed by the weight of tributes 104." From this period to the extinction of the empire, it would be easy to deduce an uninterrupted feries of clamours and complaints. According to his religion and fituation, each writer chuses either Diocletian, or Constantine, or Valens, or Theodosius, for the object of his invectives; but they unanimously agree in representing the burden of the public impositions, and particularly the land-tax and capitation, as the intolerable and increasing grievance of their own times. From fuch a concurrence, an impartial historian who is obliged to extract truth from fatire as well as from panegyric, will be inclined to divide the blame among the princes whom they accuse, and to ascribe their exactions much less to their personal vices, than to the uniform fystem of their administration. The emperor Diocletian was indeed the author of that fystem; but during his reign, the growing evil was confined within the bounds of modesty and discretion, and he deserves the reproach of establishing pernicious precedents, rather than of exercifing actual oppression 105. It may be added, that his revenues were managed with prudent œconomy; and that after all the current expences were discharged, there still remained in the Imperial treasury an ample provision either for judicious liberality or for any emergency of the state.

XIII.

It was in the twenty-first year of his reign that Diocletian exe- Abdication cuted his memorable refolution of abdicating the empire; an action of Diocletian and more naturally to have been expected from the elder or the younger Maximian.

<sup>1</sup>c4 Lactant. de M. P. c. 7.

ceffit. Aurel. Victor, who has treated the 105 Indicta lex nova quæ sane illorum tem- character of Diocletian with good sense, though porum modestia tolerabilis, in perniciem pro- in bad Latin.

Refemblance to Charles the Fifth.

C H A P. Antoninus, than from a prince who had never practifed the leffons of philosophy either in the attainment or in the use of supreme power. Diocletian acquired the glory of giving to the world the first example of a refignation 106, which has not been very frequently imitated by fucceeding monarchs. The parallel of Charles the Fifth, however, will naturally offer itself to our mind, not only fince the cloquence of a modern historian has rendered that name fo familiar to an English reader, but from the very striking resemblance between the characters of the two emperors, whose political abilities were fuperior to their military genius, and whose specious virtues were much less the effect of nature than of art. The abdication of Charles appears to have been haftened by the viciflitude of fortune; and the disappointment of his favourite schemes urged him to relinquish a power which he found inadequate to his ambition. But the reign of Diocletian had flowed with a tide of uninterrupted fuccess; nor was it till after he had vanquished all his enemies, and accomplished all his defigns, that he feems to have entertained any ferious thoughts of refigning the empire. Charles nor Diocletian were arrived at a very advanced period of life; fince the one was only fifty-five, and the other was no more than fifty-nine years of age; but the active life of those princes, their wars and journies, the cares of royalty, and their application to bufiness, had already impaired their constitution, and brought on the infirmities of a premature old age 107.

4. D. 304. of Dioclegian.

Notwithstanding the feverity of a very cold and rainy winter, Diocletian left Italy foon after the ceremony of his triumph, and began his progress towards the East round the circuit of the Illyrian pro-num Imperium, qui ex tanto fastigio sponte may fometimes be admitted as an evidence of ad privatæ vitæ statum civilitatemque reme- public sacts, though very seldom of private anecdotes.

winces.

<sup>106</sup> Solus omnium, post conditum Roma- ness are taken from Lactantius (c. 17.), who aret. Eutrop. ix. 28.

<sup>147</sup> The particulars of the journey and ill-

vinces. From the inclemency of the weather, and the fatigue of the CHAP. journey, he foon contracted a flow illness; and though he made easy marches, and was generally carried in a close litter, his diforder, before he arrived at Nicomedia, about the end of the fummer, was become very ferious and alarming. During the whole winter he was confined to his palace; his danger inspired a general and unaffected concern; but the people could only judge of the various alterations of his health, from the joy or consternation which they discovered in the countenances and behaviour of his attendants. The rumour of his death was for fome time univerfally believed, and it was supposed to be concealed, with a view to prevent the troubles that might have happened during the absence of the Casar Galerius. At length, however, on the first of March, Diocletian once more appeared in public, but fo pale and emaciated, that he could fearcely have been recognifed by those to whom his person was the most familiar. It was His prutime to put an end to the painful struggle, which he had sustained during more than a year, between the care of his health and that of his dignity. The former required indulgence and relaxation, the latter compelled him to direct, from the bed of fickness, the administration of a great empire. He resolved to pass the remainder of his days in honourable repose, to place his glory beyond the reach of fortune, and to relinquish the theatre of the world to his younger and more active affociates 103.

The ceremony of his abdication was performed in a spacious plain, about three miles from Nicomedia. The emperor ascended a lofty throne, and in a speech, full of reason and dignity, declared his intention, both to the people and to the foldiers who were affembled on this extraordinary occasion. As foon as he had divested A.D. 305.

108 Aurelius Victor ascribes the abdication, pending troubles. One of the panegyrists which had been so variously accounted for, to (vi. 9.) mentions the age and infirmities of two causes. 1st, Diocletian's contempt of am- Diocletian, as a very natural reason for his bition; and adly, His apprehension of im- retirement.

C H A P.

Compliance of Maximian. himself of the purple, he withdrew from the gazing multitude; and traverfing the city in a covered chariot, proceeded, without delay, to the favourite retirement which he had chosen in his native country of Dalmatia. On the fame day, which was the first of May 109, Maximian, as it had been previously concerted, made his refignation of the Imperial dignity at Milan. Even in the splendour of the Roman triumph, Diocletian had meditated his defign of abdicating the government. As he wished to fecure the obedience of Maximian, he exacted from him either a general affurance that he would fubmit his actions to the authority of his benefactor, or a particular promife that he would descend from the throne, whenever he should receive the advice and the example. This engagement, though it was confirmed by the folemnity of an oath before the altar of the Capitoline Jupiter "", would have proved a feeble restraint on the fierce temper of Maximian, whose passion was the love of power, and who neither defired present tranquillity nor future reputation. he yielded, however reluctantly, to the afcendant which his wifer colleague had acquired over him, and retired, immediately after his abdication, to a villa in Lucania, where it was almost impossible that such an impatient spirit could find any lasting tranquillity.

Retirement of Diccletian at Salona. Diocletian, who, from a fervile origin, had raifed himself to the throne, passed the nine last years of his life in a private condition. Reason had dictated, and content seems to have accompanied, his retreat, in which he enjoyed for a long time the respect of those princes to whom he had resigned the possession of the world "".

It

<sup>109</sup> The difficulties as well as miffalkes attending the dates both of the year and of the day of Diocletian's abdication, are perfectly cleared up by Tillemont, Hift. des Empereurs, tom. iv. p. 525. Note 19, aud by Pagi ad annum.

<sup>110</sup> See Panegyr. Veter. vi. 9. The oration was pronounced after Maximian had reassumed the purple.

Eumenius pays him a very fine compliment, "At enim divinum illum virum, qui "primus imperium et participavit et pofuit, "confilii

It is feldom that minds, long exercised in business, have formed CHAP. any habits of conversing with themselves, and in the loss of power they principally regret the want of occupation. The amusements of letters and of devotion, which afford fo many refources in folitude, were incapable of fixing the attention of Diocletian; but he had preferved, or at least he soon recovered, a taste for the most innocent as well as natural pleasures, and his leisure hours were fufficiently employed in building, planting, and gardening. His answer to Maximian is deservedly celebrated. He was solicited His philosoby that restless old man to reassume the reins of government and phy, the Imperial purple. He rejected the temptation with a smile of pity, calmly observing, that if he could shew Maximian the cabbages which he had planted with his own hands at Salona, he should no longer be urged to relinquish the enjoyment of happiness for the pursuit of power "2". In his conversations with his friends, he frequently acknowledged, that of all arts, the most difficult was the art of reigning; and he expressed himself on that favourite topic with a degree of warmth which could be the refult only of experience. "How often, was he accustomed to sav, is it the interest " of four or five ministers to combine together to deceive their " fovereign. Secluded from mankind by his exalted dignity, the "truth is concealed from his knowledge; he can fee only with "their eyes, he hears nothing but their mifrepresentations. He " confers the most important offices upon vice and weakness, and " difgraces the most virtuous and deserving among his subjects. " By fuch infamous arts, added Diocletian, the best and wifest " princes are fold to the venal corruption of their courtiers 173," had learned this conversation from his father. Panegyr. Vet. vii. 15.

&quot; confilii et facti fui non pœnitet; nec ami-" fisse se putat quod sponte transcripsit. Fæ-" lix beatusque vere quem vestra, tantorum " principum, colunt obsequia privatum."

<sup>*12</sup> We are obliged to the younger Victor for this celebrated bon mot. Eutropius mentions the thing in a more general manner. 113 Hift. August. p. 223, 224. Vopiscus

CHAP. A just estimate of greatness, and the assurance of immortal same, improve our relish for the pleasures of retirement; but the Roman emperor had filled too important a character in the world, to enjoy without allay the comforts and fecurity of a private condition. It was impossible that he could remain ignorant of the troubles which afflicted the empire after his abdication. It was impossible that he could be indifferent to their confequences. Fear, forrow, and discontent, sometimes pursued him into the solitude of Salona. His tenderness, or at least his pride, was deeply wounded by the misfortunes of his wife and daughter; and the last moments of Diocletian were embittered by fome affronts, which Licinius and Constantine might have spared the father of so many emperors, and the first author of their own fortune. A report, though of a very doubtful nature, has reached our times, that he prudently withdrew himself from their power by a voluntary death "+.

and death. A. D. 313.

Description of Salona and the adjacent country.

Before we difmis the consideration of the life and character of Diocletian, we may, for a moment, direct our view to the place of his retirement. Salona, a principal city of his native province of Dalmatia, was near two hundred Roman miles (according to the measurement of the public highways) from Aquileia and the confines of Italy, and about two hundred and feventy from Sirmium, the usual residence of the emperors, whenever they visited the Illyrian frontier "5. A miserable village still preserves the name of Salona, but fo late as the fixteenth century, the remains of a theatre, and a confused prospect of broken arches and marble columns, continued to attest its ancient splendour 116. About fix or seven miles

from

<sup>124</sup> The younger Victor flightly mentions the report. But as Diocletian had disobliged a powerful and fuccefsful party, his memory has been loaded with every crime and misfortune. It has been affirmed that he died raving mad, that he was condemned as a criminal by the Roman fenate, &c.

<sup>115</sup> See the Itiner. p. 269. 272. Edit. Wessel. 116 The Abate Fortis, in his Viaggio in Dalmazia, p. 43. (printed at Venice in the year 1774, in two fmall volumes in quarto) quotes a MS. account of the antiquities of Salona, composed by Giambattista Giustiniani about the middle of the xvith century.

from the city, Diocletian constructed a magnificent palace, and C II A P. we may infer from the greatness of the work, how long he had meditated his defign of abdicating the empire. The choice of a fpot which united all that could contribute either to health or to luxury, did not require the partiality of a native. "The foil was " dry and fertile, the air is pure and wholesome, and though ex-" tremely hot during the fummer months, this country feldom " feels those fultry and noxious winds, to which the coast of " Istria and some parts of Italy are exposed. The views from "the palace are no less beautiful than the soil and climate was in-" viting. Towards the west lies the fertile shore that stretches " along the Hadriatic, in which a number of small islands are " fcattered in fuch a manner, as to give this part of the fea the "appearance of a great lake. On the north fide lies the bay, " which led to the ancient city of Salona; and the country be-" youd it, appearing in fight, forms a proper contrast to that " more extensive prospect of water, which the Hadriatic presents " both to the fouth and to the east. Towards the north, the view " is terminated by high and irregular mountains, fituated at a " proper distance, and, in many places, covered with villages, " woods, and vineyards "7."

Though Constantine, from a very obvious prejudice, affects to Of Dioclemention the palace of Diocletian with contempt 118, yet one of their fucceffors, who could only fee it in a neglected and mutilated flate, Adam's antiquities of Diocletian's pa- thor (p. 38.) observes, that a taste for agrilace at Spalatro, p. 6. We may add a cir- culture is reviving at Spalatro; and that an cumstance or two from the Abate Fortis: the experimental farm has lately been established little stream of the Hyader, mentioned by Lucan, produces most exquisite trout, which a fagacious writer, perhaps a monk, supposes to 25. In this fermon, the emperor, or the have been one of the principal reasons that bishop who composed it for him, affects to determined Diocletian in the choice of his relate the miserable end of all the persecutors retirement. Fortis, p. 45. The fame au- of the church.

near the city, by a fociety of Gentlemen.

11: Constantin. Orat, ad Coetum Sanct. c.

C H A P. celebrates its magnificence in terms of the highest admiration ". It covered an extent of ground confisting of between nine and ten English acres. The form was quadrangular, flanked with fixteen towers. Two of the fides were near fix hundred, and the other two near feven hundred feet in length. The whole was constructed of a beautiful free-stone, extracted from the neighbouring quarries of Trau or Tragutium, and very little inferior to marble itself. Four streets, interfecting each other at right angles, divided the feveral parts of this great edifice, and the approach to the principal apartment was from a stately entrance, which is still denominated the Golden gate. The approach was terminated by a perifylium of granite columns, on one fide of which we discover the square temple of Æsculapius, on the other the octagon temple of Jupiter. The latter of those deities Diocletian revered as the patron of his fortunes, the former as the protector of his health. By comparing the present remains with the precepts of Vitruvius, the several parts of the building, the baths, bedchamber, the atrium, the basilica, and the Cyzicene, Corinthian, and Egyptian halls, have been described with some degree of precision, or at least of probability. Their forms were various, their proportions just, but they were all attended with two imperfections, very repugnant to our modern notions of tafte and conveniency. These stately rooms had neither windows nor chimnies. They were lighted from the top (for the building feems to have confifted of no more than one flory), and they received their heat by the help of pipes that were conveyed along the walls. The range of principal apartments was protected towards the fouth-west, by a portico five hundred and feventeen feet long, which must have formed a very noble and delightful walk, when the beauties of painting and fculpture were added to those of the prospect.

<sup>119</sup> Constantin. Porphyr. de statu Imper. p. 86.

Had this magnificent edifice remained in a folitary country, it CHAP. would have been exposed to the ravages of time; but it might, perhaps, have escaped the rapacious industry of man. The village of Aspalathus 120, and long afterwards the provincial town of Spalatro, have grown out of its ruins. The golden gate now opens into the market place. St. John the Baptist has usurped the honours of Æsculapius; and the temple of Jupiter, under the protection of the Virgin, is converted into the cathedral church. For this account of Diocletian's palace, we are principally indebted to an ingenious artist of our own time and country, whom a very liberal curiofity car- Decline of ried into the heart of Dalmatia 121. But there is room to suspect that the elegance of his defigns and engraving has fomewhat flattered the objects which it was their purpose to represent. We are informed by a more recent and very judicious traveller, that the awful ruins of Spalatro are not less expressive of the decline of the arts. than of the greatness of the Roman empire in the time of Diocletian 122. If fuch was indeed the state of architecture, we must naturally believe that painting and fculpture had experienced a ftill more fensible decay. The practice of architecture is directed by a few general and even mechanical rules. But fculpture, and above all, painting, propose to themselves the imitation not only of the forms of nature, but of the characters and passions of the human foul. In those sublime arts, the dexterity of the hand is of little avail, unless it is animated by fancy, and guided by the most correct taffe and observation.

120 Danville, Geographie Ancienne, tom. Fortis. "E'bastevolmente nota agli amatori i. p. 162.

122 I shall quote the words of the Abate Dalmazia, p. 40.

" dell' Architettura, e dell' Antichità, l'ope-" ra del Signor Adams, che a donato molto " a que' fuperbi vestigi coll'abituale eleganza " del fuo toccalapis e del bulino. In gene-

" rale la rozzezza del fcalpello, e'l cativo " gusto del secolo vi gareggiano colla mag-" nificenza del fabricato." See Viaggio in

VOL. I.

3 P

It

<sup>121</sup> Messieurs Adam and Clerisseau, attended by two draughtfmen, vifited Spalatro in the month of July 1757. The magnificent work which their journey produced, was published in London seven years after-

CHAP. XIII. -Of letters.

It is almost unnecessary to remark, that the civil distractions of the empire, the license of the foldiers, the inroads of the barbarians, and the progress of despotism, had proved very unfavourable to genius and even to learning. The fuccession of Illyrian princes restored the empire, without restoring the sciences. Their military education was not calculated to inspire them with the love of letters; and even the mind of Diocletian, however active and capacious in bufinefs, was totally uninformed by fludy or speculation. The professions of law and physic are of such common use and certain profit, that they will always secure a sufficient number of practitioners, endowed with a reasonable degree of abilities and knowledge; but it does not appear that the fludents in those two faculties appeal to any celebrated masters who flourished within that period. The voice of poetry was filent. History was reduced to dry and confused abridgments, alike destitute of amusement and infruction. A languid and affected eloquence was ftill retained in the pay and fervice of the emperors, who encouraged not any arts except those which contributed to the gratification of their pride, or the defence of their power 123.

The new Platonists.

The declining age of learning and of mankind is marked, however, by the rife and rapid progress of the new Platonists. The school of Alexandria filenced those of Athens; and the ancient fects enrolled themselves under the banners of the more fashionable teachers, who recommended their fystem by the novelty of their method, and the aufterity of their manners. Several of these masters, Ammonius, Plotinus, Amelius, and Porphyry 124, were men of pro-

the emperors Maximian and Constantius, and Profesior of Rhetoric in the college of Autun. His falary was fix hundred thoufand fefterces, which, according to the lowest computation of that age, must have exceeded three thoufand pounds a year. He generously request-

123 The orator Eumenius was fecretary to ed the permission of employing it in rebuilding the college. See his Oration De restaurandis fcholis; which, though not exempt from vanity, may atone for his panegyrics.

124 Porphyry died about the time of Diocletian's abdication. The life of his master Plotinus, which he composed, will give us

the

CHAP.

found thought, and intense application; but by mistaking the true object of philosophy, their labours contributed much less to improve than to corrupt the human understanding. The knowledge that is fuited to our fituation and powers, the whole compass of moral, natural, and mathematical science, was neglected by the new Platonists; whilst they exhausted their strength in the verbal disputes of metaphyfics, attempted to explore the fecrets of the invifible world, and studied to reconcile Aristotle with Plato, on subjects of which both these philosophers were as ignorant as the rest of mankind. Confuming their reason in these deep but unsubstantial meditations, their minds were exposed to illusions of fancy. They flattered themfelves that they possessed the fecret of disengaging the foul from its corporeal prison; claimed a familiar intercourse with dæmons and fpirits, and, by a very fingular revolution, converted the fludy of philosophy into that of magic. The ancient fages had derided the popular fuperstition; after disguising its extravagance by the thin pretence of allegory, the disciples of Plotinus and Porphyry became its most zealous defenders. As they agreed with the Christians in a few mysterious points of faith, they attacked the remainder of their theological system with all the fury of civil war. The new Platonists would fearcely deferve a place in the history of science, but in that of the church the mention of them will very frequently occur.

the most complete idea of the genius of the very curious piece is inferted in Fabricius, fest, and the manners of its professors. This Bibliotheca Greeca, tom. iv. p. 83-148.

CHAP. XIV.

Troubles after the abdication of Diocletian.—Death of Constantius.—Elevation of Constantine and Maxentius.

—Six Emperors at the same time.—Death of Maximian and Galerius.—Victories of Constantine over Maxentius and Licinius.—Re-union of the Empire under the authority of Constantine.

Period of civil wars and confu-fion.
A. D. 305—323.

THE balance of power established by Diocletian subsisted no longer than while it was sustained by the firm and dexterous hand of the founder. It required such a fortunate mixture of different tempers and abilities, as could scarcely be found or even expected a second time; two emperors without jealously, two Cæsars without ambition, and the same general interest invariably pursued by four independent princes. The abdication of Diocletian and Maximian was succeeded by eighteen years of discord and confusion. The empire was afflicted by five civil wars; and the remainder of the time was not so much a state of tranquillity as a suspension of arms between several hostile monarchs, who, viewing each other with an eye of fear and hatred, strove to increase their respective forces at the expence of their subjects.

Character and fituation of Conftantius. As foon as Diocletian and Maximian had refigned the purple, their flation, according to the rules of the new conflictation, was filled by the two Cæfars, Conflantius and Galerius, who immediately affumed the title of Augustus'. The honours of feniority and precedence were allowed to the former of those princes, and CHAP. he continued, under a new appellation, to administer his ancient department of Gaul, Spain, and Britain. The government of those ample provinces was sufficient to exercise his talents, and to fatisfy his ambition. Clemency, temperance, and moderation, diftinguished the amiable character of Constantius, and his fortunate fubjects had frequently occasion to compare the virtues of their fovereign with the passions of Maximian, and even with the arts of Diocletian 2. Instead of imitating their eastern pride and magnificence. Constantius preserved the modesty of a Roman prince. He declared with unaffected fincerity, that his most valued treasure was in the hearts of his people, and that, whenever the dignity of the throne, or the danger of the flate, required any extraordinary fupply, he could depend with confidence on their gratitude and liberality 3. The provincials of Gaul, Spain, and Britain, fenfible of his worth and of their own happiness, reflected with anxiety on the declining health of the emperor Constantius, and the tender age of his numerous family, the issue of his second marriage with the daughter of Maximian.

* M. de Montesquieu (Considerations sur la Grandeur et la Decadence des Romains, c. 17.) supposes, on the authority of Orosius and Eufebius, that, on this occasion, the emdiffered from that of Diocletian.

The stern temper of Galerius was cast in a very different mould; Of Galerius, and while he commanded the efteem of his fubjects, he feldom condescended to solicit their affections. His fame in arms, and above all, the fuccess of the Persian war, had elated his haughty mind, which was naturally impatient of a fuperior, or even of an equal. If it were possible to rely on the partial testimony of an injudicious

2 Hic non modo amabilis, fed etiam vene- non admodum affectians; ducenfque melius unum claustrum reservari. Id. ibid. He gave an entertainment, he was obliged to borrow a fervice of plate.

writer,

rabilis Gallis fuit ; præcipue quòd Diocleti- publicas opes a privatis haberi, quam intra ani fuspectam prudentiam, et Maximiani sanguinariam violentiam imperio ejus evaserant. carried this maxim so far, that whenever he Eutrop. Breviar. x. 1.

<sup>3</sup> Divitiis Provincialium (mel. provinciarum) ac privatorum studens, fisci commoda

CHAP.

writer, we might afcribe the abdication of Diocletian to the menaces of Galerius, and relate the particulars of a private converfation between the two princes, in which the former discovered as much pufillanimity as the latter displayed ingratitude and arrogance 4. But these obscure anecdotes are sufficiently refuted by an impartial view of the character and conduct of Diocletian. Whatever might otherwise have been his intentions, if he had apprehended any danger from the violence of Galerius, his good fenfe would have inftructed him to prevent the ignominious contest; and as he had held the fceptre with glory, he would have refigned it without difgrace.

The two Cæfars, Severus and Maximin.

After the elevation of Constantius and Galerius to the rank of Augusti, two new Casars were required to supply their place, and to complete the fystem of the Imperial government. Diocletian was fincerely defirous of withdrawing himfelf from the world; he confidered Galerius, who had married his daughter, as the firmest support of his family and of the empire; and he confented, without reluctance, that his fuccessor should assume the merit as well as the envy of the important nomination. It was fixed without confulting the interest or inclination of the princes of the West. Each of them had a fon who was arrived at the age of manhood, and who might have been deemed the most natural candidates for the vacant honour. But the impotent refentment of Maximian was no longer to be dreaded; and the moderate Constantius, though he might despife the dangers, was humanely apprehensive of the calamities of civil war. The two persons whom Galerius promoted to the rank of Casar, were much better fuited to ferve the views of his ambition; and their principal recommendation feems to have confifted in the want of merit or CHAP. personal consequence. The first of these was Daza, or, as he was afterwards called, Maximin, whose mother was the fister of Galerius. The unexperienced youth still betrayed by his manners and language his ruftic education, when, to his own aftonishment as well as that of the world, he was invested by Diocletian with the purple, exalted to the dignity of Cæfar, and intrufted with the fovereign command of Egypt and Syria 5. At the fame time, Severus, a faithful fervant, addicted to pleafure, but not incapable of bufiness, was fent to Milan, to receive from the reluctant hands of Maximian the Cæsarean ornaments, and the possession of Italy and Africa 6. According to the forms of the constitution, Severus acknowledged the supremacy of the western emperor; but he was absolutely devoted to the commands of his benefactor Galerius, who, referving to himfelf the intermediate countries from the confines of Italy to those of Syria, firmly established his power over threefourths of the monarchy. In the full confidence, that the approaching death of Constantius would leave him sole master of the Roman world, we are affured that he had arranged in his mind a long succession of future princes, and that he meditated his own retreat from public life, after he should have accomplished a glorious reign of about twenty years 7.

* Lactantius de Mort. Persecutor. c. 18. historians who put us in mind of the admi-Were the particulars of this conference more rable faying of the great Condè to cardinal de confishent with truth and decency, we might Retz; "Ces coquins nous font parler et agir, fill ask, how they came to the knowledge of "comme ils auroient fait eux-memes à notre an obscure rhetorician? But there are many "place."

But within less than eighteen months, two unexpected revolutions Ambition of overturned the ambitious schemes of Galerius. The hopes of uniting the western provinces to his empire, were disappointed by the two re elevation of Constantine, whilst Italy and Africa were lost by the fuccessful revolt of Maxentius.

Galerius diftwo revolu-

<sup>5</sup> Sublatus nuper a pecoribus et filvis (fays Lactantius de M. P. c. 19.) flatim Scutarius, continuo Protector, mox Tribunus, postridie Cæfar, accepit Orientem. Aurelius Victor is too liberal in giving him the whole portion of Diocletian.

<sup>6</sup> His diligence and fidelity are acknowledged even by Lactantius, de M. P. c. 18.

<sup>7</sup> These schemes, however, rest only on the very doubtful authority of Lactantius, de-M. P. c. 20.

CHAP. XIV. Birth, education, and escape of Constantine.

A. D. 274.

I. The fame of Constantine has rendered posterity attentive to the most minute circumstances of his life and actions. The place of his birth, as well as the condition of his mother Helena, have been the subject not only of literary but of national disputes. Notwithstanding the recent tradition, which assigns for her father, a British king, we are obliged to confess, that Helena was the daughter of an innkeeper 8; but at the fame time we may defend the legality of her marriage, against those who have represented her as the concubine of Constantius 9. The great Constantine was most probably born at Naissus, in Dacia 10, and it is not surprising, that in a family and province diftinguished only by the profession of arms, the youth should discover very little inclination to improve his poraries of Constantine, was invented in the darkness of monasteries, was embellished by Jeffrey of Monmouth, and the writers of the xiith century, has been defended by our antiquarians of the last age, and is seriously related in the ponderous hiftory of England, compiled by Mr. Carte (vol. i. p. 147.). He transports, however, the kingdom of Coil, the imaginary father of Helena, from Essex to the wall of Antoninus.

9 Eutropius (x. 2.) expresses, in a few words, the real truth, and the occasion of the error, " ex obscuriori matrimonio ejus filius." Zofimus (l. ii. p. 78.) eagerly feized the most unfavourable report, and is followed by Orofius (vii. 25.), whose authority is oddly enough overlooked by the indefatigable but partial Tillemont. By infifting on the divorce of Helena, Diocletian acknowledged her mar-

There are three opinions with regard to the place of Conftantine's birth, 1. Our English antiquarians were used to dwell with rapture on the words of his panegyrift; " Britannias illic oriendo nobiles fecisti." But this celebrated passage may be referred with as much propriety to the accession as to * This tradition, unknown to the contem- the nativity of Constantine. 2. Some of the modern Greeks have afcribed the honour of his birth to Drepanum, a town on the gulf of Nicomedia (Cellarius, tom. ii. p. 174.), which Constantine dignified with the name of Helenopolis, and Justinian adorned with many splendid buildings (Procop. de Ædificiis, v. 2.). It is indeed probable enough that Helena's father kept an inn at Drepanum; and that Constantius might lodge there when he returned from a Persian embassy in the reign of Aurelian. But in the wandering life of a foldier, the place of his marriage, and the places where his children are born, have very little connection with each other. 3. The claim of Naissus is supported by the anonymous writer, published at the end of Ammianus, p. 710, and who in general copied very good materials; and it is confirmed by Julius Firmicius (de Astrologia, I. 1. c. 4.), who flourished under the reign of Constantine himself. Some objections have been raifed against the integrity of the text, and the application of the passage of Firmicius; but the former is established by the best MSS. and the latter is very ably defended by Lipfius de Magnitudine Romana, 1. iv. c. 11. et fupplement.

mind

mind by the acquifition of knowledge ". He was about eighteen CHAP. years of age when his father was promoted to the rank of Cæsar; but that fortunate event was attended with his mother's divorce; and the fplendour of an Imperial alliance reduced the fon of Helena to a flate of difgrace and humiliation. Inflead of following Conflantius into the West, he remained in the service of Diocletian, fignalized his valour in the wars of Egypt and Persia, and gradually rose to the honourable station of a tribune of the first order. The figure of Constantine was tall and majestic; he was dexterous in all his exercises, intrepid in war, affable in peace; in his whole conduct, the active spirit of youth was tempered by habitual prudence; and while his mind was engroffed by ambition, he appeared cold and infensible to the allurements of pleasure. The favour of the people and foldiers, who had named him as a worthy candidate for the rank of Cæfar, ferved only to exasperate the jealousy of Galerius, and though prudence might restrain him from exercising any open violence, an absolute monarch is seldom at a loss how to execute a fure and fecret revenge 12. Every hour increased the danger of Constantine, and the anxiety of his father, who, by repeated letters, expressed the warmest desire of embracing his son. For fome time the policy of Galerius supplied him with delays and excuses, but it was impossible long to refuse so natural a request of his affociate, without maintaining his refusal by arms. The permission of the journey was reluctantly granted, and whatever precautions the emperor might have taken to intercept a return. the confequences of which, he, with fo much reason, apprehended, they were effectually disappointed by the incredible diligence of 11 Literis minus instructus. Anonym. ad strous lion. See Praxagoras apud Photium, Ammian. p. 710.

p. 63. Praxagoras, an Athenian philoso-12 Galerius, or perhaps his own courage, pher, had written a life of Constantine, in exposed him to single combat with a Sarmatus (Anonym. p. 710.), and with a mon-contemporary.

C H A P. XIV.

Constantine". Leaving the palace of Nicomedia in the night, he travelled post through Bithynia, Thrace, Dacia, Pannonia, Italy, and Gaul, and amidst the joyful acclamations of the people, reached the port of Boulogne, in the very moment when his father was preparing to embark for Britain 14.

Death of Conflantius, and elevation of Conflantine.
A. D. 306.
July 25.

The British expedition, and an easy victory over the barbarians of Caledonia, were the last exploits of the reign of Constantius. He ended his life in the Imperial palace of York, fifteen months after he had received the title of Augustus, and almost fourteen years and a half after he had been promoted to the rank of Cæfar. His death was immediately succeeded by the elevation of Constantine. The ideas of inheritance and fuccession are so very familiar, that the generality of mankind confider them as founded, not only in reason, but in nature itself. Our imagination readily transfers the fame principles from paivate property to public dominion: and whenever a virtuous father leaves behind him a fon whose merit seems to justify the esteem, or even the hopes of the people, the joint influence of prejudice and of affection operates with irrefiftible weight. The flower of the western armies had followed Constantius into Britain, and the national troops were reinforced by a numerous body of Alemanni, who obeyed the orders of Crocus, one of their hereditary chieftains 15. The opinion of their own importance, and the affurance that Britain, Gaul, and Spain would acquiesce in their nomination, were diligently inculcated to the legions by the adherents

c. 24, suppose, with lefs accuracy, that he found his father on his death-bed.

&lt;sup>13</sup> Zofimus, 1. ii. p. 78, 79. Lactantius de M. P. c. 24. The former tells a very fool-horfes, which he had used, to be hamstrung. Such a bloody execution, without preventing a pursuit, would have scattered suspicious, and might have stopped his journey.

<sup>**</sup> Anonym, p. 710. Panegyr. Veter. vii. 4, king, who affited the Roman arms, with an Boroffent in p. 79. Eufebius de Vi. independent body of his own fubjects. The Conftant. 1, i. c. 21, and Lactantius de M. P. practice grew familiar, and at laft became fatal.

&lt;sup>35</sup> Cunctis qui aderant annitentibus, fed pracipue Croco (alii Eroco) Alamannorum Rege, auxilii gratia Contantium comitato, imperium capit. Victor Junior, c.41. This is perhaps the first inflance of a barbarian king, who affisted the Roman arms, with an independent body of his own fubjects. The practice gree familiar, and at last became fatal.

of Constantine. The foldiers were asked, Whether they could hefi- CHAP. tate a moment between the honour of placing at their head the worthy fon of their beloved emperor, and the ignominy of tamely expecting the arrival of fome obscure stranger, on whom it might please the sovereign of Asia to bestow the armies and provinces of the West. It was infinuated to them, that gratitude and liberality held a diffinguished place among the virtues of Constantine; nor did that artful prince shew himself to the troops, till they were prepared to falute him with the names of Augustus and Emperor. The throne was the object of his defires; and had he been less actuated by ambition, it was his only means of fafety. He was well acquainted with the character and fentiments of Galerius, and fufficiently apprized, that if he wished to live he must determine to reign. The decent and even obstinate refistance which he chose to affect 16, was contrived to justify his usurpation; nor did he yield to the acclamations of the army, till he had provided the proper materials for a letter, which he immediately dispatched to the emperor of the East. Constantine informed him of the melancholy event of his father's death, modeftly afferted his natural claim to the fuccession, and respectfully lamented, that the affectionate violence of his troops had not permitted him to folicit the Imperial purple in the regular and conflitutional manner. The first emotions of Galerius were those of surprise, disappointment, and rage; and as he could feldom reftrain his paffions, he loudly threatened, that he would commit to the flames both the letter and the meffenger. But his refentment infenfibly fubfided; and when he recollected the He is acdoubtful chance of war, when he had weighed the character and firength of his adversary, he consented to embrace the honourable accommodation which the prudence of Constantine had left open to title of Caknowledged by Galerius, who gives him only the far, and that of Augustus

<sup>16</sup> His panegyrist Eumenius (vii. 8.) ven- but in vain, to escape from the hands of his to Severus. tures to affirm, in the presence of Constan- soldiers. tine, that he put fours to his horse, and tried,

CHAP. him. Without either condemning or ratifying the choice of the British army, Galerius accepted the son of his deceased colleague, as the fovereign of the provinces beyond the Alps; but he gave him only the title of Cæfar, and the fourth rank among the Roman princes, whilft he conferred the vacant place of Augustus on his favourite Severus. The apparent harmony of the empire was still preferved, and Constantine, who already possessed the substance, expected, without impatience, an opportunity of obtaining the honours, of fupreme power 17.

The brothers and fifters of Constantine.

The children of Constantius by his second marriage were fix in number, three of either fex, and whose Imperial descent might have folicited a preference over the meaner extraction of the fon of Helena. But Constantine was in the thirty-second year of his age, in the full vigour both of mind and body, at the time when the eldest of his brothers could not possibly be more than thirteen years old. His claim of faperior merit had been allowed and ratified by the dying emperor 18. In his last moments, Constantius bequeathed to his eldest for the care of the fafety as well as greatness of the family; conjuring him to affume both the authority and the fentiments of a father with regard to the children of Theodora. Their liberal education, advantageous marriages, the fecure dignity of their lives, and the first honours of the state with which they were invested, attest the fraternal affection of Constantine; and as thoseprinces possessed a mild and grateful disposition, they submitted without reluctance to the superiority of his genius and fortune 19.

Lactantius de M. P. c. 25. Eumenius febius (in Vit. Conftantin. 1. i. c. 18, 21.) and of Julian (Oration i.).

II. The

(vii. 8.) gives a rhetorical turn to the whole-

<sup>18</sup> The choice of Constantine, by his dying father, which is warranted by reason, and infinuated by Eumenius, feems to be confirmed by the most unexceptionable authority, the concurring evidence of Lactantius (de M. P. c. 24.) and of Libanius (Oration i.); of Eu- fpeak hereafter.

<sup>19</sup> Of the three fifters of Conftantine, Conftantia married the emperor Licinius, Anastafia the Cæfar Bassianus, and Eutropia the conful Nepotianus. The three brothers were, Dalmatius, Julius Constantius, and Annibalianus, of whom we shall have occasion to Discontent mans at the apprehention of taxes.

II. The ambitious fpirit of Galerius was fearcely reconciled to the C H A P. XXV. disappointment of his views upon the Gallic provinces, before the unexpected lofs of Italy wounded his pride as well as power in a of the Roftill more fenfible part. The long absence of the emperors had filled Rome with discontent and indignation; and the people gradually discovered, that the preference given to Nicomedia and Milan, was not to be ascribed to the particular inclination of Diocletians but to the permanent form of government which he had inflituted. It was in vain that, a few months after his abdication, his fucceffors dedicated, under his name, those magnificent baths, whose ruins still supply the ground as well as the materials for so many churches and convents 20. The tranquillity of those elegant recesses of ease and luxury was disturbed by the impatient murmurs of the Romans; and a report was infenfibly circulated, that the fums expended in erecting those buildings, would foon be required at their hands. About that time the avarice of Galerius, or perhaps the exigencies of the flate, had induced him to make a very strict and rigorous inquisition into the property of his fubjects for the purpose of a general taxation, both on their lands and on their persons. A very minute survey appears to have been taken of their real estates; and wherever there was the slightest fuspicion of concealment, torture was very freely employed to obtain a fincere declaration of their perfonal wealth 21. The privileges which had exalted Italy above the rank of the provinces, were no longer regarded: and the officers of the revenue already began to number the Roman people, and to fettle the proportion

princes are all mentioned, Diocletian and Max- ed the ground which they covered. One of imian as the fenior Augusti and fathers of the the great rooms is now the Carthusian church; emperors. They jointly dedicate, for the use and even one of the porter's lodges is sufof their own Romans, this magnificent edifice. ficient to form another church, which belongs The architects have delineated the ruins of to the Feuillans. these Thermæ; and the antiquarians, parti-

<sup>20</sup> See Gruter Inscrip. p. 178. The fix cularly Donatus and Nardini, have ascertain-

<sup>21</sup> See Lactantius de M. P. c. 26. 31.

CHAP. portion of the new taxes. Even when the spirit of freedom had been utterly extinguished, the tamest subjects have sometimes ventured to refift an unprecedented invasion of their property; but on this occasion the injury was aggravated by the infult, and the sense of private interest was quickened by that of national honour. The conquest of Macedonia, as we have already observed, had delivered the Roman people from the weight of personal taxes. they had experienced every form of despotism, they had now enjoyed that exemption near five hundred years; nor could they patiently brook the infolence of an Illyrian peasant, who, from his distant residence in Asia, presumed to number Rome among the tributary cities of his empire. The rifing fury of the people was encouraged by the authority, or at least the connivance, of the senate: and the feeble remains of the Prætorian guards, who had reason to apprehend their own diffolution, embraced fo honourable a pretence, and declared their readiness to draw their swords in the service of their oppressed country. It was the wish, and it soon became the hope, of every citizen, that after expelling from Italy their foreign tyrants, they should elect a prince who, by the place of his residence, and by his maxims of government, might once more deferve the title of Roman emperor. The name, as well as the fituation, of Maxentius, determined in his favour the popular enthusiasm.

Maxentius declared emperor at Rome. A. D. 306. 28th Oct.

Maxentius was the fon of the emperor Maximian, and he had married the daughter of Galerius. His birth and alliance seemed to offer him the fairest promise of succeeding to the empire; but his vices and incapacity procured him the same exclusion from the dignity of Cæfar, which Conftantine had deferved by a dangerous superiority of merit. The policy of Galerius preferred such affociates, as would neither difgrace the choice, nor dispute the commands of their benefactor. An obscure stranger was therefore raised to the throne of Italy, and the son of the late emperor of the West was left to enjoy the luxury of a private fortune in a villa CHAP. a few miles distant from the capital. The gloomy passions of his foul, shame, vexation, and rage, were inflamed by envy on the news of Constantine's success; but the hopes of Maxentius revived with the public discontent, and he was easily perfuaded to unite his perfonal injury and pretentions with the cause of the Roman people. Two Prætorian tribunes and a commissary of provisions undertook the management of the conspiracy; and as every order of men was actuated by the fame spirit, the immediate event was neither doubtful nor difficult. The præfect of the city, and a few magistrates, who maintained their fidelity to Severus, were maffacred by the guards; and Maxentius, invefted with the Imperial ornaments, was acknowledged by the applauding fenate and people as the protector of the Roman freedom and dignity. It is uncertain whether Maximian was previously acquainted with the confpiracy; but as foon as the standard of rebellion was erected at Rome, Maximian the old emperor broke from the retirement where the authority of reassumes the purple. Diocletian had condemned him to pass a life of melancholy solitude, and concealed his returning ambition under the difguise of paternal tenderness. At the request of his son and of the senate, he condescended to reassume the purple. His ancient dignity, his experience, and his fame in arms, added strength as well as reputation to the party of Maxentius 22.

According to the advice, or rather the orders, of his colleague, Defeat and the emperor Severus immediately hastened to Rome, in the full death of Seconfidence, that, by his unexpected celerity, he should easily suppress the tumult of an unwarlike populace, commanded by a licentious youth. But he found on his arrival the gates of the city shut dust of Maximian in the most favourable light, conspiracy. See Zosimus, I. ii. p. 79. and and the ambiguous expression of Aurelius Vic- Lactantius de M. P. c. 26.

<sup>22</sup> The vith Panegyric reprefents the con- that he contrived, or that he opposed, the tor, " retractante diu," may fignify, either

C H A P. against him, the walls filled with men and arms, an experienced general at the head of the rebels, and his own troops without spirit or affection. A large body of Moors deserted to the enemy, allured by the promise of a large denative; and, if it be true that they had been levied by Maximian in his African war, preferring the natural feelings of gratitude to the artificial ties of allegiance. Anulinus, the Prætorian præfect, declared himfelf in favour of Maxentius, and drew after him the most considerable part of the troops, accustomed to obey his commands. Rome, according to the expression of an orator, recalled her armies, and the unfortunate Severus, destitute of force and of counsel, retired, or rather fled, with precipitation to Ravenna. Here he might for some time have been safe. The fortifications of Ravenna were able to refift the attempts, and the morasses that surrounded the town were sufficient to prevent the approach, of the Italian army. The fea, which Severus commanded with a powerful fleet, fecured him an inexhaustible supply of provisions, and gave a free entrance to the legions, which, on the return of fpring, would advance to his affiftance from Illyricum and the East. Maximian, who conducted the fiege in person, was foon convinced that he might waste his time and his army in the fruitless enterprise, and that he had nothing to hope either from force or famine. With an art more fuitable to the character of Diocletian than to his own, he directed his attack, not fo much against the walls of Ravenna, as against the mind of Severus. The treachery which he had experienced, disposed that unhappy prince to diffrust the most fincere of his friends and adherents. The emisfaries of Maximian eafily perfuaded his credulity, that a conspiracy was formed to betray the town, and prevailed upon his fears not to expose himself to the discretion of an irritated conqueror, but to accept the faith of an honourable capitulation. He was at first received with humanity, and treated with respect. Maximian conducted the captive emperor to Rome, and gave him the most solemn C II A P. affurances that he had fecured his life by the refignation of the purple. But Severus could obtain only an eafy death and an Imperial funeral. When the fentence was fignified to him, the manner A. D. 307. of executing it was left to his own choice; he preferred the favourite mode of the ancients, that of opening his veins: and as foon as he expired, his body was carried to the fepulchre which had been constructed for the family of Gallienus ".

Though the characters of Constantine and Maxentius had very Maximian little affinity with each other, their fituation and interest were the fame; and prudence feemed to require that they should unite their Fausta, and forces against the common enemy. Notwithstanding the superiority Augustus, to of his age and dignity, the indefatigable Maximian passed the A.D. 307. Alps, and courting a personal interview with the sovereign of Gaul, carried with him his daughter Fausta as the pledge of the new alliance. The marriage was celebrated at Arles with every circumflance of magnificence; and the ancient colleague of Diocletian, who again afferted his claim to the western empire, conferred on his fon-in-law and ally the title of Augustus. By confenting to receive that honour from Maximian, Constantine seemed to embrace the cause of Rome and of the senate; but his professions were ambiguous, and his affistance flow and ineffectual. He confidered with attention the approaching contest between the masters of Italy and the emperor of the East, and was prepared to consult his own fifety or ambition in the event of the war 24.

gives his daughter Constantine. 31ft March.

The importance of the occasion called for the presence and abilitics of Galerius. At the head of a powerful army collected from vades Italy, 24 The vith Panegyric was pronounced to death of Severus are very doubtfully and va- celebrate the elevation of Constantine; but the prudent orator avoids the mention either lemont, Hift, des Empereurs, tom. iv. part i. of Galerius or of Maxentius. He introduces p. 555.). I have endeavoured to extract from only one flight allufion to the actual troubles, and to the majesty of Rome.

VOL. I.

3 R

Illyricum

<sup>23</sup> The circumstances of this war, and the riously told in our ncient fragments (see Tilthem a confident and probable narration.

CHAP. Illyricum and the East, he entered Italy, resolved to revenge the death of Severus, and to chaftife the rebellious Romans; or, as he expressed his intentions, in the furious language of a barbarian, to extirpate the fenate, and to destroy the people by the fword. But the skill of Maximian had concerted a prudent system of defence. The invader found every place, hostile, fortified, and inaccessible; and though he forced his way as far as Narni, within fixty miles of Rome, his dominion in Italy was confined to the narrow limits of his camp. Sensible of the increasing difficulties of his enterprise, the haughty Galerius made the first advances towards a reconciliation, and dispatched two of his most considerable officers to tempt the Roman princes by the offer of a conference and the declaration of his paternal regard for Maxentius, who might obtain much more from his liberality than he could hope from the doubtful chance of war 25. The offers of Galerius were rejected with firmness, his perfidious friendship refused with contempt, and it was not long before he discovered, that, unless he provided for his safety by a timely retreat, he had some reason to apprehend the fate of Severus. The wealth, which the Romans defended against his rapacious tyranny, they freely contributed for his destruction. The name of Maximian, the popular arts of his fon, the fecret diffribution of large fums, and the promife of still more liberal rewards. checked the ardour and corrupted the fidelity of the Illyrian legions; and when Galerius at length gave the fignal of the retreat, it was with fome difficulty that he could prevail on his veterans not to defert a banner which had fo often conducted them to victory and honour. A contemporary writer assigns two other causes for the failure of the expedition; but they are both of such a nature, fragments of an anonymous Historian, pub-lished by Valesius at the end of his edition of and as it should seem authentic, anecdotes.

<sup>25</sup> With regard to this negociation, fee the Ammianus Marcellinus, p. 711. Thefe frag-

that a cautious historian will scarcely venture to adopt them. We CHAP. are told that Galerius, who had formed a very imperfect notion of the greatness of Rome by the cities of the East, with which he was acquainted, found his forces inadequate to the fiege of that immense capital. But the extent of a city ferves only to render it more accessible to the enemy; Rome had long fince been accustomed to fubmit on the approach of a conqueror; nor could the temporary enthuliasm of the people have long contended against the discipline and valour of the legions. We are likewise informed, that the legions themselves were struck with horror and remorfe, and that those pious sons of the republic refused to violate the fanctity of their venerable parent 26. But when we recollect with how much ease in the more ancient civil wars, the zeal of party, and the habits of military obedience, had converted the native citizens of Rome into her most implacable enemies, we shall be inclined to distrust this extreme delicacy of strangers and barbarians, who had never beheld Italy till they entered it in a hofile manner. Had they not been restrained by motives of a more interested nature, they would probably have answered Galerius in the words of Cæsar's veterans: "If our general wishes to lead us " to the banks of the Tyber, we are prepared to trace out his camp. "Whatfoever walls he has determined to level with the ground, " our hands are ready to work the engines: nor shall we hesitate, " fhould the name of the devoted city be Rome itself." These are indeed the expressions of a poet; but of a poet who has been distinguished and even censured for his strict adherence to the truth of history 27.

26 Lactantius de M. P. c. 28. The former Hesperios andax veniam metator in agros. of these reasons is probably taken from Vir- Tu quoscunque voles in planum effundere gil's Shepherd; " Illam ego huic nostræ fi-" milem Melibore putavi, &c." Lactantius His aries actus disperget saxa lacertis; delights in these poetical allusions.

27 Castra super Tusci si ponere Tybridis Roma sit. undas ; (jubeas)

Illa licet penitus tolli quam jusieris urbem Lucan. Pharfal. i. 381. C H A P. XIV. His retreat.

The legions of Galerius exhibited a very melancholy proof of their disposition, by the ravages which they committed in their They murdered, they ravished, they plundered, they drove away the flocks and herds of the Italians, they burnt the villages through which they passed, and they endeavoured to destroy the country, which it had not been in their power to fubdue. During the whole march, Maxentius hung on their rear, but he very prudently declined a general engagement with those brave and desperate veterans. His father had undertaken a secondjourney into Gaul, with the hope of perfuading Conftantine, who had affembled an army on the frontier, to join the pursuit and to complete the victory. But the actions of Constantine were guided by reason and not by resentment. He persisted in the wife resolution of maintaining a balance of power in the divided empire, and he no longer hated Galerius, when that aspiring prince had ceased to be an object of terror 28.

Elevation of Licinius to the rank of Augustus, A.D. 307. Nov. 11. The mind of Galerius was the most susceptible of the sterner passions, but it was not however incapable of a sincere and lasting friendship. Licinius, whose manners as well as character were not unlike his own, seems to have engaged both his affection and esteem. Their intimacy had commenced in the happier period perhaps of their youth and obscurity. It had been cemented by the freedom and dangers of a military life; they had advanced, almost by equal steps, through the successive honours of the service, and as soon as Galerius was invested with the Imperial dignity, he seems to have conceived the design of raising his companion to the same rank with himself. During the short period of his prosperity he considered the rank of Cæsar as unworthy of the age and merit of Licinius, and rather chose to reserve for him the place of Constantius, and the empire of the West. While the CHAP. emperor was employed in the Italian war, he intrusted his friend with the defence of the Danube; and immediately after his return from that unfortunate expedition, he invested Licinius with the vacant purple of Severus, refigning to his immediate command the provinces of Illyricum 29. The news of his promotion was no and of Maxfooner carried into the East, than Maximin, who governed or rather oppressed the countries of Egypt and Syria, betrayed his envy and discontent, disdained the inferior name of Cæsar, and notwithflanding the prayers as well as arguments of Galerius, exacted, almost by violence, the equal title of Augustus ". For the first, and indeed for the last time, the Roman world was administered by fix emperors. In the West, Constantine and Maxentius affected to Sixemperors. reverence their father Maximian. In the East, Licinius and A.D. 308. Maximin honoured with more real confideration their benefactor Galerius. The opposition of interest, and the memory of a recent war, divided the empire into two great hostile powers; but their mutual fears produced an apparent tranquillity, and even a feigned reconciliation, till the death of the elder princes, of Maximian, and more particularly of Galerius, gave a new direction to the views and passions of their surviving associates.

<sup>28</sup> Lactantius de M. P. c. 27. Zofim. l. ii. tine, in his interview with Maximian, had p. 82. The latter infinuates, that Constan-

When Maximian had reluctantly abdicated the empire, the Misfortunes venal orators of the times applauded his philosophic moderation. When his ambition excited, or at least encouraged, a civil war, they returned thanks to his generous patriotifm, and gently cenfured that love of ease and retirement which had withdrawn him

29 M. de Tillemont (Hift. des Empereurs, felf, he tried to fatisfy his younger affociates, tom. iv. part i. p. 559.) has proved, that Licinius, without passing through the intermediate rank of Cæfar, was declared Augustus, the 11th of November, A. D. 307, after the return of Galerius from Italy.

30 Lactantius de M. P. c. 12. When Galerius declared Licinius Augustus with him- as equal associates in the Imperial dignity.

by inventing, for Constantine and Maximin (not Maxentius, fee Baluze, p. 81.) the new title of fons of the Augusti. But when Maximin acquainted him that he had been faluted Augustus by the army, Galerius was obliged. to acknowledge him, as well as Constantine,

from.

CHAP. from the public fervice 31. But it was impossible, that minds like those of Maximian and his son, could long possess in harmony an undivided power. Maxentius confidered himfelf as the legal fovereign of Italy, elected by the Roman senate and people; nor would he endure the control of his father, who arrogantly declared, that by his name and abilities the rash youth had been established on the throne. The cause was solemnly pleaded before the Prætorian guards, and those troops, who dreaded the severity of the old emperor, espoused the party of Maxentius 12. The life and freedom of Maximian were however respected, and he retired from Italy into Illyricum, affecting to lament his past conduct, and secretly contriving new mischiefs. But Galerius, who was well acquainted with his character, foon obliged him to leave his dominions, and the last refuge of the disappointed Maximian was the court of his fon-in-law Constantine 33. He was received with respect by that artful prince, and with the appearance of filial tenderness by the empress Fausta. That he might remove every suspicion, he refigned the Imperial purple a fecond time 34, professing himself at length convinced of the vanity of greatness and ambition. Had he persevered in this resolution, he might have ended his life with less dignity indeed than in his first retirement, yet, however, with comfort and reputation. But the near prospect of a throne brought back to his remembrance the flate from whence he was fallen, and he refolved, by a desperate effort, either to reign or to perish.

<sup>31</sup> See Panegyr. Vet. vi. 9. Audi doloris nostri liberam vocem, &c. the whole passage is imagined with artful flattery, and expressed with an eafy flow of eloquence.

<sup>32</sup> Lactantius de M. P. c. 28. Zofim. l. ii. p. 82. A report was spread, that Maxentius was the fon of fome obscure Syrian, and had been fubflituted by the wife of Maximian as her own child. See Aurelius Victor, Anonym. Valesian, and Panegyr. Vet. ix. 3, 4.

<sup>33</sup> Ab urbe pulsum, ab Italia fugatum, ab Illyrico repudiatum, tuis provinciis, tuis copiis, tuo palatio recepisti. Eumen. in Panegyr. Vet. vii. 14.

<sup>34</sup> Lactantius de M. P. c. 29. Yet after the refignation of the purple, Constantine still continued to Maximian the pomp and honours of the Imperial dignity; and on all public occasions gave the right-hand place to his father-in-law. Panegyr. Vet. vii. 15.

An incursion of the Franks had summoned Constantine, with a CHAP. part of his army, to the banks of the Rhine; the remainder of the troops were stationed in the southern provinces of Gaul, which lay exposed to the enterprises of the Italian emperor, and a confiderable treasure was deposited in the city of Arles. Maximian either craftily invented, or hastily credited, a vain report of the death of Constantine. Without hesitation he ascended the throne. feized the treasure, and scattering it with his accustomed profusion among the foldiers, endeavoured to awake in their minds the memory of his ancient dignity and exploits. Before he could establish his authority, or finish the negociation which he appears to have entered into with his fon Maxentius, the celerity of Constantine defeated all his hopes. On the first news of his perfidy and ingratitude, that prince returned by rapid marches from the Rhine to the Saone, embarked on the last mentioned river at Chalons, and at Lyons trufting himself to the rapidity of the Rhone, arrived at the gates of Arles, with a military force which it was impossible for Maximian to refist, and which scarcely permitted him to take refuge in the neighbouring city of Marseilles. The narrow neck of land which joined that place to the continent was fortified against the befiegers, whilft the fea was open, either for the escape of Maximian, or for the fuccours of Maxentius, if the latter should chuse to disguise his invasion of Gaul, under the honourable pretence of defending a distressed, or, as he might allege, an injured father. Apprehensive of the fatal consequences of delay, Conftantine gave orders for an immediate affault; but the fcaling ladders were found too short for the height of the walls, and Marfeilles might have fuftained as long a fiege as it formerly did against the arms of Cæsar, if the garrison, conscious either of their fault or of their danger, had not purchased their pardon by delivering up the city and the person of Maximian. A secret but His death. irrevocable fentence of death was pronounced against the usurper, February, CHAP. he obtained only the fame favour which he had indulged to Scverus, and it was published to the world, that, oppressed by the remorfe of his repeated crimes, he strangled himself with his own hands. After he had loft the affiftance, and disdained the moderate counsels, of Diocletian, the second period of his active life was a feries of public calamities and personal mortifications, which were terminated, in about three years, by an ignominious death. He deferved his fate; but we should find more reason to applaud the humanity of Constantine, if he had spared an old man, the benefactor of his father, and the father of his wife. During the whole of this melancholy transaction, it appears that Fausta facrificed the fentiments of nature to her conjugal duties 35.

Death of Galerius. A. D. 311. May.

The last years of Galerius were less shameful and unfortunate; and though he had filled with more glory the fubordinate flation of Cæfar, than the fuperior rank of Augustus, he preserved, till the moment of his death, the first place among the princes of the Roman world. He survived his retreat from Italy about four years, and wisely relinquishing his views of universal empire, he devoted the remainder of his life to the enjoyment of pleasure, and to the execution of some works of public utility, among which we may diffinguish the discharging into the Danube the superfluous waters of the lake Pelfo, and the cutting down the immense forests that encompassed it; an operation worthy of a monarch, fince it gave an extensive country to the agriculture of his Pannonian fubjects 36. His death was occasioned by a 35 Zosim. 1. ii. p. 82. Eumenius in Panegyr. Vet. vii. 16 21. The latter of thefe has undoubtedly represented the whole affair in the most favourable light for his fovereign. Yet even from his partial narrative we may conclude, that the repeated elemency of Conflantine, and the reiterated treasons of Maximian, as they are described by Lactantius (de M. P. c. 29, 30 ), and copied by the moderns, are deflitute of any historical foundation.

36 Anrelius Victor, c. 40. But that lake was fituated on the Upper Pannonia, near the borders of Noricum; and the province of Valeria (a name which the wife of Galerius gave to the drained country) undoubtedly lay between the Drave and the Danube (Sextus Rufus, c. 9.). I should therefore suspect that Victor has confounded the lake Pelfo, with the Volocean marches, or, as they are now called, the lake Sabaton. It is placed in the heart of Valeria, and its prefent extent is not less than 12 Hungarian miles (about 70 English) in length, and two in breadth. See Severini Pannonia, I. i. c. o.

very painful and lingering diforder. His body, fwelled by an intem- C H A P. perate course of life to an unwieldy corpulence, was covered with ulcers, and devoured by innumerable fwarms of those insects, who have given their name to a most loathsome disease 37; but as Galerius had offended a very zealous and powerful party among his fubjects, his fufferings, instead of exciting their compassion, have been celebrated as the visible effects of divine justice 18. He had no sooner His domiexpired in his palace of Nicomedia, than the two emperors who were between indebted for their purple to his favour, began to collect their forces, and Licinius, with the intention either of disputing, or of dividing, the dominions which he had left without a mafter. They were perfuaded however to defift from the former defign, and to agree in the latter. The provinces of Asia fell to the share of Maximin, and those of Europe augmented the portion of Licinius. The Hellespont and the Thracian Bosphorus formed their mutual boundary, and the banks of those narrow feas, which flowed in the midft of the Roman world, were covered with foldiers, with arms, and with fortifications. The deaths of Maximian and of Galerius reduced the number of emperors to four. The fense of their true interest soon connected Licinius and Constantine; a fecret alliance was concluded between Maximin and Maxentius, and their unhappy fubjects expected with terror the bloody confequences of their inevitable diffensions, which were no longer restrained by the fear or the respect which they had entertained for Galerius 19.

Maximin

Among fo many crimes and misfortunes occasioned by the Administrapassions of the Roman princes, there is some pleasure in discovering a flanting in

tion of Con-A. D. 306-

37 Lastantius (de M. P. c. 33.) and Euse- derful deaths of the persecutors, I would re bius (l. viii. c. 16.) describe the symptoms and progress of his disorder with fingular accuracy and apparent pleafure.

38 If any (like the late Dr. Jortin, Remarks on Ecclesiastical history, vol. ii. p. de M. P. c. 36. Zosimus is less exact, and commend to their perufal an admirable paffage of Grotius (Hift. l. vii. p. 332.) concerning the last illness of Philip II. of Spain.

3) See Eusebius, I. ix. 6. 10. Lactantius 307-356.) fill delight in recording the won- evidently confounds Maximian with Maximin.

CHAP. fingle action which may be afcribed to their virtue. In the fixthe year of his reign, Constantine vifited the city of Autun, and generoufly remitted the arrears of tribute, reducing at the fame time the proportion of their affeilment, from twenty-five to eighteen thousand heads, subject to the real and personal capitation 40. Yet even this indulgence affords the most unquestionable proof of the public mifery. This tax was fo extremely oppressive, either in itself or in the mode of collecting it, that whilft the revenue was increased by extortion, it was diminished by despair: a considerable part of the territory of Autun was left uncultivated; and great numbers of the provincials rather chose to live as exiles and outlaws, than to support the weight of civil fociety. It is but too probable, that the bountiful emperor relieved, by a partial act of liberality, one among the many evils which he had. caused by his general maxims of administration. But even those maxims were less the effect of choice than of necessity. And if we except the death of Maximian, the reign of Constantine in Gaulfeems to have been the most innocent and even virtuous period of his life. The provinces were protected by his presence from the inroads of the barbarians, who either dreaded or experienced his: active valour. After a figual victory over the Franks and Alemanni, feveral of their princes were exposed by his order to the wild beafts in the amphitheatre of Treves, and the people feem: to have enjoyed the spectacle, without discovering, in such a treatment of royal captives, any thing that was repugnant to the laws of nations or of humanity 41.

Tyranny cf Maxentius in Italy and Africa. A. D. 306-312.

The virtues of Conftantine were rendered more illustrious by the vices of Maxentius. Whilst the Gallic provinces enjoyed as much 40 See the viiith Panegyr, in which Eumenius displays, in the presence of Constantine, the mifery and the gratitude of the city of were likewise exposed to the same cruel and Autun.

happiness

<sup>41</sup> Eutropius, x. 3. Panegyr. Veter. vii. 10, . 11, 12. A great number of the French youth ignominious death.

happiness as the condition of the times was capable of receiving, Italy and Africa groaned under the dominion of a tyrant as contemptible as he was odious. The zeal of flattery and faction has indeed too frequently facrificed the reputation of the vanquished to the glory of their fuccefsful rivals; but even those writers who have revealed, with the most freedom and plcasure, the faults of Constantine, unanimously confess, that Maxentius was cruel, rapacious, and profligate 42. He had the good fortune to suppress a flight rebellion in Africa. The governor and a few adherents had been guilty; the province suffered for their crime. The flourishing cities of Cirtha and Carthage, and the whole extent of that fertile country, were wasted by fire and sword. The abuse of victory was followed by the abuse of law and justice. A formidable army of fycophants and delators invaded Africa; the rich and the noble were easily convicted of a connexion with the rebels; and those among them who experienced the emperor's clemency, were only punished by the confiscation of their estates 43. So fignal a victory was celebrated by a magnificent triumph, and Maxentius exposed to the eyes of the people the spoils and captives of a Roman province. The state of the capital was no less deferving of compassion than that of Africa. The wealth of Rome supplied an inexhaustible fund for his vain and prodigal expences. and the ministers of his revenue were skilled in the arts of rapine. It was under his reign that the method of exacting a free gift from the fenators was first invented; and as the sum was infensibly increased, the pretences of levying it, a victory, a birth, a marriage, or an Imperial confulfhip, were proportionably multiplied **. Maxentius

<sup>42</sup> Julian excludes Maxentius from the banhim of every kind of cruelty and profligacy. 43 Zosimus, I. ii. p. 83-85. Aurelius geret. Victor.

<sup>44</sup> The paffage of Aurelius Victor should quet of the Cæfars with abhorrence and con- be read in the following manner. Primus tempt; and Zosimus (l. ii. p. 85.) accuses instituto pessimo, munerum specie, Patres Orators/que pecuniam conferre prodigenti fibi co-

CHAP. had imbibed the fame implacable aversion to the senate, which had characterized most of the former tyrants of Rome: nor was it possible for his ungrateful temper to forgive the generous fidelity which had raifed him to the throne, and supported him against all his enemies. The lives of the fenators were exposed to his jealous fuspicions, the dishonour of their wives and daughters heightened the gratification of his fenfual paffions 45. It may be prefumed, that an Imperial lover was feldom reduced to figh in vain; but whenever perfuafion proved ineffectual, he had recourse to violence; and there remains one memorable example of a noble matron, who preferved her chaftity by a voluntary death. The foldiers were the only order of men whom he appeared to respect, or studied to please. He filled Rome and Italy with armed troops, connived at their tumults, fuffered them with impunity to plunder, and even to maffacre, the defenceless people 46; and indulging them in the fame licentiousness which their emperor enjoyed, Maxentius often bestowed on his military favourites the splendid villa, or the beautiful wife, of a fenator. A prince of fuch a character, alike incapable of governing either in peace or in war, might purchase the support, but he could never obtain the esteem, of the army. Yet his pride was equal to his other vices. Whilft he passed his indolent life, either within the walls of his palace. or in the neighbouring gardens of Sallust, he was repeatedly heard to declare, that he alone was emperor, and that the other princes were no more than his lieutenants, on whom he had devolved the defence of the frontier provinces, that he might enjoy without inter-elef. viii. 14. et in Vit. Constant. i. 33, 34. flabbed herfelf to escape the violence of Maxentius, was a Christian, wife to the præfect of what different, accounts of a tumult and mafthe city, and her name was Sophronia. It facre, which happened at Rome, in Eusebi-

<sup>45</sup> Panegyr. Vet. ix. 3. Euseb. Hist. Ec- whether, on such occasions, suicide is justifiable. 4) Prætorianis cædem vulgi quondam an-Rufinus, c. 17. The virtuous Matron, who nucret, is the vague expression of Aurelius Victor. See more particular, though fomefill remains a question among the casuists, us (1. viii. c. 14.) and in Zosim. (1. ii. p. 84.)

ruption the elegant luxury of the capital. Rome, which had fo CHAP. long regretted the absence, lamented, during the fix years of his reign, the presence of her sovereign 47.

Though Constantine might view the conduct of Maxentius with Civil war abhorrence, and the fituation of the Romans with compassion, we have Constantine no reason to presume that he would have taken up arms to punish tius, the one or to relieve the other. But the tyrant of Italy rashly A.D. 312. ventured to provoke a formidable enemy, whose ambition had been hitherto restrained by considerations of prudence, rather than by principles of justice 48. After the death of Maximian, his titles, according to the established custom, had been erased, and his statues thrown down with ignominy. His fon, who had perfecuted and deferted him when alive, affected to display the most pious regard for his memory, and gave orders that a fimilar treatment should be immediately inflicted on all the statues that had been erected in Italy and Africa to the honour of Constantine. That wise prince, who fincerely wished to decline a war, with the difficulty and importance of which he was fufficiently acquainted, at first diffembled the infult, and fought for redress by the milder expedients of negociation, till he was convinced, that the hosfile and ambitious defigns of the Italian emperor made it necessary for him to arm in his own defence. Maxentius, who openly avowed his pretentions to the whole monarchy of the West, had already prepared a very confiderable force to invade the Gallic provinces on the fide of Rhætia, and though he could not expect any affiftance from Licinius, he was flattered with the hope that the legions of Illyribetween and Maxen-

<sup>4.</sup> See in the Panegyrics (ix. 14.), a lively description of the indolence and vain pride of was univerfally allowed, that the motive of Maxentius. In another place, the orator delivering the republic from a detefted observes, that the riches which Rome had ac- tyrant, would, at any time, have justified cumulated in a period of 1060 years, were la- his expedition into Italy. Euseb. in Vit. vished by the tyrant on his mercenary bands; Constantin. 1. i. c. 26. Panegyr. Vet. redemptis ad civile latrocinium manibus in- ix. 2. gesserat.

<sup>48</sup> After the victory of Constantine, it

CHAP, cum, allured by his presents and promises, would desert the flandard of that prince, and unanimously declare themselves his foldiers and fubjects 49. Confiantine no longer hefitated. He had deliberated with caution, he acted with vigour. He gave a private audience to the ambassadors, who, in the name of the senate and people, conjured him to deliver Rome from a detefted tyrant; and, without regarding the timid remonstrances of his council, he refolved to prevent the enemy, and to carry the war into the heart of Italy 50.

Preparations.

The enterprise was as full of danger as of glory; and the unfuccelsful event of two former invalions was fufficient to inspire the most ferious apprehensions. The veteran troops who revered the name of Maximian, had embraced in both those wars the party of his fon, and were now reftrained by a fense of honour, as well as of interest, from entertaining an idea of a second desertion. Maxentius, who confidered the Prætorian guards as the firmest defence of his throne, had increased them to their ancient establishment; and they composed, including the rest of the Italians who were inlisted into his service, a formidable body of fourscore thousand men. Forty thousand Moors and Carthaginians had been raised fince the reduction of Africa. Even Sicily furnished its proportion of troops; and the armies of Maxentius amounted to one hundred and feventy thousand foot, and eighteen thousand horse. The wealth of Italy supplied the expences of the war; and the adjacent provinces were exhaufted, to form immense magazines of corn and every other kind of provisions. The whole force of Constantine Panegyr. x. 7-13.

60 See Panegyr, Vet. ix. 2. Omnibus fere monita, ipfe per temet liberandæ urbis tempus venisse fentires. The embasy of the Ro- historical work.

49 Zofimus, 1. ii. p. 84, 85. Nazarius in mans is mentioned only by Zonaras (1. xiii.) and by Cedrenus (in Compend. Hift. p. 270.): but those modern Greeks had the opportunity tuis Comitibus et Ducibus non folum tacite of confulting many writers which have fince muffantibus, fed etiam aperte timentibus; been loft, among which we may reckon the contra confilia hominum, contra Haruspicum life of Conftantine by Praxagoras. Photius (p. 63.) has made a short extract from that

confifted

confifted of ninety thousand foot and eight thousand horse st; and CHAP. as the defence of the Rhine required an extraordinary attention during the absence of the emperor, it was not in his power to employ above half his troops in the Italian expedition, unless he facrificed the public fafety to his private quarrel 52. At the head of about forty thousand soldiers, he marched to encounter an enemy whose numbers were at least four times superior to his own. But the armies of Italy, placed at a fecure diffance from danger, were enervated by indulgence and luxury. Habituated to the baths and theatres of Rome, they took the field with reluctance, and were chiefly composed of veterans who had almost forgotten, or of new - levies, who had never acquired, the use of arms and the practice of war. The hardy legions of Gaul had long defended the frontiers of the empire against the barbarians of the North; and in the performance of that laborious fervice, their valour was exercifed and their discipline confirmed. There appeared the same difference between the leaders as between the armies. Caprice or flattery had tempted Maxentius with the hopes of conquest; but these aspiring hopes foon gave way to the habits of pleafure and the confciousness of his inexperience. The intrepid mind of Constantine had been trained from his earliest youth to war, to action, and to military command.

When Hannibal marched from Gaul into Italy, he was obliged, Constantine first, to discover, and then to open, a way over mountains and Alps. through favage nations that had never yielded a passage to a regular

<sup>54</sup> Zofimus (l. ii. p. 86.) has given us this Constantine took possession of Sardinia, Cor- men. fica, and the ports of Italy,

<sup>52</sup> Panegyr. Vet. ix. 3. It is not furcurious account of the forces on both fides, prifing that the orator should diminish the He makes no mention of any naval arma- numbers with which his fovereign atchievments, though we are affured (Panegyr. ed the conquest of Italy; but it appears Vet. ix. 25.) that the war was carried on by fomewhat fingular, that he should esteem fea as well as by land; and that the fleet of the tyrant's army at no more than 100,000

C H A P. XIV. army 53. The Alps were then guarded by nature, they are now fortified by art. Citadels conftructed with no lefs skill than labour and expence, command every avenue into the plain, and on that fide render Italy almost inaccessible to the enemies of the king of Sardinia 54. But in the course of the intermediate period, the generals, who have attempted the passage, have seldom experienced any difficulty or relistance. - In the age of Constantine, the peasants of the mountains were civilized and obedient fubjects; the country was plentifully flocked with provisions, and the flupendous highways which the Romans had carried over the Alps, opened feveral communications between Gaul and Italy 55. Conftantine preferred the road of the Cottian Alps, or, as it is now called, of Mount Cenis, and led his troops with fuch active diligence, that he defcended into the plain of Piedmont before the court of Maxentius had received any certain intelligence of his departure from the banks of the Rhine. The city of Susa, however, which is situated at the foot of Mount Cenis, was furrounded with walls, and provided with a garrifon fufficiently numerous to check the progrefs of an invader; but the impatience of Constantine's troops disdained the tedious forms of a fiege. The fame day that they appeared before Susa, they applied fire to the gates, and ladders to the walls; and mounting to the affault amidst a shower of stones and arrows, they entered the place fword in hand, and cut in pieces the greatest part of the garrison. The flames were extinguished by the care of <sup>57</sup> The three principal passages of the Alps between Gaul and Italy, are those of Mount St. Bernard, Mount Cenis, and Mount Genevre. Tradition, and a resemblance of names (Alpse Pennina), had assigned the first of these for the march of Hannibal (See Simler de Alpibus). The Chevalier de Folard (Polybe, tom. iv.) and M. Danville have led him ever Mount Genevre. But notwithstanding the authority of in experienced officer and a

The three principal passages of the Alps tween Gaul and Italy, are those of Mount Bernard, Mount Cenis, and Mount Gever, Tradition, and a relemblance of names fervations fur Pitalie, tom. i. p. 40, &c.

<sup>54</sup> La Brunette near Sufe, Demont, Exiles, Fenestrelles, Coni, &c.

<sup>55</sup> See Ammian. Marcellin. xv. 10. His description of the roads over the Alps, is clear, lively, and accurate.

Constantine, and the remains of Susa preserved from total destruc- C H A P. tion. About forty miles from thence, a more severe contest awaited him. A numerous army of Italians was affembled under the lieu- Battle of Turin. tenants of Maxentius in the plains of Turin. Its principal strength confifted in a species of heavy cavalry, which the Romans, since the decline of their discipline, had borrowed from the nations of the East. The horses, as well as the men, were clothed in complete armour, the joints of which were artfully adapted to the motions of their bodies. The aspect of this cavalry was formidable, their weight almost irrefishible; and as, on this occasion, their generals had drawn them up in a compact column or wedge, with a sharp point, and with spreading flanks, they flattered themselves that they should easily break and trample down the army of Constantine. They might perhaps have fucceeded in their defign, had not their experienced adversary embraced the same method of defence, which in fimilar circumstances had been practifed by Aurelian. The skilful evolutions of Constantine divided and baffled this masfy column of cavalry. The troops of Maxentius fled in confusion towards Turin; and as the gates of the city were flut against them, very few escaped the fword of the victorious pursuers. By this important fervice, Turin deferved to experience the elemency and even favour of the conqueror. He made his entry into the Imperial palace of Milan, and almost all the cities of Italy between the Alps and the Po not only acknowledged the power, but embraced with zeal the party, of Constantine 56.

From Milan to Rome, the Æmilian and Flaminian highways offered Siege and an easy march of about four hundred miles; but though Constantine was impatient to encounter the tyrant, he prudently directed <sup>56</sup> Zofimus as well as Eufebius haften from negyrics, for the intermediate actions of Conthe passage of the Alps, to the decisive action stantine. near Rome. We must apply to the two Pa-

CHAP. his operations against another army of Italians, who, by their flrength and position, might either oppose his progress, or, in case of a misfortune, might intercept his retreat. Ruricius Pompeianus, a general diffinguished by his valour and ability, had under his command the city of Verona, and all the troops that were flationed in the province of Venetia. As foon as he was informed that Conflantine was advancing towards him, he detached a large body of cavalry, which was defeated in an engagement near Brescia, and purfued by the Gallic legions as far as the gates of Verona. The necessity, the importance, and the difficulties of the siege of Verona, immediately prefented themselves to the sagacious mind of Conftantine 57. The city was accessible only by a narrow peninsula towards the west, as the other three sides were surrounded by the Adige, a rapid river which covered the province of Venetia, from whence the belieged derived an inexhauftible fupply of men and provisions. It was not without great difficulty, and after feveral fruitless attempts, that Constantine found means to pass the river at fome distance above the city, and in a place where the torrent was less violent. He then encompassed Verona with strong lines, pushed his attacks with prudent vigour, and repelled a desperate fally of Pompeianus. That intrepid general, when he had used every means of defence that the strength of the place or that of the garrison could afford, secretly escaped from Verona, anxious not for his own but for the public fafety. With indefatigable diligence he foon collected an army fufficient either to meet Constantine in the field, or to attack him if he obstinately remained within his lines. The emperor, attentive to the motions, and informed of the ap-

57 The Marquis Maffei has examined the constructed by Gallienus, were less extensive hege and battle of Verona, with that degree of attention and accuracy, which was due to a memorable action that happened in his nase See Verona Illustrata, Part i. p. 142. 150. tive country. The fortifications of that city, proach, of fo formidable an enemy, left a part of his legions CHAP. to continue the operations of the fiege, whilft, at the head of those troops on whose valour and sidelity he more particularly depended, he advanced in person to engage the general of Maxentius. The army of Gaul was drawn up in two lines, according to the usual practice of war; but their experienced leader, perceiving that the numbers of the Italians far exceeded his own, fuddenly changed his disposition, and reducing the second, extended the front of his first, line to a just proportion with that of the enemy. Such evolutions, which only veteran troops can execute without confusion in a moment of danger, commonly prove decisive: but as this engagement began towards the close of the day, and was contested with great obstinacy during the whole night, there was less room for the conduct of the generals than for the courage of the foldiers. The return of light displayed the victory of Constantine, and a field of carpage covered with many thousands of the vanquished Italians. Their general Pompeianus was found among the flain; Verona immediately furrendered at difcretion, and the garrison was made prisoners of war 58. When the officers of the victorious army congratulated their mafter on this important fuccess, they ventured to add fome respectful complaints, of such a nature, however, as the most jealous monarchs will listen to without displeasure. They represented to Constantine, that, not contented with performing all the duties of a commander, he had exposed his own person with an excess of valour which almost degenerated into rashness; and they conjured him for the future to pay more regard to the preservation of a life, in which the safety of Rome and of the empire was involved 59.

titude of captives; and the whole council was gyr. Vet. ix. 11. at a lofs; but the fagacious conqueror imagined the happy expedient of converting into <sup>58</sup> They wanted chains for fo great a mul- fetters the swords of the vanquished. Pane-59 Panegyr. Vet. ix. 10.

CHAP. XIV. ~ Indolence and fears of Maxentius.

While Constantine fignalized his conduct and valour in the field, the fovereign of Italy appeared infensible of the calamities and danger of a civil war which raged in the heart of his dominions. Pleasure was still the only business of Maxentius. Concealing, or at least attempting to conceal, from the public knowledge the miffortunes of his arms 60, he indulged himself in a vain confidence, which deferred the remedies of the approaching evil, without deferring the evil itself 61. The rapid progress of Constantine 62 was scarcely sufficient to awaken him from this fatal security; he flattered himself, that his well-known liberality, and the majesty of the Roman name, which had already delivered him from two invasions, would diffipate with the same facility the rebellious army of Gaul. The officers of experience and ability, who had ferved under the banners of Maximian, were at length compelled to inform his effeminate fon of the imminent danger to which he was reduced; and, with a freedom that at once furprised and convinced him, to urge the necessity of preventing his ruin, by a vigorous exertion of his remaining power. The refources of Maxentius, both of men and money, were still considerable. The Prætorian guards felt how ftrongly their own interest and fafety were connected with his cause; and a third army was soon collected, more numerous than those which had been lost in the battles of Turin and Verona. It was far from the intention of the emperor to lead his troops in person. A stranger to the exercises of war, he trembled at the apprehension of so dangerous a contest; and as fear is commonly superstitious, he listened with melancholy attention to the rumours of omens and prefages which feemed to menace his life and empire.

60 Literas calamitatum fuarum indices fup- tremely probable that Conftantine was ftill at Verona, the 1st of September, A. D. 312, 61 Remedia malorum potius quam mala and that the memorable æra of the indictions was dated from his conquest of the Cifalpine primebat. Panegyr. Vet. ix. 15.

Shame

differebat, is the fine cenfure which Tacitus paffes on the supine indolence of Vitellius.

<sup>62</sup> The Marquis Maffei has made it ex-

Shame at length supplied the place of courage, and forced him to CHAP. take the field. He was unable to fusiain the contempt of the Roman The circus refounded with their indignant clamours, and they tumultuously belieged the gates of the palace, reproaching the pufillanimity of their indolent fovereign, and celebrating the heroic spirit of Constantine 63. Before Maxentius left Rome, he consulted the Sibylline books. The guardians of these ancient oracles were as well versed in the arts of this world, as they were ignorant of the fecrets of fate; and they returned him a very prudent answer, which might adapt itself to the event, and secure their reputation whatever should be the chance of arms 64.

The celerity of Constantine's march has been compared to the Victory of rapid conquest of Italy by the first of the Cæsars; nor is the flatter- near Rome. ing parallel repugnant to the truth of history, fince no more than 28th Oct. fifty-eight days elapfed between the furrender of Verona and the final decision of the war. Constantine had always apprehended that the tyrant would confult the dictates of fear, and perhaps of prudence; and that, instead of risking his last hopes in a general engagement, he would shut himself up within the walls of Rome. His ample magazines fecured him against the danger of famine: and as the fituation of Constantine admitted not of delay, he might have been reduced to the fad necessity of destroying with fire and fword the Imperial city, the noblest reward of his victory, and the deliverance of which had been the motive, or rather indeed the pretence. of the civil war 65. It was with equal furprise and pleasure, that on his arrival at a place called Saxa Rubra, about nine miles from Rome 66, de M. P. c. 44.

<sup>64</sup> Illo die hostem Romanorum esse periturum. The vanquished prince became of course the enemy of Rome.

<sup>65</sup> See Panegyr. Vet. ix. 16. x. 27. The the foldiers. former of these orators magnifies the heards

<sup>63</sup> See Panegyr. Vet. xi. 16. Lactantius of corn, which Maxentius had collected from Africa and the Islands. And yet, if there is any truth in the fcarcity mentioned by Eufebius (in Vit. Constantin. l. i. c. 36.), the Imperial granaries must have been open only to

<sup>66</sup> Maxentius . . . tandem urbe in Saxa rubra.

XIV.

C H A P. he discovered the army of Maxentius prepared to give him battle 67. Their long front filled a very spacious plain, and their deep array reached to the banks of the Tyber, which covered their rear, and forbade their retreat. We are informed, and we may believe, that Constantine apposed his troops with consummate skill, and that he chose for himself the post of honour and danger. Distinguished by the fplendour of his arms, he charged in person the cavalry of his rival; and his irrefiftible attack determined the fortune of the day. The cavalry of Maxentius was principally composed either of unwieldy cuiraffiers, or of light Moors and Numidians. They yielded to the vigour of the Gallic horse, which possessed more activity than the one, more firmness than the other. The defeat of the two wings left the infantry without any protection on its flanks, and the undisciplined Italians fled without reluctance from the standard of a tyrant whom they had always hated, and whom they no longer feared. The Prætorians, conscious that their offences were beyond the reach of mercy, were animated by revenge and despair. Notwithstanding their repeated efforts, those brave veterans were unable to recover the victory: they obtained, however, an honourable death; and it was observed, that their bodies covered the fame ground which had been occupied by their ranks 68. The confufion then became general, and the difmayed troops of Maxentius, purfued by an implacable enemy, rushed by thousands into the deep and rapid fiream of the Tyber. The emperor himself attempted to escape back into the city over the Milvian bridge, but the crowds which pressed together through that narrow passage, forced him into the > graph. Antiq. tom. i. p. 463. Saxz Rubra x. 28. was in the neighbourhood of the Cremera, a glorious death of the three hundred Fabii.

rubra, millia ferme novem ægerrime pro- with the Tyber in his rear, is very clearly greffus. Aurelius Victor. See Cellarius Geo- described by the two Panegyrists, ix. 16.

<sup>67</sup> The post which Maxentius had taken, Vet. ix. 17.

<sup>68</sup> Exceptis latrocinii illius primis auctotriffing rivulet, illustrated by the valour and ribus, qui desperata venia, locum quem pugnæ fumpferant texere corporibus. Penegyr.

river, where he was immediately drowned by the weight of his CHAP. armour 69. His body, which had funk very deep into the mud, was found with some difficulty the next day. The fight of his head, when it was exposed to the eyes of the people, convinced them of their deliverance, and admonished them to receive, with acclamations of loyalty and gratitude, the fortunate Constantine, who thus atchieved by his valour and ability the most splendid enterprise of his life 7º.

In the use of victory, Constantine neither deserved the praise of His recepclemency, nor incurred the censure of immoderate rigour 71. He inflicted the fame treatment, to which a defeat would have exposed his own person and family, put to death the two sons of the tyrant, and carefully extirpated his whole race. The most distinguished adherents of Maxentius must have expected to share his fate, as they had shared his prosperity and his crimes: but when the Roman people loudly demanded a greater number of victims, the conqueror refifted, with firmness and humanity, those fervile clamours which were dictated by flattery as well as by refentment. Informers were punished and discouraged; the innocent, who had suffered under the late tyranny, were recalled from exile, and reflored to their

.69 A very idle rumour foon prevailed, that Maxentius, who had not taken any precaution for his own retreat, had contrived a very artful fnare to destroy the army of the pursuers; but that the wooden bridge which was to have been loofened on the approach of Constantine, unluckily broke down under the weight of the flying Italians. M. de Tillemont (Hift. des Empereurs, tom. iv. part i. p. 576.) very feriously examines whether, in contradiction to common fense, the testimony of Eusebius and Zofimus ought to prevail over the filence of Lactantius, Nazarius, and the anonymous, but contemporary orator, who composed the minth panegyric.

7º Zofimus, I. ii. p. 86-88, and the two Marius, or of Sylla.

Panegyrics, the former of which was pronounced a few months afterwards, afford the clearest notion of this great battle. Lactantius, Eusebius, and even the Epitomes, fupply feveral useful hints.

71 Zofimus, the enemy of Canstantine, allows (l. ii. p. 88.), that only a few of the friends of Maxentius were put to death; but we may remark the expressive passage of Nazarius (Panegyr. Vet. x. 6.), Omnibus qui labefactari statum ejus poterant cum stirpe deletis. The other orator (Panegyr. Vet. ix. 20, 21.) contents himfelf with observing, that Constantine, when he entered Rome, did not imitate the cruel maffacres of Cinna, of estates.

XIV.

CHAP. estates. A general act of oblivion quieted the minds and settled the property of the people, both in Italy and in Africa 72. The first time that Constantine honoured the senate with his presence, he recapitulated his own fervices and exploits in a modest oration, affured that illustrious order of his fincere regard, and promifed to re-establish its ancient dignity and privileges. The grateful fenate repaid these unmeaning professions by the empty titles of honour, which it was yet in their power to bestow; and without prefuming to ratify the authority of Constantine, they passed a decree to affign him the first rank among the three Augusti who governed the Roman world 73. Games and festivals were instituted to preserve the fame of his victory, and several edifices raised at the expence of Maxentius, were dedicated to the honour of his fuccessful rival. The triumphal arch of Constantine still remains a melancholy proof of the decline of the arts, and a fingular testimony of the meanest vanity. As it was not possible to find in the capital of the empire, a feulptor who was capable of adorning that public monument; the arch of Trajan, without any respect either for his memory or for the rules of propriety, was stripped of its most elegant figures. The difference of times and persons, of actions and characters, was totally difregarded. The Parthian captives appear proftrate at the feet of a prince who never carried his arms beyond the Euphrates; and curious antiquarians can slill discover the head of Trajan on the trophies of Constantine. The new ornaments which it was necessary to introduce between the vacancies of ancient fculpture, are executed in the rudest and most unskilful manner 74.

<sup>72</sup> See the two Panegyrics, and the laws of Code.

of reason, the first rank among the Augusti. Expliquée of the latter, tom. iv. p. 171.

<sup>74</sup> Adhuc cuncta opera quæ magnifice con . this and the enfuing year, in the Theodofian flruxerat, urbis fanum, atque bafilicam, Flavii meritis patres facravere. Aurelius Victor. 73 Panegyr. Vet. ix. 20. Lactantius de With regard to the theft of Trajan's trophies, M. P. c. 44. Maximin, who was confessed- consult Flaminius Vacca, apud Montfaucon, ly the eldest Cæsar, claimed, with some shew Diarium Italicum, p. 250, and l'Antiquité and conduct

The final abolition of the Prætorian guards was a measure of CHAP. prudence as well as of revenge. Those haughty troops, whose numbers and privileges had been restored, and even augmented, by at Rome. Maxentius, were for ever suppressed by Constantine. Their fortified camp was destroyed, and the few Prætorians who had escaped the fury of the fword, were dispersed among the legions, and banished to the frontiers of the empire, where they might be ferviceable without again becoming dangerous 75. By suppressing the troops which were usually stationed in Rome, Constantine gave the fatal blow to the dignity of the senate and people, and the disarmed capital was exposed without protection to the insults or neglect of its distant master. We may observe, that in this last effort to preferve their expiring freedom, the Romans, from the apprehension of a tribute, had raised Maxentius to the throne. He exacted that tribute from the fenate, under the name of a free gift. They implored the affiftance of Constantine. He vanguished the tyrant, and converted the free gift into a perpetual tax. The fenators, according to the declaration which was required of their property, were divided into feveral classes. The most opulent paid annually eight pounds of gold, the next class paid four, the last two, and those whose poverty might have claimed an exemption, were affeffed however at feven pieces of gold. Befides the regular members of the fenate, their fons, their descendants, and even their relations, enjoyed the vain privileges, and supported the heavy burdens, of the fenatorial order; nor will it any longer excite our surprise, that Constantine should be attentive to increase the number of persons who were included under so useful a descrip-

75 Prætoriæ legiones ac subsidia factionibus mentions this fact as an historian; and it is aptiora quam urbi Romæ, fublata penitus; very pompoufly celebrated in the ninth Pane-

VOL. I.

3 U

tion.

fimul arma atque usus indumenti militaris. gyric. Aurelius Victor. Zofimus (l. ii. p. 89.)

XIV.

CHAP. tion 76. After the defeat of Maxentius, the victorious emperor passed no more than two or three months in Rome, which he vifited twice during the remainder of his life, to celebrate the folemn festivals of the tenth and of the twentieth years of his reign. Conftantine was almost perpetually in motion to exercise the legions, or to inspect the state of the provinces. Treves, Milan, Aquileia, Sirmium, Naissus, and Thessalonica, were the occasional places of his refidence, till he founded a NEW ROME on the confines of Europe and Afia 77.

His alliance with Licinius. A. D. 313. March.

Before Constantine marched into Italy, he had secured the friendthip, or at least the neutrality of Licinius, the Illyrian emperor. He had promifed his fifter Conftantia in marriage to that prince: but the celebration of the nuptials was deferred till after the conclusion of the war, and the interview of the two emperors at Milan, which was appointed for that purpose, appeared to cement the union of their families and interests 78. In the midst of the public festivity they were suddenly obliged to take leave of each other. An inroad of the Franks fummoned Conftantine to the Rhine, and the hostile approach of the fovereign of Asia demanded the immediate War between presence of Licinius. Maximin had been the secret ally of Maxentius, and without being discouraged by his fate, he resolved to try the fortune of a civil war. He moved out of Syria towards the frontiers Maximin and Licinius. A. D. 313.

> 76 Ex omnibus provinciis optimates viros Curiæ tuæ pigneraveris; ut Senatûs dignitas . . . . ex totius Orbis flore confifteret. Nazarius in Panegyr. Vet. x. 35. The word pigneraveris might almost feem maliciously chofen. Concerning the fenatorial tax, fee Zofimus, l. ii. p. 115, the fecond title of the fixth book of the Theodofian Code, with Godefroy's Commentary, and Memoires de l'Academie des Inferiptions, tom. xxviii. p.

77 From the Theodosian Code, we may now begin to trace the motions of the emperors; but the dates both of time and place have frequently been altered by the carelessness of transcribers.

78 Zosimus (l. ii. p. 89.) observes, that, before the war, the fifter of Constantine had been betrothed to Licinius. According to the younger Victor, Diocletian was invited to the nuptials; but having ventured to plead his age and infirmities, he received a fecond letter filled with reproaches for his supposed partiality to the cause of Maxentius and Max-of Bithynia in the depth of winter. The feafon was fevere and CHAP. tempestuous; great numbers of men as well as horses perished in the fnow; and as the roads were broken up by inceffant rains, he was obliged to leave behind him a confiderable part of the heavy baggage, which was unable to follow the rapidity of his forced marches. By this extraordinary effort of diligence, he arrived. with a haraffed but formidable army, on the banks of the Thracian Bosphorus, before the lieutenants of Licinius were apprised of his hostile intentions. Byzantium furrendered to the power of Maximin, after a fiege of eleven days. He was detained fome days under the walls of Heraclea; and he had no fooner taken possession of that city, than he was alarmed by the intelligence, that Licinius had pitched his camp at the distance of only eighteen miles. After The defeat, a fruitless negociation, in which the two princes attempted to feduce the fidelity of each other's adherents, they had recourse to arms. The emperor of the East commanded a disciplined and veteran army of above feventy thousand men, and Licinius, who had collected about thirty thousand Illyrians, was at first oppressed by the superiority of numbers. His military skill, and the firmness of his troops, restored the day, and obtained a decisive victory. The incredible speed which Maximin exerted in his flight, is much more celebrated than his prowess in the battle. Twenty-four hours afterwards he was feen pale, trembling, and without his Imperial ornaments, at Nicomedia, one hundred and fixty miles from the place of his defeat. The wealth of Asia was yet unexhausted; and though the flower of his veterans had fallen in the late action, he had ftill power, if he could obtain time, to draw very numerous levies from Syria and Egypt. But he furvived his misfortune only three or four months. and death of His death, which happened at Tarfus, was variously ascribed to despair, the former. August. to poison, and to the divine justice. As Maximin was alike destitute of abilities and of virtue, he was lamented neither by the people nor by the foldiers. The provinces of the East, delivered from the April 30.

XIV.

CHAP. terrors of civil war, cheerfully acknowledged the authority of Licinius 79.

Cruelty of Licinius.

The vanquished emperor left behind him two children, a boy of about eight, and a girl of about feven, years old. Their inoffenfive age might have excited compassion, but the compassion of Licinius was a very feeble resource, nor did it restrain him from extinguishing the name and memory of his adversary. The death of Severianus will admit of less excuse, as it was dictated neither by revenge nor by policy. The conqueror had never received any injury from the father of that unhappy youth, and the short and obscure reign of Severus in a distant part of the empire was already forgotten. But the execution of Candidianus was an act of the blackeft cruelty and ingratitude. He was the natural fon of Galerius, the friend and benefactor of Licinius. The prudent father had judged him too young to fustain the weight of a diadem; but he hoped that under the protection of princes, who were indebted to his favour for the Imperial purple, Candidianus might pass a secure and honourable life. He was now advancing towards the twentieth year of his age, and the royalty of his birth, though unsupported either by merit or ambition, was sufficient to exasperate the jealous mind of Licinius 80. these innocent and illustrious victims of his tyranny, we must add the wife and daughter of the emperor Diocletian. When that prince conferred on Galerius the title of Cæfar, he had given him in marriage his daughter Valeria, whose melancholy adventures might furnish a very fingular subject for tragedy. She had fulfilled and even furpassed the duties of a wife. As she had not any children herfelf, the condescended to adopt the illegitimate fon of her husband, and invariably difplayed towards the unhappy Candidianus the Unfortunate fate of the empress Valeria and her mother.

sition of Heaven. Licinius at that time victory.

<sup>79</sup> Zofimus mentions the defeat and death was one of the protectors of the church. of Maximin as ordinary events; but Læctantius expaniates on them (de M. P. c. 45 + 50.), Victor touches on the different conduct of Liaferibing them to the miraculous interpotenderness and anxiety of a real mother. After the death of Ga- CHAP. lerius, her ample possessions provoked the avarice, and her personal attractions excited the defires, of his fucceffor Maximin 81. had a wife still alive, but divorce was permitted by the Roman law, and the fierce passions of the tyrant demanded an immediate gratification. The answer of Valeria was such as became the daughter and widow of emperors; but it was tempered by the prudence which her defenceless condition compelled her to observe. She represented to the persons whom Maximin had employed on this occasion, "that even if honour could permit a woman of her " character and dignity to entertain a thought of fecond nuptials, " decency at least must forbid her to listen to his addresses at a " time when the ashes of her husband and his benefactor were "fill warm; and while the forrows of her mind were still expressed " by her mourning garments. She ventured to declare, that she " could place very little confidence in the professions of a man, " whose cruel inconstancy was capable of repudiating a faithful " and affectionate wife ":" On this repulse, the love of Maximin was converted into fury, and, as witnesses and judges were always at his disposal, it was easy for him to cover his fury with an appearance of legal proceedings, and to affault the reputation as well as the happiness of Valeria. Her estates were conficated, her eunuchs and domestics devoted to the most inhuman tortures, and feveral innocent and respectable matrons, who were honoured with her friendship, suffered death on a false accusation of adultery. The empress herself, together with her mother Prisca, was con-

* The fenfual appetites of Maximin were and the obstinate fair one was condemned to be drowned. A custom was gradually introduced, that no person should marry a wife without the permission of the emperor, " ut ipse in omnibus nuptiis prægustator esset." Laclantius de M. P. c. 18.

gratified at the expence of his fubjects. His eunuchs, who forced away wives and virgins, examined their naked charms with anxious curiofity, left any part of their body should be found unworthy of the royal embraces. Coynofs and difain were confidered as treason,

<sup>12</sup> Lactantius de M. P. c. 39.

CHAP. demned to exile; and as they were ignominiously hurried from place to place before they were confined to a fequeftered village in the deferts of Syria, they exposed their shame and distress to the provinces of the East, which, during thirty years, had respected their august dignity. Diocletian made several ineffectual efforts to alleviate the misfortunes of his daughter; and, as the last return that he expected for the Imperial purple, which he had conferred upon Maximin, he entreated that Valeria might be permitted to share his retirement of Salona, and to close the eyes of her afflicted father 83. He entreated, but as he could no longer threaten, his prayers were received with coldness and disdain; and the pride of Maximin was gratified, in treating Diocletian as a fuppliant, and his daughter as a criminal. The death of Maximin feemed to affure the empresses of a favourable alteration in their fortune. The public diforders relaxed the vigilance of their guard, and they eafily found means to escape from the place of their exile, and to repair, though with fome precaution, and in difguife, to the court of Licinius. His behaviour, in the first days of his reign, and the honourable reception which he gave to young Candidianus, inspired Valeria with a fecret fatisfaction, both on her own account, and on that of her adopted fon. But these grateful prospects were soon succeeded by horrour and aftonishment, and the bloody executions which stained the palace of Nicomedia, fufficiently convinced her, that the throne of Maximin was filled by a tyrant more inhuman than himself. Valeria consulted her safety by a hasty slight, and, still accompanied by her mother Prisca, they wandered above fifteen months 84 through the provinces, concealed in the difguise of plebeian

<sup>83</sup> Diocletian at last fent cognatum suum, quendam militarem ac potentem virum, to inpoint out the person who was employed,

<sup>84</sup> Valeria quoque per varias provincias quindecim menfibus plebeio cultû pervagata. tercede in favour of his daughter (Lactantius Lactantius de M. P. c. 51. There is some de M. P. c. 41.). We are not sufficiently doubt whether we should compute the fifteen acquainted with the history of these times, to months from the moment of her exile, or from that of her escape. The expression of perva-plebeian habits. They were at length discovered at Thessalonica; CHAP. and as the fentence of their death was already pronounced, they were immediately beheaded, and their bodies thrown into the fea. The people gazed on the melancholy spectacle; but their grief and indignation were suppressed by the terrors of a military guard. Such was the unworthy fate of the wife and daughter of Diocletian. We lament their misfortunes, we cannot discover their crimes, and whatever idea we may justly entertain of the cruelty of Licinius, it remains a matter of furprife, that he was not contented with some more fecret and decent method of revenge 85.

The Roman world was now divided between Conftantine and Quarrel be-Licinius, the former of whom was mafter of the West, and the flanting and latter of the East. It might perhaps have been expected that the Licinius. conquerors, fatigued with civil war, and connected by a private as well as public alliance, would have renounced, or at least would have fuspended, any farther deligns of ambition. And yet a year had scarcely elapsed after the death of Maximin, before the victorious emperors turned their arms against each other. The genius, the fuccess, and the aspiring temper, of Constantine, may seem to mark him out as the aggreffor; but the perfidious character of Licinius juffifies the most unfavourable suspicions, and by the faint light which history reflects on this transaction 86, we may discover a conspiracy fomented by his arts against the authority of his colleague. Constantine had lately given his fister Anastasia in marriage to Bassianus, a man of a considerable family and fortune, and case we must suppose, that the treatise of or pity and exultation. Lactantius was written after the first civil war between Licinius and Constantine. See Cuper, p. 254.

85 Ita illis pudicitia et conditio exitio fuit. misfortunes of the innocent wife and daugh- ation is probable and confiftent.

pata feems to denote the latter; but in that ter of Diocletian with a very natural mixture

The curious reader, who confults the Valesian Fragment, p. 713, will perhaps accuse me of giving a bold and licentious paraphrase; but if he considers it with atten-Lactantius de M. P. c. 51. He relates the tion, he will acknowledge that my interpret-

XIV. ---

C H A P. had elevated his new kinfman to the rank of Cæfar. According to the fystem of government instituted by Diocletian, Italy, and perhaps Africa, were defigned for his department in the empire. But the performance of the promifed favour was either attended with fo much delay, or accompanied with fo many unequal conditions, that the fidelity of Baffianus was alienated rather than fecured by the honourable distinction which he had obtained. His nomination had been ratified by the confent of Licinius, and that artful prince, by the means of his emissaries, soon contrived to enter into a fecret and dangerous correspondence with the new Cæfar, to irritate his discontents, and to urge him to the rash enterprise of extorting by violence what he might in vain folicit from the justice of Constantine. But the vigilant emperor discovered the conspiracy before it was ripe for execution; and, after folemnly renouncing the alliance of Bassianus, despoiled him of the purple, and inflicted the deferved punishment on his treason and ingratitude. The haughty refusal of Licinius, when he was required to deliver up the criminals, who had taken refuge in his dominions. confirmed the fuspicions already entertained of his perfidy; and the indignities offered at Æmona, on the frontiers of Italy, to the flatues of Conflantine, became the fignal of difcord between the two princes 87.

First civil war between them.

The first battle was fought near Cibalis, a city of Pannonia, fituated on the river Save, about fifty miles above Sirmium 88. From 87 The fituation of Æmona, or as it is now called, Laybach, in Carniola, (Danville Geographie Ancienne, tom. i. p. 187.) may fuggeft a conjecture. As it lay to the north-eaft of the Julian Alps, that important territory became a natural object of difpute between the fovereigns of Italy and of Illyricum.

85 Cibalis or Cibalæ (whose name is fill tions, tom. xxviii. preferved in the obscure ruins of Swilei) was fituated about fifty miles from Sirmium, the capital of Illyricum, and about one hundred from Taurunum, or Belgrade, and the conflux of the Danube and the Save. The Roman garrifons and cities on those rivers are finely illustrated by M. Danville, in a memoir inferted in l'Academie des Infcrip-

the inconfiderable forces which in this important contest two such CHAP. powerful monarchs brought into the field, it may be inferred, that the one was fuddenly provoked, and that the other was unexpectedly furprised. The emperor of the West had only twenty thou- A. D. 314. 8th Oct. fand, and the fovereign of the East no more than five and thirty thousand, men. The inferiority of number was, however, compenfated by the advantage of the ground. Conftantine had taken post in a desile about half a mile in breadth, between a steep hill and a deep morafs, and in that fituation he fleadily expected and repulsed the first attack of the enemy. He pursued his success, and advanced into the plain. But the veteran legions of Illyricum rallied under the standard of a leader who had been trained to arms in the school of Probus and Diocletian. The missile weapons on both fides were foon exhaufted; the two armies, with equal valour, rushed to a closer engagement of swords and spears, and the doubtful contest had already lasted from the dawn of day to a late hour of the evening, when the right wing, which Constantine led in person, made a vigorous and decisive charge. The judicious retreat of Licinius faved the remainder of his troops from a total defeat; but when he computed his lofs, which amounted to more than twenty thousand men, he thought it unsafe to pass the night in the prefence of an active and victorious enemy. Abandoning his camp and magazines, he marched away with fecrecy and diligence at the head of the greatest part of his cavalry, and was soon removed beyond the danger of a pursuit. His diligence preserved his wife, his fon, and his treasures, which he had deposited at Sirmium. Licinius paffed through that city, and breaking down the bridge on the Save, hastened to collect a new army in Dacia and Thrace. In his flight he bestowed the precarious title of Cæsar on Valens, his general of the Illyrian frontier 89.

89 Zofimus (1. ii. p. 90, 91.) gives a very fcriptions of Zofimus are rhetorical rather particular account of this battle; but the de- than military.

VOL. I.

3 X

The

CHAP. XIV. Battle of Mardia.

The plain of Mardia in Thrace was the theatre of a fecond battle no less obstinate and bloody than the former. The troops on both fides displayed the same valour and discipline; and the victory was once more decided by the superior abilities of Constantine, who directed a body of five thousand men to gain an advantageous height, from whence, during the heat of the action, they attacked the rear of the enemy, and made a very confiderable flaughter. The troops of Licinius, however, presenting a double front, still maintained their ground, till the approach of night put an end to the combat, and fecured their retreat towards the mountains of Macedonia 90. The loss of two battles, and of his bravest veterans, reduced the fierce spirit of Licinius to sue for peace. His ambasfador Mistrianus was admitted to the audience of Constantine; he expatiated on the common topics of moderation and humanity, which are so familiar to the eloquence of the vanguished; reprefented, in the most infinuating language, that the event of the war was still doubtful, whilst its inevitable calamities were alike pernicious to both the contending parties; and declared, that he was authorifed to propose a lasting and honourable peace in the name of the two emperors his mafters. Conftantine received the mention of Valens with indignation and contempt. "It was not " for fuch a purpose," he sternly replied, "that we have advanced of from the shores of the western ocean in an uninterrupted course " of combats and victories, that, after rejecting an ungrateful kinf-" man, we should accept for our colleague a contemptible slave. "The abdication of Valens is the first article of the treaty "." It

<sup>97</sup> Zosimus, I. ii. p. 92, 93. Anonym. conjecture, that Constantine, assuming the circumstances; but they frequently confound the two wars between Licinius and Constan-

<sup>27.</sup> If it should be thought that γαμέρο; fig- kinsman in general. See Spanheim Observat. nifies more properly a fon-in-law, we might ad Julian. Orat i. p. 72.

Valefian, p. 713. The Epitomes furnish fome name as well as the duties of a father, had adopted his younger brothers and fifters, the children of Theodora. But in the best authors yaus for fometimes signifies a husband. 51 Petrus Patricius in Excerpt, Legat. p. fometimes a father-in-law, and fometimes a was necessary to accept this humiliating condition, and the unhappy CHAP. Valens, after a reign of a few days, was deprived of the purple and of his life. As foon as this obstacle was removed, the tranquillity of the Roman world was eafily reftored. The fucceffive defeats of Licinius had ruined his forces, but they had displayed his courage and abilities. His fituation was almost desperate, but the efforts of despair are sometimes formidable; and the good sense of Constantine preferred a great and certain advantage to a third trial of the chance of arms. He confented to leave his rival, or, as he again Treaty of flyled Licinius, his friend and brother, in the possession of Thrace, peace. Afia Minor, Syria, and Egypt; but the provinces of Pannonia, Dalmatia, Dacia, Macedonia, and Greece, were yielded to the western empire, and the dominions of Constantine now extended from the confines of Caledonia to the extremity of Peloponnesus. It was stipulated by the fame treaty, that three royal youths, the fons of the emperors, should be called to the hopes of the succession. Crispus and the younger Constantine were foon afterwards declared Cæsars in the West, while the younger Licinius was invested with the same dignity in the East. In this double proportion of honours, the conqueror afforted the superiority of his arms and power 92.

The reconciliation of Constantine and Licinius, though it was General embittered by refentment and jealousy, by the remembrance of recent injuries, and by the apprehension of future dangers, main- flantine.

A. D. 315tained, however, above eight years, the tranquillity of the Roman 323. world. As 'a very regular feries of the Imperial laws commences about this period, it would not be difficult to transcribe the civil re-

<sup>93</sup> Zofimus, I. ii. p. 93. Anonym. Va- it is highly probable that the promotion was lefian, p. 913. Eutropius, x. 5. Aurelius made the 1ft of March, A. D. 317. The Victor. Eufeb: in Chron. Sozomen. I. i. c. 2. treaty had probably stipulated that two Cæfars Four of these writers affirm that the promo- might be created by the western, and one only tion of the Cæfars was an article of the treaty. by the eaftern emperor; but each of them re-It is however certain, that the younger Con- ferved to himfelf the choice of the perfons. ftantine and Licinius were not yet born; and

CHAP. gulations which employed the leifure of Constantine. But the most important of his inflitutions are intimately connected with the new fystem of policy and religion, which was not perfectly established till the last and peaceful years of his reign. There are many of his laws, which, as far as they concern the rights and property of individuals, and the practice of the bar, are more properly referred to the private than to the public jurifprudence of the empire; and he published many edicts of so local and temporary a nature, that they would ill deserve the notice of a general history. Two laws, however, may be felected from the crowd; the one, for its importance, the other, for its fingularity; the former for its remarkable benevolence, the latter for its excessive severity. 1. The horrid practice, fo familiar to the ancients, of exposing or murdering their newborn infants, was become every day more frequent in the provinces, and especially in Italy. It was the effect of distress; and the diftress was principally occasioned by the intolerable burden of taxes, and by the vexatious as well as cruel profecutions of the officers of the revenue against their infolvent debtors. The less opulent or less industrious part of mankind, instead of rejoicing in an increase of family, deemed it an act of paternal tenderness to release their children from the impending miferies of a life which they themselves were unable to support. The humanity of Constantine, moved, perhaps, by fome recent and extraordinary inflances of despair, engaged him to address an edict to all the cities of Italy, and afterwards of Africa, directing immediate and fufficient relief to be given to those parents who should produce, before the magistrates, the children whom their own poverty would not allow them to educate. But the promife was too liberal, and the provision too vague, to effect any general or permanent benefit 93. The law, though it may merit fome praise, ferved rather to display than to alleviate the CHAP. public diffress. It fill remains an authentic monument to contradict and confound those venal orators, who were too well fatisfied with their own fituation to discover either vice or misery under the government of a generous fovereign 94. 2. The laws of Constantine against rapes were dictated with very little indulgence, for the most amiable weaknesses of human nature; fince the description of that crime, was applied not only to the brutal violence which compelled, but even to the gentle feduction which might perfuade, an unmarried woman, under the age of twenty-five, to leave the house of her parents. " The fuccefsful ravisher was punished with " death; and as if fimple death was inadequate to the enormity " of his guilt, he was either burnt alive, or torn in pieces by wild " beafts in the amphitheatre. The virgin's declaration that she " had been carried away with her own confent, instead of faving " her lover, exposed her to share his fate. The duty of a public " profecution was intrusted to the parents of the guilty or unfor-" tunate maid; and if the fentiments of Nature prevailed on them " to diffemble the injury, and to repair by a subsequent marriage the " honour of their family, they were themselves punished by exile and " confiscation. The flaves, whether male or female, who were con-" victed of having been accessary to the rape or seduction, were burnt " alive, or put to death by the ingenious torture of pouring down " their throats a quantity of melted lead. As the crime was of a " public kind, the accufation was permitted even to ftrangers. "The commencement of the action was not limited to any term of " years, and the confequences of the fentence were extended to the " innocent offspring of fuch an irregular union 97." But whenever <sup>94</sup> Omnia foris placita, domi prospera, an- nalia of the Cæsars, the 1st of March, A.D. 321. nonæ ubertate, fructuum copià, &c. Panegyr. Vet. x. 38. This oration of Nazarius to the Roman people, in the Theodolian Code, was pronounced on the day of the Quinquen- I. ix. tit. 24. tom. iii. p. 189.

<sup>93</sup> Codex Theodofian, l. xi. tit. 27. tom. likewise, l. v. tit. 7-8. iv. p. 188, with Godefroy's observations. See

CHAP.

the offence inspires less horror than the punishment, the rigour of penal law is obliged to give way to the common feelings of mankind. The most odlous parts of this edict were softened or repealed in the subsequent reigns 96; and even Constantine himself very frequently alleviated by partial acts of mercy the stern temper of his general inflitutions. Such, indeed, was the fingular humour of that emperor, who shewed himself as indulgent, and even remifs, in the execution of his laws, as he was fevere, and even cruel, in the enacting of them. It is fearcely possible to observe a more decifive fymptom of weakness, either in the character of the prince, or in the constitution of the government 97.

The Gothic war. A. D. 322.

The civil administration was fometimes interrupted by the military defence of the empire. Crispus, a youth of the most amiable character, who had received with the title of Cæfar the command of the Rhine, diffinguished his conduct, as well as valour, in feveral victories over the Franks and Alemanni; and taught the barbarians of that frontier to dread the eldest fon of Constantine, and the grandfon of Conftantius 98. The emperor himfelf had affumed the more difficult and important province of the Danube. The Goths, who in the time of Claudius and Aurelian had felt the weight of the Roman arms, respected the power of the empire, even in the midst of its intestine divisions. But the strength of that warlike nation was now restored by a peace of near fifty years; a new generation had arisen, who no longer remembered the misfortunes of ancient days: the Sarmatians of the lake Mæotis followed the Gothic flandard either as fubjects or as allies, and their united of the repeal, " Ne sub specie atrocioris judicii aliqua in ulcifcendo crimine dilatio nafceretur." Cod. Theod. tom. iii. p. 193.

97 Eusebius (in Vita Constant, I. iii. c. 1.) chooses to affirm, that in the reign of his hero, the fword of justice hung idle in the hands of the magistrates. Eusebius himself, 96 His fon very fairly affigns the true reason (1. iv. c. 29. 54.) and the Theodosian Code. will inform us, that this excessive lenity was not owing to the want either of atrocious criminals or of penal laws.

force

<sup>91</sup> Nazarius in Panegyr. Vet. x. The victory of Crispus over the Alemanni, is expreffed on some medals.

force was poured upon the countries of Illyricum. Campona, CHAP. Margus, and Bononia, appear to have been the fcenes of feveral memorable fieges and battles 99; and though Constantine encountered a very obstinate resistance, he prevailed at length in the contest, and the Goths were compelled to purchase an ignominious retreat, by restoring the booty and prisoners which they had taken. Nor was this advantage fufficient to fatisfy the indignation of the emperor. He refolved to chastise as well as to repulse the infolent barbarians who had dared to invade the territories of Rome. At the head of his legions he passed the Danube, after repairing the bridge which had been constructed by Trajan, penetrated into the strongest recesses of Dacia 100, and when he had inflicted a fevere revenge, condescended to give peace to the suppliant Goths, on condition that, as often as they were required, they should supply his armies with a body of forty thousand foldiers 101. Exploits like these were no doubt honourable to Constantine and beneficial to the state; but it may furely be questioned whether they can justify the exaggerated affertion of Eufebius, that ALL SCYTHIA, as far as the extremity of the North, divided as it was into fo many names and nations of the most various and savage manners, had been added by his victorious arms to the Roman empire 102.

9° See Zosimus, I. ii. p. 93, 94; though the narrative of that historian is neither clear nor confishent. The Panegyric of Optatianus (c. 23) mentions the alliance of the Sarmatians with the Carpi and Getæ, and points out the feveral fields of battle. It is supposed, that the Sarmatian games, celebrated in the month of November, derived their origin from the fuccess of this war.

Too In the Ceefars of Julian (p. 329. Commentaire de Spanheim, p. 252.) Constantine boalts, that he had recovered the province (Dacia), which Trajan had subdued. But it is infimuated by Silenus, that the conquelts of Constantine were like the gardens of Adonis, which fade and wither almost the moment they appear.

101 Jornandes de Rebus Geticis, c. 21. I know not whether we may entirely depend on his authority. Such an alliance has a very recent air, and fearcely is fuited to the maxims of the beginning of the fourth century.

This paffinge, however, is taken from a general declamation on the greatness of Configuration, and not from any particular account of the Gothic war.

CHAP. XIV. Second civil war between Constantine and Licinius. A. D. 323.

In this exalted flate of glory it was impossible that Constantine should any longer endure a partner in the empire. Confiding in the superiority of his genius and military power, he determined, without any previous injury, to exert them for the destruction of Licinius. whose advanced age and unpopular vices seemed to offer a very eafy conquest 103. But the old emperor, awakened by the approaching danger, deceived the expectations of his friends as well as of his enemies. Calling forth that spirit and those abilities by which he had deserved the friendship of Galerius and the Imperial purple, he prepared himself for the contest, collected the forces of the East, and soon filled the plains of Hadrianople with his troops, and the Streights of the Hellespont with his fleet. The army confifled of one hundred and fifty thousand foot, and fifteen thousand horse; and as the cavalry was drawn, for the most part, from Phrygia and Cappadocia, we may conceive a more favourable opinion of the beauty of the horses than of the courage and dexterity of their riders. The fleet was composed of three hundred and fifty gallies of three ranks of oars. An hundred and thirty of these were furnished by Egypt, and the adjacent coast of Africa. An hundred and ten failed from the ports of Phænicia and the ifle of Cyprus; and the maritime countries of Bithynia, Ionia, and Caria, were likewise obliged to provide an hundred and ten gallies. troops of Constantine were ordered to rendezvous at Thessalonica: they amounted to above an hundred and twenty thousand horse and foot 104. Their emperor was fatisfied with their martial appearance, and his army contained more foldiers, though fewer men, than that of his eastern competitor. The legions of Constantine were levied in the warlike provinces of Europe; action had confirmed

fimul principatum totius orbis affectans, Li- more propriety, be applied to the fecond. cinio bellum intulit. Eutropius, x. 5. Zo-

Constantinus tamen, vir ingens, et om . simus, 1. ii. p. 89. The reasons which they nia efficere nitens quæ animo præparasset, have assigned for the first civil war may, with 1.4 Zofimus, 1. ii. p. 94, 95.

confirmed their discipline, victory had elevated their hopes, and CHAP. there were among them a great number of veterans, who, after feventeen glorious campaigns under the fame leader, prepared themfelves to deferve an honourable difmission by a last effort of their valour 105. But the naval preparations of Constantine were in every respect much inferior to those of Licinius. The maritime citics of Greece fent their respective quotas of men and ships to the celebrated harbour of Piræus, and their united forces confifted of no more than two hundred fmall veffels: a very feeble armament if it is compared with those formidable fleets which were equipped and maintained by the republic of Athens during the Peloponnesian war too. Since Italy was no longer the feat of government, the naval establishments of Misenum and Ravenna had been gradually neglected; and as the shipping and mariners of the empire were fupported by commerce rather than by war, it was natural that they should the most abound in the industrious provinces of Egypt and Afia. It is only furprifing that the eaftern emperor, who poffeffed fo great a superiority at sea, should have neglected the opportunity of carrying an offensive war into the centre of his rival's dominions.

Instead of embracing such an active resolution, which might have changed the whole face of the war, the prudent Licinius expected the approach of his rival in a camp near Hadrianople, which he had fortified with an anxious care that betrayed his apprehension of the event. Conftantine directed his march from Thessalonica towards that part of Thrace, till he found himfelf stopped by the privileges and comfort of his fellow-veterans and ready for immediate fervice. The arfe-(Conveterani), as he now began to flyle them. See the Theodofian Code, 1. vii. tit. 20. tom. ii. p. 419. 429.

Battle of Hadrianople. A. D. 323. July 3.

106 Whilst the Athenians maintained the empire of the fea, their fleet confifted of three, and afterwards of four, hundred gallies of 105 Constantine was very attentive to the three ranks of oars, all completely equipped nal in the port of Piræus had cost the republic a thousand talents, about two hundred and fixteen thousand pounds. See Thucydides de Bel. Peloponn. 1. ii. c. 13. and Meursius de Fortuna Attica, c. 19.

VOL. I.

3 Y

broad

C H A P. broad and rapid stream of the Hebrus, and discovered the numerous army of Licinius, which filled the fleep afcent of the hill, from the river to the city of Hadrianople. Many days were spent in doubtful and diftant skirmishes; but at length the obstacles of the passage and of the attack were removed by the intrepid conduct of Constantine. In this place we might relate a wonderful exploit of Constantine, which, though it can scarcely be paralleled either in poetry or romance, is celebrated, not by a venal orator devoted to his fortune, but by an historian, the partial enemy of his fame. We are affured that the valiant emperor threw himself into the river Hebrus, accompanied only by twelve horsemen, and that by the effort or terror of his invincible arm, he broke, flaughtered, and put to flight a host of an hundred and fifty thousand men. The credulity of Zosimus prevailed so strongly over his passion, that among the events of the memorable battle of Hadrianople, he feems to have felected and embellished, not the most important, but the most marvellous. The valour and danger of Constantine are attefted by a flight wound which he received in the thigh, but it may be discovered even from an imperfect narration, and perhaps a corrupted text, that the victory was obtained no less by the conduct of the general than by the courage of the hero; that a body of five thousand archers marched round to occupy a thick wood in the rear of the enemy, whose attention was diverted by the conftruction of a bridge, and that Licinius, perplexed by fo many artful evolutions, was reluctantly drawn from his advantageous post to combat on equal ground in the plain. The contest was no longer equal. His confused multitude of new levies was easily vanquished by the experienced veterans of the West. Thirty-four thousand men are reported to have been flain. The fortified camp of Licinius was taken by affault the evening of the battle; the greater part of the fugitives, who had retired to the mountains, furrendered themfelves felves the next day to the discretion of the conqueror; and his CHAP. rival, who could no longer keep the field, confined himfelf within the walls of Byzantium 107.

of Crifpus.

The fiege of Byzantium, which was immediately undertaken by Siege of Byzantium and Constantine, was attended with great labour and uncertainty. In naval victory the late civil wars, the fortifications of that place, fo juftly confidered as the key of Europe and Asia, had been repaired and strengthened; and as long as Licinius remained mafter of the fea, the garrifon was much less exposed to the danger of famine than the army of the befiegers. The naval commanders of Constantine were fummoned to his camp, and received his positive orders to force the paffage of the Hellespont, as the fleet of Licinius, instead of feeking and destroying their feeble enemy, continued inactive in those narrow streights where its superiority of numbers was of little use or advantage. Crifpus, the emperor's eldest fon, was intrusted with the execution of this daring enterprise, which he performed with fo much courage and fuccess, that he deserved the esteem, and most probably excited the jealoufy, of his father. The engagement lasted two days, and in the evening of the first, the contending fleets, after a confiderable and mutual lofs, retired into their respective harbours of Europe and Asia. The second day about noon a firong fouth wind 108 fprang up, which carried the veffels of Crifpus against the enemy, and as the casual advantage was improved by his skilful intrepidity, he soon obtained a complete victory. An hundred and thirty veffels were destroyed, five thou-

Zofimus, I. ii. p. 95, 96. This great fufum et fine ordine agentem vicit exercitum; battle is described in the Valesian fragment leviter semore sauciatus." (p. 714.) in a clear though concife manner. militari et felicitate, Constantinus Licinii con- vant, Let. xi.

108 Zofimus, 1. ii. p. 97, 98. The cur-" Licinius vero circum Hadrianopolin maxi- rent always fets out of the Hellespont; and mo exercitu latera ardui montis impleverat; when it is affifted by a north wind, no veffel illuc toto agmine Constantinus inflexit. Cum can attempt the passage. A south wind renbellum terra marique traheretur, quamvis per ders the force of the current almost imperarduum suis nitentibus, attamen disciplina ceptible. See Tournesort's Voyage au Le-

CHAP. fand men were flain, and Amandus, the admiral of the Afiatic fleet, escaped with the utmost difficulty to the shores of Chalcedon. As foon as the Hellespont was open, a plentiful convoy of provisions flowed into the camp of Constantine, who had already advanced the operations of the fiege. He constructed artificial mounds of earth of an equal height with the ramparts of Byzantium. The lofty towers which were erected on that foundation, galled the befieged with large stones and darts from the military engines, and the battering rams had shaken the walls in feveral places. If Licinius perfifted much longer in the defence, he expoted himself to be involved in the ruin, of the place. Before he was furrounded he prudently removed his person and treasures to Chalcedon in Afia; and as he was always defirous of affociating companions to the hopes and dangers of his fortune, he now beflowed the title of Cafar on Martinianus, who exercised one of the most important offices of the empire 109.

Battle of Chryfopolis.

Such were still the resources, and such the abilities, of Licinius, that, after so many successive defeats, he collected in Bithynia a new army of fifty or fixty thousand men, while the activity of Conflantine was employed in the fiege of Byzantium. The vigilant emperor did not however neglect the last struggles of his antagonist. A confiderable part of his victorious army was transported over the Bosphorus in small vessels, and the decisive engagement was fought foon after their landing on the heights of Chrysopolis, or, as it is now called, of Scutari. The troops of Licinius, though they were lately raifed, ill armed, and worse disciplined, made head against their conquerors with fruitless but desperate valour, till a total defeat and the flaughter of five and twenty thousand men 109 Aurelius Victor. Zofimus, I. ii. p. 98. tion in Greek). Some medals feem to inti-According to the latter, Martinianus was Ma- mate, that during his fhort reign he received rifter officiorum (he uses the Latin appella- the title of Augustus.

irretrievably

XIV. Submission Licinius.

irretrievably determined the fate of their leader "O. He retired to CHAP. Nicomedia, rather with the view of gaining some time for negociation, than with the hope of any effectual defence. Constantia, and death of his wife and the fifter of Constantine, interceded with her brother in favour of her husband, and obtained from his policy rather than from his compassion, a solemn promise, confirmed by an oath, that after the facrifice of Martinianus, and the refignation of the purple, Licinius himself should be permitted to pass the remainder of his life in peace and affluence. The behaviour of Constantia, and her relation to the contending parties, naturally recalls the remembrance of that virtuous matron who was the fifter of Augustus and the wife of Antony. But the temper of mankind was altered, and it was no longer esteemed infamous for a Roman to survive his honour and independence. Licinius folicited and accepted the pardon of his offences, laid himfelf and his purple at the feet of his lord and mafter. was raifed from the ground with infulting pity, was admitted the same day to the Imperial banquet, and foon afterwards was fent away to Theffalonica, which had been chosen for the place of his confinement ". His confinement was foon terminated by death, and it is doubtful whether a tumult of the foldiers, or a decree of the fenate, was fuggested as the motive for his execution. According to the rules of tyranny he was accused of forming a conspiracy, and of holding a treasonable correspondence with the barbarians; but as he was never convicted, either by his own conduct or by any legal evidence, we may perhaps be allowed, from his weakness, to presume his innocence ".". The memory of Licinius was branded with infamy, 110 Eufebius (in Vita Constantin. 1. ii. c. 16, 17.) afcribes this decifive victory to the pious prayers of the emperor. The Valesian fragment (p. 714.) mentions a body of Gothic auxiliaries, under their chief Aliquaca, who adhered to the party of Licinius.

in Epitome. Anonym. Valesian. p. 714. 112 Contra religionem sacramenti Thessalonicæ privatus occifus est. Eutropius x. 6. and his evidence is confirmed by Jerome (in Chronic.) as well as by Zofimus, l. ii. p. 102. The Valesian writer is the only one Zofimus, I. ii. p. 102. Victor Junior who mentions the foldiers, and it is Zonaras

Re-union of the empire. A. D. 324.

CHAP. his statues were thrown down, and, by a hasty edict, of such mischievous tendency that it was almost immediately corrected, all his laws, and all the judicial proceedings of his reign, were at once abolished 113. By this victory of Constantine, the Roman world was again united under the authority of one emperor, thirty-feven years after Diocletian had divided his power and provinces with his affociate Maximian.

> The successive steps of the elevation of Constantine, from his first affuming the purple at York, to the refignation of Licinius at Nicomedia, have been related with fome minuteness and precision, not only as the events are in themselves both interesting and important, but flill more as they contributed to the decline of the empire by the expence of blood and treasure, and by the perpetual increase, as well of the taxes, as of the military establishment. The foundation of Conftantinople, and the establishment of the Christian religion, were the immediate and memorable confequences of this revolution.

alone who calls in the affiftance of the fenate. Eufebius prudently flides over this delicate transaction. But Sozomen, a century afterwards, ventures to affert the treasonable practices of Licinius.

113 See the Theodofian Code, 1.15. tit. 15. tom. v. p. 404, 405. These edicts of Constantine betray a degree of passion and precipitancy very unbecoming of the character of a lawgiver.

CHAP. XV.

The Progress of the Christian Religion, and the Sentiments, Manners, Numbers, and Condition, of the primitive Christians.

CANDID but rational inquiry into the progress and establish- C H A P. ment of Christianity, may be considered as a very essential part of the history of the Roman empire. While that great body Importance of the inwas invaded by open violence, or undermined by flow decay, a quiry. pure and humble religion gently infinuated itself into the minds of men, grew up in filence and obscurity, derived new vigour from opposition, and finally erected the triumphant banner of the cross on the ruins of the Capitol. Nor was the influence of Christianity confined to the period or to the limits of the Roman empire. After a revolution of thirteen or fourteen centuries, that religion is still professed by the nations of Europe, the most distinguished portion of human kind in arts and learning as well as in arms. By the industry and zeal of the Europeans, it has been widely diffused to the most distant shores of Asia and Africa; and by the means of their colonies has been firmly established from Canada to Chili, in a world unknown to the ancients.

But this inquiry, however useful or entertaining, is attended Its difficulwith two peculiar difficulties. The feanty and fuspicious materials of ecclefiaftical history feldom enable us to dispel the dark cloud that hangs over the first age of the church. The great law of impartiality too often obliges us to reveal the imperfections of the uninspired teachers and believers of the gospel; and, to a careless observer, their faults may seem to cast a shade on the faith which they

CHAP. they professed. But the scandal of the pious Christian, and the fallacious triumph of the Infidel, should cease as soon as they recollect not only by whom, but likewise to whom, the Divine Revelation was given. The theologian may indulge the pleafing task of deferibing Religion as the descended from Heaven, arrayed in her native purity. A more melancholy duty is imposed on the historian. He must discover the inevitable mixture of error and corruption, which she contracted in a long residence upon earth, among a weak and degenerate race of beings.

Five causes of the growth of Christianity.

Our curiofity is naturally prompted to inquire by what means the Christian faith obtained so remarkable a victory over the established religions of the earth. To this inquiry, an obvious but fatisfactory answer may be returned; that it was owing to the convincing evidence of the doctrine itself, and to the ruling providence of its great Author. But as truth and reason seldom find so favourable a reception in the world, and as the wifdom of Providence frequently condescends to use the passions of the human heart, and the general circumflances of mankind, as inftruments to execute its purpose; we may still be permitted, though with becoming submission, to ask, not indeed what were the first, but what were the fecondary causes of the rapid growth of the Christian church. It will, perhaps, appear, that it was most effectually favoured and affifted by the five following causes: I. The inflexible, and, if we may use the expression, the intolerant zeal of the Christians, derived, it is true, from the Jewish religion, but purified from the narrow and unfocial spirit, which, instead of inviting, had deterred the Gentiles from embracing the law of Moses. II. The doctrine of a future life, improved by every additional circumstance which could give weight and efficacy to that important truth. III. The miraculous powers afcribed to the primitive church. IV. The pure and auftere morals of the Christians. V. The union and discipline of the Christian republic, which gradually formed an independent and increasing state in the heart of the Roman empire.

CHAP. XV. ___

I. We have already described the religious harmony of the ancient THE FIRST world, and the facility with which the most different and even hoftile nations embraced, or at least respected, each other's superstitions. A fingle people refused to join in the common intercourse of mankind. The Jews, who, under the Affyrian and Persian monarchies, had languished for many ages the most despised portion of their flaves', emerged from obscurity under the successors of Alexander; and as they multiplied to a furprifing degree in the East, and afterwards in the West, they soon excited the curiofity and wonder of other nations 2. The fullen obstinacy with which they maintained their peculiar rites and unfocial manners, feemed to mark them out a diffinct species of men, who boldly professed, or who faintly disguised, their implacable hatred to the rest of human-kind 3. Neither the violence of Antiochus, nor the arts of Herod, nor the example of the circumjacent nations, could ever perfuade the Jews to affociate with the inflitutions of Mofes the elegant mythology of the Greeks 4. According to the maxims of universal toleration, the Romans protected a fuperflition which they despised 5. The

Zeal of the

Dum Assyrios penes, Medosque, et Perfas Oriens fuit, despectissima pars servitutis. Tacit. Hift. v. 8. Herodotus, who visited Afia whilft it obeyed the last of those empires, -flightly mentions the Syrians of Palefline, who, according to their own confession, had received from Egypt the rite of circumcifion. See l. ii. c. 104.

<sup>2</sup> Diodorus Siculus, l. xl. Dion Cassius, 1. xxxvii. p. 121. Tacit. Hist. v. 1-9. Juftin, xxxvi. 2, 3.

<sup>3</sup> Tradidit arcano quacunque volumine

Non monstrare vias eadem nisi sacra co-

Qualitos ad fontes folos deducere verpas.

The letter of this law is not to be found in the present volume of Moses. But the wife, the humane Maimonides openly teaches, that if an idolater fall into the water, a Jew ought not to fave him from instant death. See Bafnage, Histoire des Juifs, l. vi. c. 28.

* A Jewish fect, which indulged themfelves in a fort of occasional conformity, derived from Herod, by whose example and authority they had been feduced, the name of Herodians. But their numbers were fo inconfiderable, and their duration fo fhort, that Josephus has not thought them worthy of his notice. See Prideaux's Connection, vol. ii. p. 285.

<sup>5</sup> Cicero pro Flacco, c. 23.

CHAP. polite Augustus condescended to give orders, that sacrifices should be offered for his prosperity in the temple of Jerusalem 6; while the meanest of the posterity of Abraham, who should have paid the same homage to the Jupiter of the Capitol, would have been an object of abhorrence to himself and to his brethren. But the moderation of the conquerors was infusficient to appeale the jealous prejudices of their fubjects, who were alarmed and fcandalized at the enfigns of paganism, which necessarily introduced themselves into a Roman province 7. The mad attempt of Caligula to place his own flatue in the temple of Jerusalem, was defeated by the unanimous resolution of a people who dreaded death much less than such an idolatrous profanation 8. Their attachment to the law of Mofes was equal to their deteflation of foreign religions. The current of zeal and devotion, as it was contracted into a narrow channel, ran with the firength, and fometimes with the fury, of a torrent.

Its gradual increase.

This inflexible perseverance, which appeared so odious or so ridiculous to the ancient world, affumes a more awful character, fince Providence has deigned to reveal to us the mysterious history of the chosen people. But the devout and even scrupulous attachment to the Mosaic religion, so conspicuous among the lews who lived under the fecond temple, becomes still more furprising, if it is compared with the stubborn incredulity of their forefathers. When the law was given in thunder from Mount Sinai; when the tides of the ocean, and the course of the planets were suspended for the convenience of the Ifraelites; and when temporal rewards C H A P. and punishments were the immediate consequences of their piety or disobedience, they perpetually relapsed into rebellion against the visible majesty of their Divine King, placed the idols of the nations in the fanctuary of Jehovah, and imitated every fantastic ceremony that was practifed in the tents of the Arabs, or in the cities of Phœnicia 9. As the protection of Heaven was deservedly withdrawn from the ungrateful race, their faith acquired a proportionable degree of vigour and purity. The contemporaries of Moses and Joshua had beheld with careless indifference the most amazing miracles. Under the pressure of every calamity, the belief of those miracles has preserved the Jews of a later period from the universal contagion of idolatry; and in contradiction to every known principle of the human mind, that fingular people feems to have yielded a stronger and more ready assent to the traditions of their remote ancestors, than to the evidence of their own senses 10.

<sup>6</sup> Philo de Legatione. Augustus left a foundation for a perpetual facrifice. Yet he approved of the neglect which his grandfon Caius expressed towards the temple of Jerufalem. See Sueton. in August. c. 93. and Cafaubon's notes on that passage.

<sup>7</sup> See, in particular, Joseph. Antiquitat. xvii. 6. xviii. 6. and de Bel. Judaic. i. 33. and ii. 9.

<sup>8</sup> Justi a Caio Cæfare, estigiem ejus in templo locare arma potius fumpfere. Tacit. Hift. v. o. Philo and Josephus gave a very circumstantial, but a very rhetorical, account of this transaction, which exceedingly perplexed the governor of Syria. At the first mention of this idolatrous propofal, King Agrippa fainted away; and did not recover his fenses till the third day.

The Jewish religion was admirably fitted for defence, but it was Their relinever defigned for conquest; and it seems probable that the num- fuited to deber of profelytes was never much fuperior to that of apostates. The fence than to conquest. divine promifes were originally made, and the diffinguishing rite of circumcifion was enjoined to a fingle family. When the posterity of Abraham had multiplied like the fands of the fea, the Deity, from whose mouth they received a system of laws and ceremonies, declared himself the proper and as it were the national God of Ifrael; and with the most jealous care separated his favourite people from the rest of mankind. The conquest of the land of Canaan

<sup>9</sup> For the enumeration of the Syrian and Arabian deities, it may be observed, that Milton has comprised in one hundred and thirty very beautiful lines, the two large and learned fyntagmas, which Selden had composed on that abstruse subject.

<sup>10 66</sup> How long will this people provoke

&quot; me? and how long will it be ere they be-" lieve me, for all the figns which I have shewn " among them?" (Numbers xiv. 11.). It would be easy, but it would be unbecoming, to justify the complaint of the Deity from the whole tenor of the Mofaic history.

C H A P. was accompanied with fo many wonderful and with fo many bloody circumstances, that the victorious Jews were left in a state of irreconcilable hostility with all their neighbours. They had been commanded to extirpate fome of the most idolatrous tribes, and the execution of the Divine will had feldom been retarded by the weakness of humanity. With the other nations they were forbidden to contract any marriages or alliances, and the prohibition of receiving them into the congregation, which in some cases was perpetual, almost always extended to the third, to the seventh, or even to the tenth generation. The obligation of preaching to the Gentiles the faith of Moses, had never been inculcated as a precept of the law, nor were the Jews inclined to impose it on themselves as a voluntary duty. In the admission of new citizens, that unfocial people was actuated by the felfish vanity of the Greeks, rather than by the generous policy of Rome. The descendants of Abraham were flattered by the opinion, that they alone were the heirs of the covenant, and they were apprehensive of diminishing the value of their inheritance, by fharing it too eafily with the strangers of the earth. A larger acquaintance with mankind, extended their knowledge without correcting their prejudices; and whenever the God of Ifrael acquired any new votaries, he was much more indebted to the inconstant humour of polytheism than to the active zeal of his own missionaries ". The religion of Moses seems to be instituted for a particular country, as well as for a fingle nation; and if a strict obedience had been paid to the order, that every male, three times in the year, should present himself before the Lord Jehovah, it would have been impossible that the Jews could ever have spread themselves beyond the narrow limits of the promifed land ". That obstacle was indeed

<sup>33</sup> All that relates to the Jewish profelytes has been very ably treated by Basnage, Hift. commentators, and a very sensible note in the des Juifs, 1. 6. c. 6, 7.

<sup>12</sup> See Exod. xxiv. 23. Deut. xvi. 16. the Univerfal History, vol. i. p. 603. edit. fol.

indeed removed by the destruction of the temple of Jerusalem; but CHAP. the most considerable part of the Jewish religion was involved in its destruction; and the pagans, who had long wondered at the strange report of an empty fanctuary 13, were at a loss to discover what could be the object, or what could be the instruments, of a worship which was destitute of temples and of altars, of priests and of sacrifices. Yet even in their fallen flate, the Jews, still afferting their lofty and exclusive privileges, shunned, instead of courting, the society of strangers. They still insisted with inflexible rigour on those parts of the law which it was in their power to practife. Their peculiar diffinctions of days, of meats, and a variety of trivial though burdensome observances, were so many objects of disgust and averfion for the other nations, to whose habits and prejudices they were diametrically opposite. The painful and even dangerous rite of circumcifion was alone capable of repelling a willing profelyte from the door of the fynagogue 14.

Under these circumstances, Christianity offered itself to the world, More liberal armed with the strength of the Mosaic law, and delivered from the stianity. weight of its fetters. An exclusive zeal for the truth of religion, and the unity of God, was as carefully inculcated in the new as in the ancient fystem: and whatever was now revealed to mankind concerning the nature and the defigns of the Supreme Being, was fitted to increase their reverence for that mysterious doctrine. The divine authority of Moses and the prophets was admitted, and even established, as the firmest basis of Christianity. From the beginning of the world, an uninterrupted feries of predictions had <sup>13</sup> When Pompey, using or abusing the right of conquest, entered into the Holy of flicted on a Samaritan or Egyptian profelyte. Holies, it was observed with amazement, The sullen indifference of the Talmudists, " Nulla intus Deum effigie, vacuam fedem with respect to the conversion of strangers, " et inania arcana." Tacit. Hift. v. 9. It may be seen in Basnage, Histoire des Juis, was a popular faying, with regard to the Jews, 1. vi. c. 6.

Nil præter nubes et cœli numen adorant.

<sup>14</sup> A fecond kind of circumcifion was in-

C H A P. announced and prepared the long expected coming of the Meffial, who, in compliance with the gross apprehensions of the Jews, had been more frequently represented under the character of a King and Conqueror, than under that of a Prophet, a Martyr, and the Son of God. By his expiatory facrifice, the imperfect facrifices of the temple were at once confummated and abolished. The ceremonial law, which confifted only of types and figures, was fucceeded by a pure and spiritual worship, equally adapted to all climates as well as to every condition of mankind; and to the initiation of blood, was substituted a more harmless initiation of water. The promise of divine favour, instead of being partially confined to the posterity of Abraham, was univerfally proposed to the freeman and to the slave, to the Greek and to the barbarian, to the Jew and to the Gentile. Every privilege that could raise the proselyte from earth to Heaven, that could exalt his devotion, fecure his happiness, or even gratify that fecret pride, which, under the femblance of devotion, infinuates itself into the human heart, was still reserved for the members of the Christian church; but at the same time all mankind was permitted, and even folicited, to accept the glorious diffinction, which was not only proffered as a favour, but imposed as an obligation: It became the most facred duty of a new convert to diffuse among his friends and relations the ineftimable bleffing which he had received, and to warn them against a refusal that would be severely punished as a criminal disobedience to the will of a benevolent but all powerful deity.

Obstinacy and reasons of the be-Leving Jews.

The enfranchisement of the church from the bonds of the fynagogue, was a work however of some time and of some difficulty. The Jewish converts, who acknowledged Jesus in the character of the Messiah foretold by their ancient oracles, respected him as a prophetic teacher of virtue and religion; but they obffinately adhered to the ceremonies of their ancestors, and were desirous of imposing imposing them on the Gentiles, who continually augmented the C II A P. number of believers. These Judaising Christians seem to have argued with fome degree of plausibility from the divine origin of the Mofaic law, and from the immutable perfections of its great author. They affirmed, that if the Being, who is the fame through all eternity, had defigned to abolish those facred rites which had served to distinguish his chosen people, the repeal of them would have been no less clear and folemn than their first promulgation: that, instead of those frequent declarations, which either suppose or affert the perpetuity of the Mosaic religion, it would have been represented as a provisionary scheme intended to last only till the coming of the Messiah, who should instruct mankind in a more perfect mode of faith and of worship15: that the Messiah himfelf, and his disciples who conversed with him on earth, instead of authorizing by their example the most minute observances of the Mofaic law 16, would have published to the world the abolition of those useless and obsolete ceremonies, without suffering Christianity to remain during fo many years obscurely confounded among the fects of the Jewish church. Arguments like these appear to have been used in the defence of the expiring cause of the Mosaic law; but the industry of our learned divines has abundantly explained the ambiguous language of the Old Testament, and the ambiguous conduct of the apostolic teachers. It was proper gradually to unfold the fystem of the Gospel, and to pronounce with the utmost caution and tenderness a fentence of condemnation fo repugnant to the inclination and prejudices of the believing Jews.

15 These arguments were urged with great mittebat ad facerdotes; Paschata et alios dies ingenuity by the Jew Orobio, and refuted schos religiose observabat: Si quos sanavit with equal ingenuity and candour by the fabatho, oftendit non tantum ex lege, fed et Christian Limborch. See the Amica Collatio exceptis fententiis talia opera sabatho non in-(it well deferves that name), or account of terdicta. Grotius de veritate Religionis Chrife dispute between them. tianæ, l.v. c.7. A little afterwards (c. 12.), 16 Jesus - - - circumcisus erat; cibis ute- he expatiates on the condescension of the the difpute between them.

batur Judaicis; vestitû simili; purgatos scabie apostles.

CHAP. XV. The Nazarene church of Jerufalem.

The history of the church of Jerusalem affords a lively proof of the necessity of those precautions, and of the deep impression which the Jewish religion had made on the minds of its fectaries. The first fifteen bishops of Jerusalem were all circumcifed Jews; and the congregation over which they prefided, united the law of Moses with the doctrine of Christ 17. It was natural that the primitive tradition of a church which was founded only forty days after the death of Christ, and was governed almost as many years under the immediate inspection of his apostles, should be received as the standard of orthodoxy 18. The distant churches very frequently appealed to the authority of their venerable Parent, and relieved her diffresses by a liberal contribution of alms. But when numerous and opulent focieties were established in the great cities of the empire, in Antioch, Alexandria, Ephefus, Corinth, and Rome, the reverence which Jerusalem had inspired to all the Christian colonies infenfibly diminished. The Jewish converts, or as they were afterwards called, the Nazarenes, who had laid the foundations of the church, foon found themselves overwhelmed by the increasing multitudes, that from all the various religions of polytheifm inlifted under the banner of Christ: and the Gentiles, who, with the approbation of their peculiar apostle, had rejected the intolerable weight of Mosaic ceremonies, at length refused to their more fcrupulous brethren the same toleration which at first they had humbly folicited for their own practice. The ruin of the temple, of the city, and of the public religion of the Jews, was feverely felt by the Nazarenes; as in their manners, though not in their faith, they maintained fo intimate a connexion with their impious

18 Mosheim de Rebus Christianis ante Con- an opportunity of doing in his General His-

<sup>17</sup> Pæne omnes Christum Deum sub legis performance, which I shall often have occaobservatione credebant. Sulpicius Severus, fion to quote, he enters much more fully into ii, 31. See Eusebius, Hist. Ecclesiast. l. iv. c.5. the state of the primitive church, than he has Rantinum Magnum, p. 153. In this masterly tory.

countrymen, whose misfortunes were attributed by the Pagans to CHAP. the contempt, and more juftly afcribed by the Christians to the wrath, of the Supreme Deity. The Nazarenes retired from the ruins of Jerusalem to the little town of Pella beyond the Jordan, where that ancient church languished above fixty years in folitude and obscurity 19. They still enjoyed the comfort of making frequent and devout visits to the Holy City, and the hope of being one day restored to those seats which both nature and religion taught them to love as well as to revere. But at length, under the reign of Hadrian, the desperate fanaticism of the Jews filled up the measure of their calamities; and the Romans, exasperated by their repeated rebellions, exercifed the rights of victory with unufual rigour. The emperor founded, under the name of Ælia Capitolina, a new city on Mount Sion 20, to which he gave the privileges of a colony; and denouncing the feverest penalties against any of the Jewish people who should dare to approach its precincts, he fixed a vigilant garrison of a Roman cohort to enforce the execution of his orders. The Nazarenes had only one way left to escape the common profcription, and the force of truth was on this occasion affifted by the influence of temporal advantages. They elected Marcus for their bishop, a prelate of the race of the Gentiles, and most probably a native either of Italy or of some of the Latin provinces. At his perfuafion, the most considerable part of the congregation renounced the Mosaic law, in the practice of which they had persevered above a century. By this facrifice of their habits and prejudices, they 19 Eusebius, I. iii. c. 5. Le Clerc Hist. Ecclefiast. p. 605. During this occasional abandria have long fince transferred their epi- fline. fcopal feat to Cairo.

20 Dion Cassius, 1. lxix. The exile of the Jewish nation from Jerusalem is attested by fence, the bishop and church of Pella still re- Aristo of Pella (apud Euseb. l. iv. c. 6.), and tained the title of Jerusalem. In the same is mentioned by several ecclesialtical writers; manner, the Roman pontiffs refided feventy though fome of them too hastily extend this years at Avignon; and the patriarchs of Alexinter interdiction to the whole country of Pale-

VOL. I.

4 A

purchased

The Ebiomites.

CHAP. purchased a free admission into the colony of Hadrian, and more firmly cemented their union with the Catholic church 21.

When the name and honours of the church of Jerusalem had been reflored to Mount Sion, the crimes of herely and schism were imputed to the obscure remnant of the Nazarenes, which refused to accompany their Latin bishop. They still preserved their former habitation of Pella, fpread themselves into the villages adjacent to Damafeus, and formed an inconfiderable church in the city of Bœrea, or, as it is now called, of Aleppo, in Syria 22. The name of Nazarenes was deemed too honourable for those Christian Jews, and they foon received from the supposed poverty of their understanding, as well as of their condition, the contemptuous epithet of Ebionites 23. In a few years after the return of the church of Jerusalem, it became a matter of doubt and controverly, whether a man who fincerely acknowledged Jefus as the Messiah, but who still continued to obferve the law of Moses, could possibly hope for falvation. The humane temper of Justin Martyr inclined him to answer this question in the affirmative; and though he expressed himself with the most guarded diffidence, he ventured to determine in favour of such an imperfect Christian, if he were content to practife the Mosaic ceremonies, without pretending to affert their general use or necesfity. But when Justin was pressed to declare the sentiment of the church, he confessed that there were very many among the ortho-

ii. 31. By comparing their unfatisfactory accounts, Mosheim (p. 327. &c.) has drawn out a very diffinct representation of the circumflances and motives of this revolution.

22 Le Clerc (Hist. Ecclesiast. p. 477. 535.) feems to have collected from Eusebius, Jerome, Epiphanius, and other writers, all the principal circumstances that relate to the Nazarenes or Ebionites. The nature of their opinions foon divided them into a stricter and a milder fect; and there is fome reason to con-

2: Eusebius, l. iv. c. 6. Sulpicius Severus, jecture, that the family of Jesus Christ remained members, at leaft, of the latter and more moderate party.

> 23 Some writers have been pleafed to create an Ebion, the imaginary author of their fect and name. But we can more fafely rely on the learned Eusebius than on the vehement Tertullian, or the credulous Epiphanius. According to Le Clerc, the Hebrew word Ebjonim may be translated into Latin by that of Pauperes. See Hist. Eccclesiast. p. 477.

dox Christians, who not only excluded their Judaising brethren C H A P. from the hope of falvation, but who declined any intercourse with them in the common offices of friendship, hospitality, and social life 24. The more rigorous opinion prevailed, as it was natural to expect, over the milder; and an eternal bar of separation was fixed between the disciples of Moses and those of Christ. The unfortunate Ebionites, rejected from one religion as apostates, and from the other as heretics, found themselves compelled to assume a more decided character; and although fome traces of that obfolete fect may be discovered as late as the fourth century, they insensibly melted away either into the church or the fynagogue 25.

While the orthodox church preserved a just medium between The Gnoexcessive veneration and improper contempt for the law of Moses, the various heretics deviated into equal but opposite extremes of error and extravagance. From the acknowledged truth of the Jewish religion, the Ebionites had concluded that it could never be abolished. From its supposed imperfections the Gnostics as hastily inferred that it never was instituted by the wisdom of the Deity. There are some objections against the authority of Moses and the prophets, which too readily prefent themselves to the sceptical mind; though they can only be derived from our ignorance of remote anti-accurate note of Tillemont, Memoires Eccle- meats, in imitation of the Jews, who, in a fiastiques, tom. ii. p. 511.

of Abyffinia is the only one which fill adeunuch of the queen Candace might fuggest p. 117.

24 See the very curious Dialogue of Justin fome suspicions; but as we are assured (So-Martyr with the Jew Tryphon. The confer- crates, i. 19. Sozomen, ii. 24. Ludolphus, ence between them was held at Ephefus, in p. 281.) that the Æthiopians were not conthe reign of Antoninus Pius, and about verted till the fourth century; it is more reatwenty years after the return of the church of fonable to believe, that they respected the Pella to Jerufalem. For this date confult the Sabbath, and distinguished the forbidden very early period, were feated on both fides <sup>25</sup> Of all the fyslems of Christianity, that of the Red Sea. Circumcisson had been Abyssinia is the only one which still adpractised by the most ancient Athiopians, heres to the Mofaic rites (Geddes's Church from motives of health and cleanliness, which History of Æthiopia, and Differtations de le feem to be explained in the Recherches Phi-Grand fur la Relation du P. Lobo). The loscophiques fur les Americains, tosa. ii.

C H A P. quity, and from our incapacity to form an adequate judgment of the divine economy. These objections were eagerly embraced and as petulantly urged by the vain science of the Gnostics 26. As those heretics were, for the most part, averse to the pleasures of sense, they morosely arraigned the polygamy of the patriarchs, the gallantries of David, and the feraglio of Solomon. The conquest of the land of Canaan, and the extirpation of the unsuspecting natives, they were at a lofs how to reconcile with the common notions of humanity and juffice. But when they recollected the fanguinary lift of murders, of executions, and of massacres, which stain almost every page of the Jewish annals, they acknowledged that the barbarians of Palestine had exercised as much compassion towards their idolatrous enemies as they had ever fhewn to their friends or countrymen 27. Paffing from the fecturies of the law to the law itself, they afferted that it was impossible that a religion which confifted only of bloody facrifices and trifling ceremonies, and whose rewards as well as punishments were all of a carnal and temporal nature, could inspire the love of virtue, or restrain the impetuofity of passion. The Mosaic account of the creation and fall of man was treated with profane derifion by the Gnostics, who would not liften with patience to the repose of the Deity after fix days labour, to the rib of Adam, the garden of Eden, the trees of life and of knowledge, the speaking serpent, the forbidden. fruit, and the condemnation pronounced against human kind for the venal offence of their first progenitors 28. The God of Israel was impiously represented by the Gnostics, as a being liable to passion

<sup>1.</sup> i. c. 3. has stated their objections, particularly those of Faustus, the adversary of Augustin, with the most learned impartiality.

<sup>27</sup> Apud ipfos fides obstinata, misericordia in premptû: adverfus omnes alios hostile odium. Tacit. Hift. v. 4. Surely Tacitus had

<sup>25</sup> Beaufobre, Histoire du Manicheisme, seen the Jews with too favourable an eye. The perufal of Josephus must have destroyed the antithefis.

<sup>28</sup> Dr. Burnet (Archæologia, I. ii. c. 7.) has discussed the first chapters of Genesis with too much wit and freedom.

and to error, capricious in his favour, implacable in his refentment, C H A P. meanly jealous of his superstitious worship, and confining his partial providence to a fingle people, and to this transitory life. In such a character they could discover none of the features of the wife and omnipotent father of the universe 29. They allowed that the religion of the Jews was fomewhat less criminal than the idolatry of the Gentiles; but it was their fundamental doctrine, that the Christ whom they adored as the first and brightest emanation of the Deity, appeared upon earth to rescue mankind from their various errors, and to reveal a new system of truth and perfection. The most learned of the fathers, by a very fingular condescension, have imprudently admitted the fophistry of the Gnostics. Acknowledging that the literal fense is repugnant to every principle of faith as well as reason, they deem themselves secure and invulnerable behind the ample veil of allegory, which they carefully spread over every tender part of the Mosaic dispensation 30.

It has been remarked with more ingenuity than truth, that the Their feets, virgin purity of the church was never violated by schissm or herefy influence, before the reign of Trajan or Hadrian, about one hundred years after the death of Christ 31. We may observe with much more propriety, that, during that period, the disciples of the Messiah were indulged in a freer latitude both of faith and practice, than has ever been allowed in fucceeding ages. As the terms of communion were infenfibly narrowed, and the spiritual authority of the prevailing party was exercised with increasing severity, many of its most respectable adherents, who were called upon to renounce, were nions on this fubject.

provoked

<sup>29</sup> The milder Gnostics considered Jehovah, the Creator, as a Being of a mixed nature between God and the Dæmon. Others confounded him with the evil principle. Confult the fecond century of the general history of Mosheim, which gives a very distinct, though concife, account of their strange opi-

<sup>30</sup> See Beaufobre, Hist. du Manicheisme, 1. i. c. 4. Origen and St. Augustin were among the Allegorists.

<sup>31</sup> Hegesippus, ap. Euseb. 1. iii. 32. iv. 22. Clemens Alexandrin. Stromat. vii. 17.

C H A P. provoked to affert their private opinions, to purfue the confequences of their mistaken principles, and openly to erect the standard of rebellion against the unity of the church. The Gnostics were diftinguished as the most polite, the most learned, and the most wealthy of the Christian name, and that general appellation which expressed a superiority of knowledge, was either assumed by their own pride, or ironically bestowed by the envy of their adversaries. They were almost without exception of the race of the Gentiles, and their principal founders feem to have been natives of Syria or Egypt, where the warmth of the climate disposes both the mind and the body to indolent and contemplative devotion. The Gnostics blended with the faith of Christ many sublime but obscure tenets, which they derived from oriental philosophy, and even from the religion of Zoroaster, concerning the eternity of matter, the existence of two principles, and the mysterious hierarchy of the invisible world "2. As foon as they launched out into that vast abyse, they delivered themselves to the guidance of a disordered imagination; and as the paths of error are various and infinite, the Gnostics were imperceptibly divided into more than fifty particular fects 33, of whom the most celebrated appear to have been the Basilidians, the Valentinians, the Marcionites, and, in a still later period, the Manichæans. Each of these sects could boast of its bishops and congregations, of its doctors and martyrs 34, and, instead of the four gospels adopted by the church, the heretics produced a multitude of histories, in which the actions and discourses of Christ and cond and third centuries, Mosheim is ingenious and candid; Le Clerc, dull, but exact; thers are very frequently calumniators.

those writers were inclined to multiply the Motheim, p. 359.

<sup>32</sup> In the account of the Gnoffics of the fe- number of fects which opposed the unity of the church.

<sup>34</sup> Eusebius, 1. iv. c. 15. See in Bayle, in Beaufobre almost always an apologist; and it the article of Marcion, a curious detail of a is much to be feared, that the primitive fa- dispute on that subject. It should feem that fome of the Gnostics (the Basilidians) declined, 33 See the catalogues of Irenaus and Epi- and even refused, the honour of martyrdom, phanius. It must indeed be allowed, that Their reasons were fingular and abstruce. See of his apostles were adapted to their respective tenets 15. The CHAP. fuccess of the Gnostics was rapid and extensive 36. They covered Afia and Egypt, established themselves in Rome, and sometimes penetrated-into the provinces of the West. For the most part they arose in the second century, flourished during the third, and were fuppressed in the fourth or fifth, by the prevalence of more fashionable controversies, and by the superior ascendant of the reigning power. Though they constantly disturbed the peace, and frequently difgraced the name, of religion, they contributed to affift rather than to retard the progress of Christianity. The Gentile converts, whose strongest objections and prejudices were directed against the law of Moses, could find admission into many Christian focieties, which required not from their untutored mind any belief of an antecedent revelation. Their faith was infenfibly fortified and enlarged, and the church was ultimately benefited by the conquests of its most inveterate enemies 37.

But whatever difference of opinion might fubfift between the The damons Orthodox, the Ebionites, and the Gnostics, concerning the divinity or the obligation of the Mofaic law, they were all equally animated antiquity. by the same exclusive zeal, and by the same abhorrence for idolatry which had diffinguished the Jews from the other nations of the ancient world. The philosopher, who confidered the system of confidered as the gods of 35 See a very remarkable passage of Origen (Proem. ad Lucan.). That indefatigable writer, who had confumed his life in the study of the feriptures, relies for their authenticity on the inspired authority of the church. It was impossible that the Gnostics could receive our present gospels, many parts of which (particularly in the refurrection of Christ) are directly, and as it might feem defignedly, pointed against their favourite tenets. It is therefore somewhat singular that Ignatius (Epist. ad Smyrn. Patr. Apostol. tom. ii. p. 34.) should chuse to employ a vague and doubtful tradition, instead of quoting the certain tostimony of the evangelists.

3 Habent apes favos; habent ecclefias et Marcionitæ, is the strong expression of Tertullian, which I am obliged to quote from memory. In the time of Epiphanius (adverf. Hærefes, p. 302.) the Marcionites were very numerous in Italy, Syria, Egypt, Arabia, 37 Augustin is a memorable instance of this gradual progress from reason to faith. He was, during feveral years, engaged in the Manichæan fect.

polytheifm

CHAP. polytheism as a composition of human fraud and error, could difguise a smile of contempt under the mask of devotion, without apprehending that either the mockery, or the compliance, would expose him to the resentment of any invisible, or as he conceived them, imaginary powers. But the established religions of Paganism were feen by the primitive Christians in a much more odious and formidable light. It was the universal fentiment both of the church and of heretics, that the dæmons were the authors, the patrons, and the objects of idolatry 38. Those rebellious spirits who had been degraded from the rank of angels, and cast down into the infernal pit, were still permitted to roam upon earth, to torment the bodies, and to feduce the minds, of finful men. The dæmons foon discovered and abused the natural propensity of the human heart towards devotion, and, artfully withdrawing the adoration of mankind from their Creator, they usurped the place and honours of the Supreme Deity. By the fuccess of their malicious contrivances, they at once gratified their own vanity and revenge, and obtained the only comfort of which they were yet susceptible, the hope of involving the human species in the participation of their guilt and misery. It was confessed, or at least it was imagined, that they had distributed among themselves the most important characters of polytheifm, one dæmon affuming the name and attributes of Jupiter, another of Asculapius, a third of Venus, and a fourth perhaps of Apollo 39; and that, by the advantage of their long experience and aërial nature, they were enabled to execute, with fufficient skill and dignity, the parts which they had undertaken. They lurked in the temples, inflituted festivals and facrifices, invented fables, pronounced oracles, and were frequently allowed to perform

tive church is very clearly explained by Juffin Martyr. Apolog. Major, by Athenagoras Leas they were tormented by the Chriftian exgat. c. 22. &c. and by Lactantius, Institut. orcifts. Divin. ii. 14-19.

<sup>58</sup> The unanimous fentiment of the primi- 39 Tertullian (Apolog. c. 23.) alleges the miracles. The Christians, who, by the interposition of evil CHAP. fpirits, could fo readily explain every præternatural appearance, were disposed and even desirous to admit the most extravagant fictions of the Pagan mythology. But the belief of the Christian was accompanied with horror. The most trisling mark of respect to the national worship he considered as a direct homage yielded to the dæmon, and as an act of rebellion against the majesty of God.

In confequence of this opinion, it was the first but arduous duty Abhorrence of a Christian to preserve himself pure and undefiled by the practice of the C tians for of idolatry. The religion of the nations was not merely a specu-idolatry. lative doctrine professed in the schools or preached in the temples. The innumerable deities and rites of polytheism were closely interwoven with every circumstance of business or pleasure, of public or of private life; and it seemed impossible to escape the observance of them, without, at the same time, renouncing the commerce of mankind, and all the offices and amusements of society 40. The Ceremonies. important transactions of peace and war were prepared or concluded by folemn facrifices, in which the magistrate, the senator, and the foldier, were obliged to prefide or to participate ". The public spectacles were an effential part of the cheerful devotion of the Pagans, and the gods were supposed to accept, as the most grateful offering, the games that the prince and people celebrated in honour of their peculiar festivals 42. The Christian, who with pious horror avoided the abomination of the circus or the theatre, treatife against idolatry, to caution his bre- c. 35. thren against the hourly danger of incurring that guilt. Recogita sylvam, et quantæ la- fevere resormer shews no more indulgence to titant spinæ. De Idolatria, c. 10.

every fenator dropt fome wine and frankin- to their stature, c. 23.

40 Tertullian has written a most severe cense on the altar. Sueton, in August.

42 See Tertullian, De Spectaculis. This a tragedy of Euripides, than to a combat of 44 The Roman senate was always held in a gladiators. The dress of the actors particutemple or confecrated place (Aulus Gellius, Jarly offends him. By the use of the lofty xiv. 7.). Before they entered on business, buskin, they impiously strive to add a cubit

C H A P. found himself encompassed with infernal snares in every convivial entertainment, as often as his friends, invoking the hospitable deities, poured out libations to each other's happiness 43. When the bride, struggling with well-affected reluctance, was forced in hymenæal pomp over the threshold of her new habitation 44; or when the fad procession of the dead slowly moved towards the funeral pile 45; the Christian, on these interesting occasions, was compelled to defert the persons who were the dearest to him, rather than contract the guilt inherent to those impious ceremonies. Every art and every trade that was in the least concerned in the framing or adorning of idols was polluted by the flain of idolatry 46; a fevere fentence, fince it devoted to eternal mifery the far greater part of the community, which is employed in the exercise of liberal or mechanic professions. If we cast our eyes over the numerous remains of antiquity, we shall perceive, that besides the immediate representations of the Gods, and the holy instruments. of their worship, the elegant forms and agreeable fictions confecrated by the imagination of the Greeks, were introduced asthe richest ornaments of the houses, the dress, and the furniture, of the Pagans 47. Even the arts of mulic and painting, of eloquence and poetry, flowed from the fame impure origin. In the flyle of the fathers, Apollo and the Muses were the organs of the > 43 The ancient practice of concluding the entertainment with libations, may be found in every classic. Socrates and Seneca, in their last moments, made a noble application of this custom. Postquam stagnum calidæ aquæ introiit, respergens proximos servorum, additâ voce, libare fe liquorem illum Jovi Liberatori, Tacit, Annal, xv. 64.

> 44 See the elegant but idolatrous hymn of Catullus, on the nuptials of Manlius and Julia. O Hymen, Hymenæe Io! Quis huic Deo compararier aufit?

45 The ancient funerals (in those of Misenus and Pallas) are no less accurately defcribed by Virgil, than they are illustrated by his commentator Servius. The pile itself was an altar, the flames were fed with the blood of victims, and all the affiftants were fprinkled with luftral water.

45 Tertullian de Idolatria, c. 11.

47 See every part of Montfaucon's Antiquities. Even the reverses of the Greek and Roman coins were frequently of an idolatrous nature. Here indeed the scruples of the Christian were suspended by a stronger passion.

infernal

Arts.

infernal spirit, Homer and Virgil were the most eminent of his CHAP. fervants, and the beautiful mythology which pervades and animates the compositions of their genius, is destined to celebrate the glory of the dæmons. Even the common language of Greece and Rome abounded with familiar but impious expressions, which the imprudent Christian might too carelessly utter, or too patiently bear 48.

XV.

The dangerous temptations which on every fide lurked in Festivals. ambush to surprise the unguarded believer, assailed him with redoubled violence on the days of folemn festivals. So artfully were they framed and disposed throughout the year, that superflition always wore the appearance of pleasure, and often of virtue 47. Some of the most facred festivals in the Roman ritual were deflined to falute the new calends of January with vows of public and private felicity, to indulge the pious remembrance of the dead and living, to ascertain the inviolable bounds of property, to hail, on the return of fpring, the genial powers of fecundity, to perpetuate the two memorable aras of Rome, the foundation of the city, and that of the republic, and to restore, during the humane license of the Saturnalia, the primitive equality of mankind. Some idea may be conceived of the abhorrence of the Christians for fuch impious ceremonies, by the ferupulous delicacy which they difplayed on a much less alarming occasion. On days of general festivity, it was the custom of the ancients to adorn their doors with lamps and with branches of laurel, and to crown their heads with a garland of flowers. This innocent and elegant practice might perhaps have been tolerated as a mere civil institution. But his imperfect Falli. He finished no more than the first fix months of the year. The compilation of Macrobius is called the Saturnalia, but it is only a finall part of the first book that bears any relation to the title.

49 Confult the most laboured work of Ovid,

<sup>48</sup> Tertullian de Idolatria, c. 20, 21, 22. If a Pagan friend (on the occasion perhaps of fneezing) used the familiar expression of " Jupiter bless you," the Christian was obliged to protest against the divinity of Jupiter.

C H A P. it most unluckily happened that the doors were under the protection of the household gods, that the laurel was facred to the lover of Daphne, and that garlands of flowers, though frequently worn as a fymbol either of joy or mourning, had been dedicated in their first origin to the service of superstition. The trembling Christians, who were perfuaded in this inflance to comply with the fashion of their country, and the commands of the magistrate, laboured under the most gloomy apprehensions, from the reproaches of their own conscience, the censures of the church, and the denunciations of divine vengeance 50.

Zeal for Christianity.

Such was the anxious diligence which was required to guard the chastity of the gospel from the infectious breath of idolatry. The fuperstitious observances of public or private rites were carelessly practised, from education and habit, by the followers of the established religion. But as often as they occurred, they afforded the Christians an opportunity of declaring and confirming their zealous opposition. By these frequent protestations their attachment to the faith was continually fortified, and in proportion to the increase of zeal, they combated with the more ardour and fuccess in the holy war, which they had undertaken against the empire of the dæmons.

THESECOND CAUSE. of the immortality of the foul among the philosophers:

II. The writings of Cicero " represent in the most lively colours The doftrine the ignorance, the errors, and the uncertainty of the ancient philosophers with regard to the immortality of the foul. they are defirous of arming their disciples against the fear of death,

> 50 Tertullian has composed a defence, or rather panegyric, of the rash action of a Christian soldier, who, by throwing away his crown of laurel, had exposed himself and his brethren to the most imminent danger. By the mention of the emperors (Severus and Caracalla) it is evident, notwithstanding the wishes of M. de Tillemont, that Tertullian composed his treatise De Corona, long before he was engaged in the errors of the Monta-nists. See Memoires Ecclesiastiques, tom. iii. p. 384.

<sup>51</sup> In particular, the first book of the Tufculan Questions, and the treatise De Senectute, and the Somnium Scipionis, contain, in the most beautiful language, every thing that Grecian philosophy, or Roman good fense, could possibly suggest on this dark but important subject.

they inculcate, as an obvious, though melancholy position, that CHAP. the fatal stroke of our dissolution releases us from the calamities of life; and that those can no longer fuffer who no longer exist. Yet there were a few fages of Greece and Rome who had conceived a more exalted, and, in some respects, a juster idea of human nature; though it must be confessed, that, in the sublime inquiry. their reason had been often guided by their imagination, and that their imagination had been prompted by their vanity. When they viewed with complacency the extent of their own mental powers, when they exercised the various faculties of memory, of fancy, and of judgment, in the most profound speculations, or the most important labours, and when they reflected on the defire of fame, which transported them into future ages, far beyond the bounds of death and of the grave; they were unwilling to confound themfelves with the beafts of the field, or to suppose, that a being, for whose dignity they entertained the most fincere admiration. could be limited to a spot of earth, and to a few years of duration. With this favourable prepoffession they summoned to their aid the science, or rather the language, of Metaphysics. They soon discovered, that as none of the properties of matter will apply to the operations of the mind, the human foul must consequently be a fubstance distinct from the body, pure, simple, and spiritual, incapable of diffolution, and fusceptible of a much higher degree of virtue and happiness after the release from its corporeal prison. From these specious and noble principles, the philosophers who trod in the footsteps of Plato, deduced a very unjustifiable conclufion, fince they afferted, not only the future immortality, but the past eternity of the human foul, which they were too apt to confider as a portion of the infinite and felf-existing spirit, which pervades and fustains the universe 52. A doctrine thus removed 33 The pre-existence of human fouls, so far and Latin fathers. See Beausobre, Hist. du at least as that doctrine is compatible with re-Manicheisne, 1. vi. c. 4. ligion, was adopted by many of the Greek

beyond

C H A P.

beyond the fenses and the experience of mankind, might serve to amuse the leisure of a philosophic mind; or, in the silence of solitude, it might sometimes impart a ray of comfort to desponding virtue; but the faint impression which had been received in the schools, was soon obliterated by the commerce and business of active life. We are sufficiently acquainted with the eminent persons who slourished in the age of Cicero, and of the first Cæsars, with their actions, their characters, and their motives, to be affured that their conduct in this life was never regulated by any serious conviction of the rewards or punishments of a future state. At the bar and in the senate of Rome the ablest orators were not apprehensive of giving offence to their hearers, by exposing that doctrine as an idle and extravagant opinion, which was rejected with contempt by every man of a liberal education and understanding.

among the Pagans of Greece and Rome; Since therefore the most sublime efforts of philosophy can extend no farther than feebly to point out the desire, the hope, or, at most, the probability, of a future state, there is nothing, except a divine revelation, that can ascertain the existence, and describe the condition, of the invisible country which is destined to receive the souls of men after their separation from the body. But we may perceive several desects inherent to the popular religions of Greece and Rome, which rendered them very unequal to so arduous a task. 1. The general system of their mythology was unsupported by any folid proofs; and the wisest among the Pagans had already disclaimed its usurped authority. 2. The description of the infernal regions had been abandoned to the fancy of painters and of poets, who peopled them with so many phantoms and monsters, who dispensed their rewards and punishments with so little equity, that a folemn truth, the most congenial to the human heart, was CHAP. oppressed and disgraced by the absurd mixture of the wildest fictions 54. 3. The doctrine of a future state was scarcely confidered among the devout polytheifts of Greece and Rome as a fundamental article of faith. The providence of the gods, as it related to public communities rather than to private individuals, was principally displayed on the visible theatre of the present world. The petitions which were offered on the altars of Jupiter or Apollo, expressed the anxiety of their worshippers for temporal happiness and their ignorance or indifference concerning a future life 55. The important truth of the immortality of the foul was inculcated with more diligence as well as fuccess in India, in Assyria, in Egypt, and in Gaul; and fince we cannot attribute fuch a dif- among the ference to the fuperior knowledge of the barbarians, we must ascribe it to the influence of an established priesthood, which employed the motives of virtue as the inftrument of ambition 56.

<sup>53</sup> See Cicero pro Cluent. c. 61. Cæfar ap, Salluft, de Bell. Catilin. c. 50. Juvenal Satir. ii, 140.

Ese aliquos manes, et subterranea regna,

Nec pueri credunt, nifi qui nondum ære lavantur.

We might naturally expect, that a principle fo effential to re- among the ligion, would have been revealed in the clearest terms to the chosen people of Palestine, and that it might safely have been intrusted to the hereditary priesthood of Aaron. It is incumbent on us to adore the mysterious dispensations of Providence 57, when we dis-very dreary and incoherent account of the in- lorum occurrit (fays Valerius Maximus, I. ii. fernal shades. Pindar and Virgil have embellished the picture; but even those poets, though more correct than their great model, are guilty of very strange inconsistencies. See more earkly infinuated by Mela, I. iii. c. z. cial, part iii. c. 22.

55 See the xvith Epiftle of the first book of Horace, the xiiith Satire of Juvenal, and the iid Jatire of Perfius: these popular discourses express the fentiment and language of the multitude.

may observe, that they intrusted, not only reason for the omission, and most ingeniously their lives, but even their money, to the fe- retorts it on the unbelievers.

54 The xith book of the Odyffey gives a curity of another world. Vetus ille mos Galc. 6. p. 10.), quos memorla proditur est, pecunias mutuas, quæ his apud inferos redderentur, dare folitos. The fame custom is Bayle, Responses au Questions d'un Provin- It is almost needless to add, that the profits of trade hold a just proportion to the credit fponfibility, which could fearcely be claimed by any other order of men.

57 The right reverend author of the Di-56 If we confine ourselves to the Gauls, we vine Legation of Moses assigns a very curious

C H A P. cover, that the doctrine of the immortality of the foul is omitted in the law of Moses; it is darkly infinuated by the prophets, and during the long period which elapfed between the Egyptian and the Babylonian fervitudes, the hopes as well as fears of the lews appear to have been confined within the narrow compass of the prefent life 58. After Cyrus had permitted the exiled nation to return into the promifed land, and after Ezra had restored the ancient records of their religion, two celebrated fects, the Saducees and the Pharifees, infenfibly arose at Jerusalem 59. The former felected from the more opulent and diffinguished ranks of fociety, were strictly attached to the literal sense of the Mosaic law, and they pioufly rejected the immortality of the foul, as an opinion that received no countenance from the divine book, which they revered as the only rule of their faith. To the authority of fcripture the Pharifees added that of tradition, and they accepted, under the name of traditions, feveral speculative tenets from the philosophy or religion of the eastern nations. The doctrines of fate or predestination, of angels and spirits, and of a future state of rewards and punishments, were in the number of these new articles of belief; and as the Pharifees, by the aufterity of their manners, had drawn into their party the body of the Jewish people, the immortality of the foul became the prevailing fentiment of the fynagogue, under the reign of the Afmonæan princes and pontiffs. The temper of the Jews was incapable of contenting itself with fuch a cold and languid affent as might fatisfy the mind of a Polytheift; and as foon as they admitted the idea of a future state, they embraced it Ecclesiast. c. 1, sect. 8.). His authority seems pleased some modern critics to add the proto carry the greater weight, as he has written phets to their creed, and to suppose, that a learned and judicious commentary on the they contented themselves with rejecting the books of the Old Testament.

Bell. Jud. ii. 8. According to the most na- affical History, vol. ii. p. 103. tural interpretation of his words, the Saducees with the zeal which has always formed the characteristic of the C II A P. XV. nation. Their zeal, however, added nothing to its evidence, or even probability: and it was still necessary, that the doctrine of life and immortality, which had been dictated by nature, approved by reason, and received by superstition, should obtain the fanction of divine truth from the authority and example of Christ.

<sup>58</sup> See Le Clerc (Prolegomena ad Hift, admitted only the Pentateuch; but it has traditions of the Pharifees. Dr. Jortin has 59 Joseph. Antiquitat. I. xiii. c. 10. De argued that point in his Remarks on Ecclesi-

When the promife of eternal happiness was proposed to mankind, among the Christians. on condition of adopting the faith and of observing the precepts of the gospel, it is no wonder that so advantageous an offer should have been accepted by great numbers of every religion, of every rank, and of every province in the Roman empire. The ancient Christians were animated by a contempt for their present existence, and by a just confidence of immortality, of which the doubtful and imperfect faith of modern ages cannot give us any adequate notion. In the primitive church, the influence of truth was very powerfully Approaching flrengthened by an opinion, which, however it may deferve respect world. for its usefulness and antiquity, has not been found agreeable to experience. It was univerfally believed, that the end of the world, and the kingdom of Heaven, were at hand. The near approach of this wonderful event had been predicted by the apostles; the tradition of it was preserved by their earliest disciples, and those who understood in their literal fense the discourses of Christ himself, were obliged to expect the fecond and glorious coming of the Son of Man in the clouds, before that generation was totally extinguifhed, which had beheld his humble condition upon earth, and which might still be witness to the calamities of the Jews under Vespasian or Hadrian. The revolution of seventeen centuries has instructed us not to press too closely the mysterious language of prophecy and revelation; but as long as, for wife purposes, this error was permitted to subfift in the church, it was productive of the most falutary effects on the faith and practice of Christians, who lived in the awful expectation of that moment when the globe itself, and all VOL. I. 4 C all the various race of mankind, should tremble at the appearance of their divine judge 60.

CHAP. XV. Doctrine of the Millennium.

The ancient and popular doctrine of the Millennium was intimately connected with the fecond coming of Christ. As the works of the creation had been finished in fix days, their duration in their present state, according to a tradition which was attributed to the prophet Elijah, was fixed to fix thousand years 61. By the same analogy it was inferred, that this long period of labour and contention, which was now almost elapsed 62, would be succeeded by a joyful Sabbath of a thousand years; and that Christ, with the triumphant band of the faints and the elect who had escaped death, or who had been miraculoufly revived, would reign upon earth till the time appointed for the last and general refurrection. So pleasing was this hope to the mind of believers, that the New Yerusalem, the feat of this blifsful kingdom, was quickly adorned with all the gayest colours of the imagination. A felicity confisting only of pure and spiritual pleasure, would have appeared too refined for its inhabitants, who were still supposed to possess their human nature and fenses. A garden of Eden, with the amusements of the pastoral life, was no longer fuited to the advanced state of fociety which prevailed under the Roman empire. A city was therefore erected the twenty-fourth chapter of St. Matthew, and by the first epistle of St. Paul to the Thessalonians. Erasmus removes the difficulty by the help of allegory and metaphor; and the learned Grotius ventures to infinuate, that, for wife purpofes, the pious deception was permitted to take place.

61 See Burnet's Sacred Theory, part iii. c. 5. This tradition may be traced as high as the author of the Epistle of Barnabas, who wrote in the first century, and who seems to have been half a Jew.

62 The primitive church of Antioch com- limits.

60 This expectation was countenanced by puted almost 6000 years from the creation of the world to the birth of Christ. Africanus, Lactantius, and the Greek church, have reduced that number to 5500, and Eufebius has contented himself with 5200 years. These calculations were formed on the Septuagint, which was univerfally received during the fix first centuries. The authority of the Vulgate and of the Hebrew text has determined the moderns, Protestants as well as Catholics, to prefer a period of about 4000 years; though, in the study of profane antiquity, they often find themselves streightened by those narrow of gold and precious stones, and a supernatural plenty of corn and CHAP. wine was bestowed on the adjacent territory; in the free enjoyment of whose spontaneous productions, the happy and benevolent people was never to be reftrained by any jealous laws of exclusive property 63. The affurance of fuch a Millennium, was carefully inculcated by a fuccession of fathers from Justin Martyr 64 and Irenæus, who converfed with the immediate disciples of the apostles, down to Lactantius, who was preceptor to the fon of Constantine 65. Though it might not be univerfally received, it appears to have been the reigning fentiment of the orthodox believers; and it feems fo well adapted to the defires and apprehensions of mankind, that it must have contributed in a very considerable degree to the progress of the Christian faith. But when the edifice of the church was almost completed, the temporary support was laid aside. doctrine of Christ's reign upon earth, was at first treated as a profound allegory, was confidered by degrees as a doubtful and ufelefs opinion, and was at length rejected as the abfurd invention of herefy and fanaticism 66. A mysterious prophecy, which still forms a part of the facred canon, but which was thought to favour the exploded fentiment, has very narrowly escaped the proscription of the church 67.

Whilft

63 Most of these pictures were borrowed from a ministerpretation of Isaiah, Daniel, and the Apocalypse. One of the groffest images may be found in Irenæus (l. v. p. 455.), the disciple of Papias, who had seen the apostle St. John.

64 See the fecond dialogue of Justin with Tryphon, and the feventh book of Lactantius. It is unnecessary to allege all the intermediate fathers, as the fact is not disputed. Yet the curious reader may confult Daille de Usu Patrum, 1. ii. c. 4.

65 The testimony of Justin, of his own faith and that of his orthodox brethren, in the clearest and most folemn manner (Dialog. cum Tryphonte Jud. p. 177, 178. Edit. Benedictin.). If in the beginning of this important passage there is any thing like an inconfidency, we may impute it, as we think proper, either to the author or to his tran-

66 Dupin, Bibliotheque Ecclesiastique, tom. i. p. 223. tom. ii. p. 366. and Motheim, p. 720; though the latter of these learned divines is not altogether candid on this occasion.

67 In the council of Laodicea (about the year 360) the Apocalypse was tacitly excluded from the facred canon by the fame the doctrine of a Millennium, is delivered in churches of Asia to which it is addressed; and 4 C 2

Conflagration of Rome and of the world.

Whilst the happiness and glory of a temporal reign were promifed to the disciples of Christ, the most dreadful calamities were denounced against an unbelieving world. The edification of the New Jerufalem was to advance by equal steps with the destruction of the mystic Babylon; and as long as the emperors who reigned before Constantine perfished in the profession of idolatry, the epithet of Babylon was applied to the city and to the empire of Rome. A regular feries was prepared of all the moral and physical evils which can afflict a flourishing nation; intestine discord, and the invasion of the fiercest barbarians from the unknown regions of the North; pestilence and famine, comets and eclipses, earthquakes and inundations 63. All these were only so many preparatory and alarming figns of the great catastrophe of Rome, when the country of the Scipios and Cæfars should be consumed by a flame from Heaven, and the city of the feven hills, with her palaces, her temples, and her triumphal arches, should be buried in a vast lake of fire and brimftone. It might, however, afford fome confolation to Roman vanity, that the period of their empire would be that of the world itself; which, as it had once perished by the element of water, was deflined to experience a fecond and a speedy destruction from the element of fire. In the opinion of a general conflagration, the faith of the Christian very happily coincided with the tradition we may learn from the complaint of Sulpicius Severus, that their fentence had been ratified by the greater number of Chriftians of his time. From what causes then is the Apocalypse at present so generally received by the Greek, the Roman, and the Proteslant churches? The following ones may be assigned. 1. The Greeks were subdued by the authority of an impostor, who, in the fixth century, assume the character of Dionysius the Areopagite. 2. A just apprehension, that the grammarians might become more important than the theologians, engaged the council of Trent to fix the seal of their infallibility on all the books of Scripture, contained in the Latin Vulgate, in the number of which the Apocalypie was fortunately included. (Fra Paolo, Illoria del Concilio Tridentino, I. iii) 3. The advantage of turning those mysterious prophecies against the See of Rome, inspired the protalants with uncommon veneration for so useful an ally. See the ingenious and elegant discourses of the present bishop of Litchfield on that unpromising subject.

6. Lactantius (Institut. Divin. vii. 15, &c.) relates the difinal talc of futurity with great spirit and cloquence.

of the East, the philosophy of the Stoics, and the analogy of Nature; CHAP. and even the country, which, from religious motives, had been chosen for the origin and principal scene of the conflagration, was the best adapted for that purpose by natural and physical causes; by its deep caverns, beds of fulphur, and numerous volcanoes, of which those of Ætna, of Vesuvius, and of Lipari, exhibit a very imperfect representation. The calmest and most intrepid sceptic could not refuse to acknowledge, that the destruction of the present system of the world by fire, was in itself extremely probable. The Christian, who founded his belief much less on the fallacious arguments of reason than on the authority of tradition and the interpretation of fcripture, expected it with terror and confidence as a certain and approaching event; and as his mind was perpetually filled with the folemn idea, he confidered every difafter that happened to the empire as an infallible fymptom of an expiring world 69.

The condemnation of the wifest and most virtuous of the Pagans, The Pagans on account of their ignorance or disbelief of the divine truth, seems to offend the reason and the humanity of the present age 7°. But nishment, the primitive church, whose faith was of a much firmer confishence, delivered over, without hefitation, to eternal torture, the far greater part of the human species. A charitable hope might perhaps be indulged in favour of Socrates, or fome other fages of antiquity, who had confulted the light of reason before that of the gospel had devoted to eternal pu-

of her Articles. The Jansenists, who have fo diligently studied the works of the fathers, maintain this fentiment with diftinguished zeal, and the learned M. de Tillemont never difmisses a virtuous emperor without pronouncing his damnation. Zuinglius is perhaps the only leader of a party who has ever adopted the milder fentiment, and he gave no less offence to the Luth rans than to the

On this fubject every reader of tafte will ture, and tradition, into one magnificent fyftem; in the defeription of which, he displays a strength of fancy not inserior to that of

<sup>7</sup>º And yet whatever may be the language of individuals, it is fill the public doctrine of all the Christian churches; nor can even our own refuse to admit the conclusions which must be drawn from the visith and the xvisith

C H A P. arisen ". But it was unanimously affirmed, that those who, since the birth or the death of Christ, had obstinately persisted in the worship of the dæmons, neither deserved nor could expect a pardon from the irritated justice of the Deity. These rigid sentiments, which had been unknown to the ancient world, appear to have infused a spirit of bitterness into a system of love and harmony. The ties of blood and friendship were frequently torn asunder by the difference of religious faith; and the Christians, who, in this world, found themselves oppressed by the power of the Pagans, were sometimes feduced by refentment and spiritual pride to delight in the prospect of their future triumph. "You are fond of spectacles," exclaims the stern Tertullian; " expect the greatest of all spectacles, " the last and eternal judgment of the universe. How shall I ad-" mire, how laugh, how rejoice, how exult, when I behold fo " many proud monarchs, and fancied gods, groaning in the lowest " abyss of darkness; so many magistrates who perfecuted the name " of the Lord, liquefying in hercer fires than they ever kindled " against the Christians; so many fage philosophers blushing in red " hot flames with their deluded scholars; so many celebrated poets " trembling before the tribunal, not of Minos, but of Christ; fo " many tragedians, more tuneful in the expression of their own " fufferings; fo many dancers-" But the humanity of the reader will permit me to draw a veil over the rest of this infernal description, which the zealous African purfues in a long variety of affected and unfeeling witticifms 72.

> 21 Justin and Clemens of Alexandria allow that fome of the philosophers were inftructed by the Logos; confounding its double fignification, of the human reason, and of the Divine Word.

72 Tertullian, De Spectaculis, c. 30. In order to afcertain the degree of authority which the zealous African had acquired, it de Viris Illustribus, c. 53.)

may be sufficient to allege the testimony of Cyprian, the doctor and guide of all the western churches. (See Prudent, Hymn, xiii. 100.) As often as he applied himfelf to his daily fludy of the writings of Tertullian, he was accustomed to fay, "Da mihi magi-" frum; Give me my master." (Hieronym.

Doubtlefs

Were often their fears.

Doubtless there were many among the primitive Christians of a CHAP. temper more fuitable to the meekness and charity of their profession. There were many who felt a fincere compassion for the danger of converted by their friends and countrymen, and who exerted the most benevolent zeal to fave them from the impending destruction. The careless Polytheift, affailed by new and unexpected terrors, against which neither his priefts nor his philosophers could afford him any certain protection, was very frequently terrified and fubdued by the menace of eternal tortures. His fears might affift the progress of his faith and reason; and if he could once persuade himself to suspect that the Christian religion might possibly be true, it became an easy task to convince him that it was the safest and most prudent party that he could possibly embrace.

III. The supernatural gifs, which even in this life were ascribed to the Christians above the rest of mankind, must have conduced to Miraculous their own comfort, and very frequently to the conviction of infidels. Befides the occasional prodigies, which might fometimes be effected by the immediate interpolition of the Deity when he suspended the laws of Nature for the service of religion, the Christian church, from the time of the apostles and their first disciples 73, has claimed an uninterrupted fuccession of miraculous powers, the gift of tongues, of vision and of prophecy, the power of expelling dæmons, of healing the fick, and of raifing the dead. The knowledge of foreign languages was frequently communicated to the contemporaries of Irenæus, though Irenæus himself was left to struggle with the difficulties of a barbarous dialect whilst he preached the gospel to the natives of Gaul 74. The divine inspiration, whether it was conveyed in the form of a waking or of a fleeping vision, is

THE THIRD CAUSE. powers of the primitive church.

7+ Irenæus adv. Hæref. Proem. p. 3. Dr. fuits his hypothefis.

73 Notwithstanding the evasions of Dr. Middleton (Free Inquiry, p. 96, &c.) obwas the foonest given up. The observation

deferibed

Middleton, it is impossible to overlook the ferves, that as this pretension of all others clear traces of visions and inspiration, which was the most difficult to support by art, it may be found in the apostolic fathers.

C H A P. described as a favour very liberally bestowed on all ranks of the faithful, on women as on elders, on boys as well as upon bishops. When their devout minds were fufficiently prepared by a course of prayer, of falling, and of vigils, to receive the extraordinary impulse, they were transported out of their senses, and delivered in extafy what was inspired, being mere organs of the holy spirit, just as a pipe or flute is of him who blows into it 75. We may add, that the defign of these visions was, for the most part, either to difclose the future history, or to guide the present administration of the church. The expulsion of the damons from the bodies of those unhappy persons whom they had been permitted to torment, was confidered as a fignal though ordinary triumph of religion, and is repeatedly alleged by the ancient apologists, as the most convincing evidence of the truth of Christianity. The awful ceremony was usually performed in a public manner, and in the presence of a great number of spectators; the patient was relieved by the power or skill of the exorcist, and the vanquished dæmon was heard to confess, that he was one of the fabled gods of antiquity, who had impiously usurped the adoration of mankind 76. But the miraculous cure of diseases of the most inveterate or even preternatural kind, can no longer occasion any surprise, when we recollect, that in the days of Irenæus, about the end of the fecond century, the refurrection of the dead was very far from being esteemed an uncommon event; that the miracle was frequently performed on neceffary occasions, by great fasting and the joint supplication of the church of the place, and that the persons thus restored to their prayers, had lived afterwards among them many years 77. At fuch C II A P. a period, when faith could boast of so many wonderful victories over death, it feems difficult to account for the fcepticism of those philosophers, who still rejected and derided the doctrine of the refurrection. A noble Grecian had refted on this important ground the whole controversy, and promised Theophilus, bishop of Antioch, that if he could be gratified with the fight of a fingle perfon who had been actually raised from the dead, he would immediately embrace the Christian religion. It is somewhat remarkable, that the prelate of the first eastern church, however anxious for the conversion of his friend, thought proper to decline this fair and reasonable challenge 78.

<sup>75</sup> Athenagoras in Legatione. Justin Martyr, Cohort. ad Gentes. Tertullian advers. a bold defiance to the Pagan magistrates. Of Cicero (de Divinat. ii. 54.) expresses so little fumed by Protestants. reverence.

<sup>75</sup> Tertullian (Apolog. c. 23.) throws out Marcionit. 1. iv. These descriptions are not the primitive miracles, the power of exervery unlike the prophetic fury, for which cifing, is the only one which has been af-

The miracles of the primitive church, after obtaining the fanc- Their truth tion of ages, have been lately attacked in a very free and in-contested. genious inquiry 79; which, though it has met with the most favourable reception from the Public, appears to have excited a general fcandal among the divines of our own as well as of the other protestant churches of Europe 80. Our different sentiments on this fubject will be much less influenced by any particular arguments, than by our habits of fludy and reflection; and above all, by the degree of the evidence which we have accustomed ourselves to require for the proof of a miraculous event. The duty of an hif- Our perplextorian does not call upon him to interpose his private judgment in ity in defining the mirathis nice and important controversy; but he ought not to diffemble riod. the difficulty of adopting such a theory as may reconcile the interest in 1749, and before his death, which happened in 1750, he had prepared a vindication of it against his numerous adversaries.

<sup>77</sup> Irenæus adv. Hæreses, 1. ii. 56, 57. 1. v. c. 6. Mr. Dodwell (Differt. ad Irenæum, ii. 42.) concludes, that the fecond century was still more fertile in miracles than the first.

<sup>78</sup> Theophylus ad Antolycum, 1. ii. p. 77. 79 Dr. Middleton fent out his introduction in the year 1747, published his Free Inquiry

<sup>80</sup> The univerfity of Oxford conferred degrees on his opponents. From the indignation of Mosheim (p. 221.), we may discover the fentiments of the Lutheran divines.

CHAP. of religion with that of reason, of making a proper application of that theory, and of defining with precision the limits of that happy period exempt from error and from deceit, to which we might be disposed to extend the gift of supernatural powers. From the first of the fathers to the last of the popes, a succession of bishops, of faints, of martyrs, and of miracles, is continued without interruption, and the progress of superstition was so gradual and almost imperceptible, that we know not in what particular link we should break the chain of tradition. Every age bears testimony to the wonderful events by which it was diftinguished, and its testimony appears no less weighty and respectable than that of the preceding generation, till we are infenfibly led on to accuse our own inconfiftency, if in the eighth or in the twelfth century we deny to the venerable Bede, or to the holy Bernard, the fame degree of confidence which, in the fecond century, we had fo liberally granted to Justin or to Irenæus 81. If the truth of any of those miracles is appreciated by their apparent use and propriety, every age had unbelievers to convince, heretics to confute, and idolatrous nations to convert; and fufficient motives might always be produced to justify the interposition of Heaven. And yet since every friend to revelation is perfuaded of the reality, and every reasonable man is convinced of the ceffation, of miraculous powers, it is evident that there must have been fome period in which they were either suddenly or gradually withdrawn from the Christian church. Whatever æra is chosen for that purpose, the death of the apostles, the conversion of the Roman empire, or the extinction of the Arian herefy 82, the infensibility of the Christians who lived at that time will

82 The conversion of Constantine is the

<sup>81</sup> It may feem fomewhat remarkable, that Bernard of Clairvaux, who records fo many miracles of his friend St. Malachi, never takes any notice of his own, which, in their turn, however, are carefully related by his companions and disciples. In the long series of ecclefiaffical history, does there exist a fingle instance of a faint afferting that he himself possessed the gift of miracles?

will equally afford a just matter of surprise. They still supported CHAP. their pretentions after they had loft their power. Credulity performed the office of faith; f naticism was permitted to assume the language of inspiration, and the effects of accident or contrivance were ascribed to supernatural causes. The recent experience of genuine miracles should have instructed the Christian world in the ways of providence, and habituated their eye (if we may use a very inadequate expression) to the style of the divine artist. Should the most skilful painter of modern Italy prefume to decorate his feeble imitations with the name of Raphael or of Correggio, the infolent fraud would be foon discovered and indignantly rejected.

Whatever opinion may be entertained of the miracles of the Use of the primitive church fince the time of the apostles, this unresisting soft- miracles. ness of temper, so conspicuous among the believers of the second and third centuries, proved of some accidental benefit to the cause of truth and religion. In modern times, a latent and even involuntary fcepticism adheres to the most pious dispositions. Their admission of supernatural truths is much less an active consent than a cold and paffive acquiescence. Accustomed long fince to observe and to respect the invariable order of Nature, our reason, or at least our imagination, is not fufficiently prepared to fuffain the visible action of the Deity. But in the first ages of Christianity, the situation of mankind was extremely different. The most curious, or the most credulous, among the Pagans, were often perfuaded to enter into a fociety, which afferted an actual claim of miraculous powers. The primitive Christians perpetually trod on mystic ground, and their minds were exercised by the habits of believing the most extraordinary events. They felt, or they fancied, that on every fide they were inceffantly affaulted by dæmons, comforted by visions, inæra which is most usually fixed by Protestants. more credulous are unwilling to reject those The more rational divines are unwilling to of the vth century. admit the miracles of the ivth, whilft the

4 D 2

fructed

CHAP. structed by prophecy, and surprisingly delivered from danger, fickness, and from death itself, by the supplications of the church. The real or imaginary prodigies, of which they fo frequently conceived themselves to be the objects, the instruments, or the spectators, very happily disposed them to adopt with the same ease, but with far greater justice, the authentic wonders of the evangelic history; and thus miracles that exceeded not the measure of their own experience, inspired them with the most lively assurance of mysteries which were acknowledged to surpass the limits of their understanding. It is this deep impression of supernatural truths, which has been fo much celebrated under the name of faith; a flate of mind described as the surest pledge of the divine favour and of future felicity, and recommended as the first or perhaps the only merit of a Christian. According to the more rigid doctors, the moral virtues, which may be equally practifed by infidels, are destitute of any value or efficacy in the work of our justification.

THE FOURTH CAUSE. Virtues of the first Christians.

IV. But the primitive Christian demonstrated his faith by his virtues; and it was very justly supposed that the divine persuasion which enlightened or fubdued the understanding, must, at the same time, purify the heart and direct the actions of the believer. The first apologists of Christianity who justify the innocence of their brethren, and the writers of a later period who celebrate the fanctity of their ancestors, display, in the most lively colours, the reformation of manners which was introduced into the world by the preaching of the gospel. As it is my intention to remark only fuch human causes as were permitted to second the influence of revelation, I shall slightly mention two motives which might naturally render the lives of the primitive Christians much purer and more auftere than those of their Pagan contemporaries or their degenerate fucceffors; repentance for their past fins, and the laudable defire of supporting the reputation of the society in which they were engaged.

Effects of

It is a very ancient reproach, fuggefted by the ignorance or the CHAP. malice of infidelity, that the Christians allured into their party the most atrocious criminals, who, as soon as they were touched by a their repentfense of remorfe, were easily perfuaded to wash away, in the water of baptifin, the guilt of their past conduct, for which the temples of the gods refused to grant them any expiation. But this reproach, when it is cleared from mifreprefentation, contributes as much to the honour as it did to the increase of the church 83. The friends of Christianity may acknowledge without a blush, that many of the most eminent saints had been before their baptism the most abandoned finners. Those persons, who in the world had followed, though in an imperfect manner, the dictates of benevolence and propriety, derived fuch a calm fatisfaction from the opinion of their own reclitude, as rendered them much less susceptible of the sudden emotions of shame, of grief, and of terror, which have given birth to fo many wonderful conversions. After the example of their Divine Mafter, the missionaries of the gospel disdained not the society of men, and especially of women, oppressed by the consciousness, and very often by the effects, of their vices. As they emerged from fin and superstition to the glorious hope of immortality, they refolved to devote themselves to a life, not only of virtue, but of penitence. The defire of perfection became the ruling passion of their foul; and, it is well known, that while reason embraces a cold mediocrity, our passions hurry us, with rapid violence, over the space which lies between the most opposite extremes.

When the new converts had been enrolled in the number of the Care of their faithful, and were admitted to the facraments of the church, they reputation. found themselves restrained from relapsing into their past disorders by another confideration of a less spiritual, but of a very innocent and respectable nature. Any particular society that has departed 83 The imputations of Celfus and Julian, stated by Spanheim, Commentaire fur les Cowith the defence of the fathers, are very fairly fars de Julian, p. 468.

from

CHAP. from the great body of the nation, or the religion to which it belonged, immediately becomes the object of universal as well as invidious observation. In proportion to the smallness of its numbers, the character of the fociety may be affected by the virtue and vices of the persons who compose it; and every member is engaged to watch with the most vigilant attention over his own behaviour, and over that of his brethren, fince, as he must expect to incur a part of the common difgrace, he may hope to enjoy a share of the common reputation. When the Christians of Bithynia were brought before the tribunal of the younger Pliny, they affured the proconful, that, far from being engaged in any unlawful conspiracy, they were bound by a solemn obligation to abstain from the commission of those crimes which disturb the private or public peace of fociety, from theft, robbery, adultery, perjury, and fraud 84. Near a century afterwards, Tertullian, with an honest pride, could boaft, that very few Christians had suffered by the hand of the executioner, except on account of their religion 85. Their ferious and fequestered life, averse to the gay luxury of the age, inured them to chastity, temperance, economy, and all the sober and domestic virtues. As the greater number were of fome trade or profession, it was incumbent on them, by the strictest integrity and the fairest dealing, to remove the fuspicions which the profane are too apt to conceive against the appearances of fanctity. The contempt of the world exercised them in the habits of humility, meekness, and patience. The more they were perfecuted, the more closely they adhered to each other. Their mutual charity and unfuspecting confidence has been remarked by infidels, and was too often abused by perfidious friends 86.

life and death Lucian has left us so entertaining an account) imposed, for a long time, of Afia.

<sup>84</sup> Plin. Epiftol. x. 97.

<sup>25</sup> Tertullian, Apolog. c. 44. He adds, however, with some degree of hesitation, on the credulous simplicity of the Christians " Aut si aliud, jam non Christianus."

<sup>36</sup> The philosopher Peregrinus (of whose

It is a very honourable circumstance for the morals of the primi- CHAP. tive Christians, that even their faults, or rather errors, were derived from an excess of virtue. The bishops and doctors of the church, the fathers. whose evidence attests, and whose authority might influence, the professions, the principles, and even the practice, of their contemporaries, had fludied the fcriptures with less skill than devotion, and they often received, in the most literal sense, those rigid precepts of Christ and the apostles, to which the prudence of fucceeding commentators has applied a loofer and more figurative mode of interpretation. Ambitious to exalt the perfection of the gospel above the wisdom of philosophy, the zealous fathers have carried the duties of felf-mortification, of purity, and of patience, to a height which it is fcarcely possible to attain, and much less to preserve, in our present state of weakness and corruption. A doctrine fo extraordinary and fo fublime must inevitably command the veneration of the people; but it was ill calculated to obtain the fuffrage of those worldly philosophers, who, in the conduct of this transitory life, consult only the feelings of nature and the interest of fociety 87.

There are two very natural propenfities which we may dif- Principles of tinguish in the most virtuous and liberal dispositions, the love of ture. pleasure and the love of action. If the former is refined by art and learning, improved by the charms of focial intercourfe, and corrected by a just regard to occonomy, to health, and to reputation, it is productive of the greatest part of the happiness of private life. The love of action is a principle of a much stronger and more doubtful nature. It often leads to anger, to ambition, and to revenge; but when it is guided by the fense of propriety and benevolence, it becomes the parent of every virtue; and if those virtues are accompanied with equal abilities, a family, a flate, or an empire,

87 See a very judicious treatife of Barbeyrac fur la Morale des Peres.

empire, may be indebted for their fafety and prosperity to the undaunted courage of a single man. To the love of pleasure we may therefore ascribe most of the agreeable, to the love of action we may attribute most of the useful and respectable, qualifications. The character in which both the one and the other should be united and harmonised, would seem to constitute the most perfect idea of human nature. The insensible and inactive disposition, which should be supposed alike destitute of both, would be rejected by the common consent of mankind, as utterly incapable of procuring any happiness to the individual, or any public benefit to the world. But it was not in this world that the primitive Christians were desirous of making themselves either agreeable or useful.

The primitive Chriftians condemn pleafure and luxury.

The acquifition of knowledge, the exercise of our reason or fancy. and the cheerful flow of unguarded conversation, may employ the leifure of a liberal mind. Such amusements, however, were rejected with abhorrence, or admitted with the utmost caution, by the feverity of the fathers, who despised all knowledge that was not useful to falvation, and who confidered all levity of discourse as a criminal abuse of the gift of speech. In our present state of existence, the body is fo infeparably connected with the foul, that it feems to be our interest to taste, with innocence and moderation, the enjoyments of which that faithful companion is fusceptible. different was the reasoning of our devout predecessors; vainly aspiring to imitate the perfection of angels, they disdained, or they affected to difdain, every earthly and corporeal delight 88. Some of our fenses indeed are necessary for our preservation, others for our subsistence, and others again for our information, and thus far it was impossible to reject the use of them. The first fensation of pleasure was marked as the first moment of their abuse. The CHAP. unfeeling candidate for Heaven was instructed, not only to relist the groffer allurements of the tafte or fmell, but even to flut his ears against the profane harmony of founds, and to view with indifference the most finished productions of human art. Gay apparel, magnificent houses, and elegant furniture, were supposed to unite the double guilt of pride and of fenfuality: a fimple and mortified appearance was more fuitable to the Christian who was certain of his fins and doubtful of his falvation. In their censures of luxury, the fathers are extremely minute and circumftantial 89; and among the various articles which excite their pious indignation, we may enumerate false hair, garments of any colour except white, inffruments of mufic, vafes of gold or filver, downy pillows (as Jacob reposed his head on a stone), white bread, foreign wines, public falutations, the use of warm baths, and the practice of shaving the beard, which, according to the expression of Tertullian, is a lie against our own faces, and an impious attempt to improve the works of the Creator 90. When Christianity was introduced among the rich and the polite, the observation of these singular laws was left, as it would be at present, to the few who were ambitious of superior fanctity. But it is always easy as well as agreeable for the inferior ranks of mankind to claim a merit from the contempt of that pomp and pleafure, which fortune has placed beyond their reach. The virtue of the primitive Christians, like that of the first Romans, was very frequently guarded by poverty and ignorance.

The chafte severity of the fathers, in whatever related to the com- Their sentimerce of the two fexes, flowed from the fame principle; their cerning marabhorrence of every enjoyment, which might gratify the fenfual, riage and challity.

intitled the Pædagogue, which contains the 9° Tertullian, de Spectaculis, c. 23-rudiments of ethics, as they were taught in Clemens Alexandrin, Fædagog, l. iii. c. 8.

89 Confult a work of Clemens of Alexandria, the most celebrated of the Christian schools.

VOL. I.

A E

and

CHAP. XV.

and degrade the spiritual, nature of man. It was their favourite opinion, that if Adam had preferved his obedience to the Creator, he would have lived for ever in a flate of virgin purity, and that fome harmless mode of vegetation might have peopled paradife with a race of innocent and immortal beings 91. The use of marriage was permitted only to his fallen posterity, as a necessary expedient to continue the human species, and as a restraint, however imperfect, on the natural licentiousness of desire. The hesitation of the orthodox cafuifts on this interesting subject, betrays the perplexity of men, unwilling to approve an institution, which they were compelled to tolerate 92. The enumeration of the very whimfical laws, which they most circumstantially imposed on the marriagebed, would force a fmile from the young, and a blush from the fair. It was their unanimous fentiment, that a first marriage was adequate to all the purposes of nature and of society. The fensual connexion was refined into a refemblance of the mystic union of Christ with his church, and was pronounced to be indisfoluble either by divorce or by death. The practice of fecond nuptials was branded with the name of a legal adultery; and the perfons who were guilty of fo fcandalous an offence against Christian purity, were foon excluded from the honours, and even from the alms, of the church 93. Since defire was imputed as a crime, and marriage was tolerated as a defect, it was confiftent with the fame principles to confider a flate of celibacy as the nearest approach to the Divine perfection. It was with the utmost difficulty that ancient Rome could support the institution of fix vestals 94; but the primitive church

<sup>91</sup> Beausobre Hist. Critique du Manicheisme, l. vii. c. 3. Justin, Gregory of Nyssa, Augustin, &c. strongly inclined to this opinion.

confiftent ; they rejected the use of marriage.

<sup>93</sup> See a chain of tradition, from Justin Martyr to Jerome, in the Morale des Peres, c. iv. 6-26.

<sup>94</sup> See a very curious Differtation on the 92 Some of the Gnostic heretics were more Vestals, in the Memoires de l'Academie des Infcriptions, tom. ii. p. 161-227. Notwithflanding church was filled with a great number of persons of either sex, who CHAP. had devoted themselves to the profession of perpetual chassity 95. A few of thefe, among whom we may reckon the learned Origen, judged it the most prudent to disarm the tempter 96. Some were insensible and fome were invincible against the affaults of the flesh. Disdaining an ignominious flight, the virgins of the warm climate of Africa encountered the enemy in the closest engagement; they permitted priefts and deacons to share their bed, and gloried amidst the flames in their unfullied purity. But infulted Nature fometimes vindicated her rights, and this new species of martyrdom served only to introduce a new fcandal into the church 97. Among the Christian ascetics, however (a name which they soon acquired from their painful exercise), many, as they were less presumptuous, were probably more fuccefsful. The lofs of fenfual pleafure was fupplied and compensated by spiritual pride. Even the multitude of Pagans were inclined to estimate the merit of the facrifice by its apparent difficulty; and it was in the praise of these chaste spouses of Christ that the fathers have poured forth the troubled stream of their eloquence 98. Such are the early traces of monastic principles and institutions, which, in a subsequent age, have counterbalanced all the temporal advantages of Christianity 99.

flanding the honours and rewards which were bestowed on those virgins, it was difficult to procure a fufficient number; nor could the dread of the most horrible death always reftrain their incontinence.

95 Cupiditatem procreandi aut unam fcimus aut nullam. Minucius Fælix, c. 31. Justin. Apolog. Major. Athenagoras in Legat. c. 28. Tertullian de Cultu Fœmin. 1. ii.

· 6 Eusebius, I. vi. 8. Before the fame of Origen had excited envy and perfecution, this extraordinary action was rather admired than censured. As it was his general practice to allegorize scripture; it seems unfortunate that, in this instance only, he should have use of slesh and wine. Mosheim, p. 310. adopted the literal fense. 4 E 2

97 Cyprian. Epistol. 4. and Dodwell Differtat. Cyprianic. iii. Something like this rash attempt was long afterwards imputed to the founder of the order of Fontevrault. Bayle has amufed himfelf and his readers on that very delicate fubject.

91 Dupin (Bibliotheque Ecclefiastique, tom. i. p. 195.) gives a particular account of the dialogue of the ten virgins, as it was composed by Methodius, Bishop of Tyre. The praises of virginity are excessive.

59 The Afcetics (as early as the fecond century) made a public profession of mortifying their bodies, and of abstaining from the CHAP. XV.

Their averfion to the business of war and government.

The Christians were not less averse to the business than to the pleasures of this world. The defence of our persons and property they knew not how to reconcile with the patient doctrine which enjoined an unlimited forgiveness of past injuries, and commanded them to invite the repetition of fresh insults. Their simplicity was offended by the use of oaths, by the pomp of magistracy, and by the active contention of public life, nor could their humane ignorance be convinced, that it was lawful on any occasion to shed the blood of our fellow-creatures, either by the fword of justice, or by that of war; even though their criminal or hostile attempts fhould threaten the peace and fafety of the whole community 100. It was acknowledged, that, under a less perfect law, the powers of the Jewish constitution had been exercised, with the approbation of Heaven, by inspired prophets and by anointed kings. Christians felt and confessed, that such institutions might be neceffary for the prefent fystem of the world, and they cheerfully fubmitted to the authority of their Pagan governors. they inculcated the maxims of passive obcdience, they refused to take any active part in the civil administration or the military defence of the empire. Some indulgence might perhaps be allowed to those perfons who, before their conversion, were already engaged in such violent and fanguinary occupations 'c'; but it was impossible that the Christians, without renouncing a more facred duty, could assume the character of foldiers, of magistrates, or of princes 102. This indolent, or even criminal, difregard to the public welfare, Reformation by the Socinians, the modern 428. Anabaptifts, and the Quakers. Barclay, the Christians, p. 542-549.

See the Morale des Peres. The fame latria, c. 17, 18. Origen contra Celfum, patient principles have been revived fince the 1. v. p. 253. 1. vii. p. 348. 1. viii. p. 423-exposed them to the contempt and reproaches of the Pagans, who CHAP. very frequently asked, what must be the fate of the empire, attacked on every fide by the barbarians, if all mankind should adopt the pufillanimous fentiments of the new fect 103? To this infulting question the Christian apologists returned obscure and ambiguous answers, as they were unwilling to reveal the secret cause of their fecurity; the expectation that, before the conversion of mankind was accomplished, war, government, the Roman empire, and the world itself, would be no more. It may be observed, that in this instance likewife, the fituation of the first Christians coincided very happily with their religious scruples, and that their aversion to an active life contributed rather to excuse them from the service, than to exclude them from the honours, of the flate and army.

<sup>102</sup> Tertullian (de Corona Militis, c. 11.) apologist of the Quakers, has protected his fuggests to them the expedient of deferting; a brethren, by the authority of the primitive counsel, which, if it had been generally known, was not very proper to conciliate the 101 Tertullian, Apolog. c. 21. De Ido- favour of the emperors towards the christian fect.

V. But the human character, however it may be exalted THE FIFTH or depressed by a temporary enthusiasm, will return by degrees to The Chrisits proper and natural level, and will refume those passions that feem in the gothe most adapted to its present condition. The primitive Christians vernment of the church. were dead to the business and pleasures of the world; but their love of action, which could never be entirely extinguished, soon revived, and found a new occupation in the government of the church. A feparate fociety, which attacked the established religion of the empire, was obliged to adopt some form of internal policy, and to appoint a sufficient number of ministers, intrusted not only with the spiritual functions, but even with the temporal direction of the Christian commonwealth. The safety of that society, its honour, its aggrandisement, were productive, even in the most pious minds, of a spirit of patriotism, such as the first of the Romans had felt for the republic, and fometimes, of a fimilar indifference, in the use of whatever means might probably conduce

tians active

103 As well as we can judge from the mu- 423.) his adverfary, Celfus, had urged his tilated representation of Origen, (I. viii. p. objection with great force and candour.

C II A P. to fo defirable an end. The ambition of raifing themselves or their friends to the honours and offices of the church, was difguifed by the laudable intention of devoting to the public benefit, the power and confideration, which, for that purpose only, it became their duty to folicit. In the exercise of their functions, they were frequently called upon to detect the errors of herefy, or the arts of faction, to oppose the defigns of perfidious brethren, to fligmatize their characters with deferved infamy, and to expel them from the bosom of a fociety, whose peace and happiness they had attempted to disturb. The ecclefiaftical governors of the Christians were taught to unite the wisdom of the serpent with the innocence of the dove; but as the former was refined, fo the latter was infenfibly corrupted, by the habits of government. In the church as well as in the world, the perfons who were placed in any public station rendered themselves considerable by their eloquence and firmness, by their knowledge of mankind, and by their dexterity in business, and while they concealed from others, and perhaps from themselves, the fecret motives of their conduct, they too frequently relapfed into all the turbulent passions of active life, which were tinctured with an additional degree of bitterness and obstinacy from the infufion of spiritual zeal.

Its primitive freedom and equality.

The government of the church has often been the fubject as well as the prize of religious contention. The hostile disputants of Rome, of Paris, of Oxford, and of Geneva, have alike struggled to reduce the primitive and apostolic model 104, to the respective flandards of their own policy. The few who have purfued this inquiry with more candour and impartiality, are of opinion 105, 104 The Ariffocratical party, in France, as acknowledge an equal. See Fra. Paolo. well as in England, has strenuously maintained the divine origin of bishops. But the Calvinifical prefbyters were impatient of a fuperior; and the Roman Pontiff refused to 105 In the history of the Christian hierarchy, I have, for the most part, followed the learned and candid Mosheim.

that the apostles declined the office of legislation, and rather chose CHAP. to endure some partial scandals and divisions, than to exclude the Christians of a future age from the liberty of varying their forms of ecclefiaftical government according to the changes of times and circumstances. The scheme of policy, which, under their approbation, was adopted for the use of the first century, may be discovered from the practice of Jerusalem, of Ephesus, or of Corinth. The focieties which were inflituted in the cities of the Roman empire, were united only by the ties of faith and charity. Independence and equality formed the basis of their internal conflitution. The want of discipline and human learning was supplied by the occasional assistance of the prophets 100, who were called to that function without distinction of age, of fex, or of natural abilities, and who, as often as they felt the divine impulse, poured forth the effusions of the spirit in the assembly of the faithful. But these extraordinary gifts were frequently abused or misapplied by the prophetic teachers. They displayed them at an improper feafon, prefumptuously disturbed the service of the assembly, and by their pride or mistaken zeal they introduced, particularly into the apostolic church of Corinth, a long and melancholy train of diforders 107. As the institution of prophets became useless, and even pernicious, their powers were withdrawn, and their office abolished. The public functions of religion were folely intrufted to the eftablished ministers of the church, the bishops and the presbyters; two appellations which, in their first origin, appear to have distinguished the same office and the same order of persons. The name of Presbyter was expressive of their age, or rather of their gravity and wifdom. The title of Bishop denoted their inspection over the faith

For the prophets of the primitive church, fee Mohleim, Differtationes ad Hift. Ecclef. mens, to the Corinthians. pertinentes, tom. ii. p. 132-208.

C H A P. and manners of the Christians who were committed to their pastoral care. In proportion to the respective numbers of the faithful, a larger or smaller number of these episcopal presbyters guided each infant congregation with equal authority, and with united counfels 198.

Institution of bishops as presidents of the college of presbyters.

But the most perfect equality of freedom requires the directing hand of a fuperior magistrate; and the order of public deliberations foon introduces the office of a prefident, invefted at least with the authority of collecting the fentiments, and of executing the refolutions, of the affembly. A regard for the public tranquillity, which would fo frequently have been interrupted by annual or by occasional elections, induced the primitive Christians to constitute an honourable and perpetual magistracy, and to choose one of the wifest and most holy among their presbyters to execute, during his life, the duties of their ecclefiastical governor. It was under these circumflances that the lofty title of Bishop began to raise itself above the humble appellation of prefbyter; and while the latter remained the most natural distinction for the members of every Christian senate, the former was appropriated to the dignity of its new prefident 109. The advantages of this epifcopal form of government, which appears to have been introduced before the end of the first century ", were so obvious, and so important for the future greatness, as well as the present peace, of Christianity, that it was adopted without delay by all the focieties which were already fcattered over the em-of all the objections of the learned Pearfon, in his Vindiciæ Ignatianæ, part i. c. 11.

<sup>103</sup> Hooker's Ecclefiastical Polity, I. vii.

<sup>109</sup> See Jerome ad Titum, c. 1. and Epistol. 85. (in the Benedictine edition, 101.) and the elaborate apology of Blondel, pro fententi Hieronymi. The ancient flate, as it is described by Jerome, of the bishop and presbyters of Alexandria, receives a remarkable confirmation from the patriarch Eutichius (Annal. tom. i. p. 330. Verf. Pocock); whose alvinony I know not how to reject, in fpite

See the introduction to the Apocalypse. Bishops, under the name of angels, were already instituted in seven cities of Asia. And yet the epistle of Clemens (which is probably of as ancient a date) does not lead us to discover any traces of episcopacy either at Corinth or Rome.

pire, had acquired in a very early period the fanction of anti- CHAP. quity ", and is still revered by the most powerful churches, both of the East and of the West, as a primitive and even as a divine establishment 112. It is needless to observe, that the pious and humble prefbyters, who were first dignified with the episcopal title, could not possess, and would probably have rejected, the power and pomp which now encircles the tiara of the Roman pontiff, or the mitre of a German prelate. But we may define, in a few words, the narrow limits of their original jurisdiction, which was chiefly of a fpiritual, though in fome inftances of a temporal, nature "3. It confifted in the administration of the facraments and discipline of the church, the fuperintendency of religious ceremonies, which imperceptibly increased in number and variety, the consecration of ecclefiaftical ministers, to whom the bishop assigned their respective functions, the management of the public fund, and the determination of all fuch differences as the faithful were unwilling to expose before the tribunal of an idolatrous judge. These powers, during a fhort period, were exercised according to the advice of the presbyteral college, and with the confent and approbation of the affembly of Christians. The primitive bishops were considered only as the first of their equals, and the honourable servants of a free people. Whenever the episcopal chair became vacant by death, a new prefident was chosen among the presbyters by the suffrage of the whole congregation, every member of which supposed himself invested with a facred and facerdotal character 114.

Such

111 Nulla Ecclefia fine Episcopo, has been a fact as well as a maxim fince the time of Tertullian and Irenæus.

VOL. I.

113 See Mosheim in the first and second centuries. Ignatius (ad Smyrnæos, c. 3, &c.) is fond of exalting the episcopal dignity. Le After we have passed the difficulties of Clerc (Hist. Ecclesiast. p. 569.) very bluntly the first century, we find the episcopal go- censures his conduct. Mosheim, with a more vernment univerfally established, till it was critical judgment (p. 161.), suspects the pu-

114 Nonne et Laici facerdotes fumus? Ter-interrupted by the republican genius of the rity even of the smaller epistles. Swifs and German reformers.

C H A P. XV. Provincial councils.

Such was the mild and equal conflitution by which the Christians were governed more than an hundred years after the death of the apostles. Every society formed within itself a separate and independent republic: and although the most distant of these little states maintained a mutual as well as friendly intercourse of letters and deputations, the Christian world was not yet connected by any supreme authority or legislative affembly. As the numbers of the faithful were gradually multiplied, they discovered the advantages that might refult from a closer union of their interest and defigns. Towards the end of the fecond century, the churches of Greece and Asia adopted the useful institutions of provincial synods, and they may justly be supposed to have borrowed the model of a representative council from the celebrated examples of their own country, the Amphictyons, the Achæan league, or the affemblies of the Ionian cities. It was foon established as a custom and as a law, that the bishops of the independent churches should meet in the capital of the province at the flated periods of fpring and autumn. Their deliberations were affifted by the advice of a few diffinguished presbyters, and moderated by the presence of a listening multitude 115. Their decrees, which were styled Canons, regulated every important controverly of faith and discipline; and it was natural to believe that a liberal effusion of the holy spirit would be poured on the united affembly of the delegates of the Christian people. The inflitution of fynods was fo well fuited to private ambition and to public interest, that in the space of a few years it was received throughout the whole empire. A regular correspondence was esta-tullian, Exhort, ad Castitat, c. 7. As the human heart is still the same, several of the observations which Mr. Hume has made on Enthusiasm (Essays, vol. i. p. 76, quarto edit.), may be applied even to real inspiration.

Union of the church.

115 Acta concil. Carthag, apud Cyprian, Edit. Fell, p. 158. This council was composed of eighty-feven bishops from the provinces of Mauritania, Numidia, and Africa; fome prebyters and deacons affished at the affembly; præsente plebis maximå parte.

blifhed

blished between the provincial councils, which mutually communicated and approved their respective proceedings; and the catholic church foon assumed the form, and acquired the strength of a great, fcederative republic 116.

As the legislative authority of the particular churches was infen- Progress of fibly superseded by the use of councils, the bishops obtained by their chority, alliance a much larger share of executive and arbitrary power; and as foon as they were connected by a fense of their common interest. they were enabled to attack, with united vigour, the original rights of their clergy and people. The prelates of the third century imperceptibly changed the language of exhortation into that of command, scattered the seeds of future usurpations, and supplied by feripture allegories and declamatory rhetoric, their deficiency of force and of reason. They exalted the unity and power of the church, as it was represented in the EPISCOPAL OFFICE, of which every bishop enjoyed an equal and undivided portion "7. Princes and magistrates, it was often repeated, might boast an earthly claim to a transitory dominion: it was the episcopal authority alone which was derived from the deity, and extended itself over this and over another world. The bishops were the vicegerents of Christ, the successors of the apostles, and the mystic substitutes of the high priest of the Mosaic law. Their exclusive privilege of conferring the facerdotal character, invaded the freedom both of clerical and of popular elections: and if, in the administration of the church, they still consulted the judgment of the prefbyters, or the inclination of the people, they most carefully inculcated the merit of fuch a voluntary condescension. The bishops acknowledged the supreme authority which refided in the affembly of their brethren; but in the govern-

<sup>116</sup> Aguntur præterea per Græcias illas, lition of the christian churches is very ably certis in locis concilia, &c. Tertullian de explained by Mosheim, p. 164-170.

Jejuniis, c. 13. The African mentions it as a recent and foreign inflitution. The coa- Unitate Ecclesiae, p. 75-86.

XV.

C H A P. ment of his peculiar diocese, each of them exacted from his flock the fame implicit obedience as if that favourite metaphor had been literally just, and as if the shepherd had been of a more exalted nature than that of his sheep "8. This obedience, however, was not imposed without some efforts on one fide, and some refistance on the other. The democratical part of the conftitution was, in many places, very warmly supported by the zealous or interested opposition of the inferior clergy. But their patriotism received the ignominious epithets of faction and fchifm; and the epifcopal caufe was indebted for its rapid progress to the labours of many active prelates, who, like Cyprian of Carthage, could reconcile the arts of the most ambitious statesman with the Christian virtues which seem adapted to the character of a faint and martyr 119.

Pre-eminence of the metropolitan churches.

The same causes which at first had destroyed the equality of the preflyters, introduced among the bishops a pre-eminence of rank, and from thence a superiority of jurisdiction. As often as in the foring and autumn they met in provincial fynod, the difference of personal merit and reputation was very sensibly felt among the members of the affembly, and the multitude was governed by the wifdom and eloquence of the few. But the order of public proceedings required a more regular and less invidious distinction; the office of perpetual prefidents in the councils of each province, was conferred on the bishops of the principal city, and these aspiring prelates, who foon acquired the lofty titles of Metropolitans and Primates, fecretly prepared themselves to usurp over their episcopal brethren the fame authority which the bishops had fo lately assumed

119 If Novatus, Felicissimus, &c. whom the 118 We may appeal to the whole tenor of bishop of Carthage expelled from his church, Cyprian's conduct, of his doctrine, and of his and from Africa, were not the most detestable monsters of wickedness, the zeal of Cyprian must occasionally have prevailed over his vep. 207 - 378.), has laid him open with great racity. For a very just account of these obfcare quarrels, see Mosheim, p. 497-512.

above

Epiftles. Le Clerc, in a short life of Cyprian (Bibliotheque Univerfelle, tom. xii. freedom and accuracy.

above the college of prefbyters 120. Nor was it long before an CHAP. emulation of pre-eminence and power prevailed among the metropolitans themselves, each of them affecting to display, in the most pompous terms, the temporal honours and advantages of the city over which he prefided; the numbers and opulence of the Christians, who were subject to their pastoral care; the saints and martyrs who had arisen among them, and the purity with which they preferved the tradition of the faith, as it had been transmitted through a feries of orthodox bishops from the apostle of the apostolic difciple, to whom the foundation of their church was ascribed 121. From every cause either of a civil or of an ecclesiastical nature, it was eafy to foresee that Rome must enjoy the respect, and would foon claim the obedience, of the provinces. The fociety of the Ambition of faithful bore a just proportion to the capital of the empire; and pontiff. the Roman church was the greatest, the most numerous, and, in regard to the West, the most ancient of all the Christian establishments, many of which had received their religion from the pious labours of her missionaries. Instead of one apostolic founder, the utmost boast of Antioch, of Ephesus, or of Corinth, the banks of the Tyber were supposed to have been honoured with the preaching and martyrdom of the two most eminent among the apostles 122; and the bishops of Rome very prudently claimed the inheritance of whatfoever prerogatives were attributed either to the person or tothe office of St. Peter 123. The bishops of Italy and of the pro-

120 Mosheim, p. 269. 574. Dupin An- Spanheim (Miscellanea Sacra, iii. 3.). Actiquæ Ecclef. Difciplin. p. 19, 20.

121 Tertullian, in a distinct treatise, has pleaded against the heretics, the right of prefcription, as it was held by the apostolic churches.

The journey of St. Peter to Rome ismentioned by most of the ancients (see Eufebius, ii. 25.), maintained by all the catholics, allowed by fome protestants (see Pearfon and Dodwell de Success. Episcop. Roman.), but has been vigorously attacked by cording to father Hardonin, the monks of the thirteenth century, who composed the Æneid, represented St. Peter under the allegorical character of the Trojan hero.

123 It is in French only, that the famous allusion to St. Peter's name is exact. 'Tu es Pierre et sur cette pierre .- The same is imperfect in Greek, Latin, Italian, &c. and totally unintelligible in our Teutonic languages.

not in greak . W. Gibbon's real

vinces.

-

CHAP. vinces were disposed to allow them a primacy of order and affociation (fuch was their very accurate expression) in the Christian aristocracy 124. But the power of a monarch was rejected with abhorrence, and the afpiring genius of Rome experienced from the nations of Alia and Africa, a more vigorous relistance to her spiritual, than she had formerly done to her temporal, dominion. The patriotic Cyprian, who ruled with the most absolute sway the church of Carthage and the provincial fynods, opposed with resolution and fuccess the ambition of the Roman pontiff, artfully connected his own cause with that of the eastern bishops, and, like Hannibal, fought out new allies in the heart of Afia 125. If this Punic war was carried on without any effusion of blood, it was owing much less to the moderation than to the weakness of the contending prelates. Invectives and excommunications were their only weapons; and these, during the progress of the whole controversy, they hurled against each other with equal fury and devotion. The hard necessity of censuring either a pope, or a faint and martyr, distresses the modern catholics whenever they are obliged to relate the particulars of a dispute, in which the champions of religion indulged fuch paffions as feem much more adapted to the fenate or to the camp 126.

Laity and clergy.

The progress of the ecclesiaftical authority gave birth to the memorable diffinction of the laity and of the clergy, which had been unknown to the Greeks and Romans 127. The former of thefe appellations comprehend the body of the Christian people; the bishop of Cæsarea, to Stephen bishop of Rome, ap. Cyprian. Epiftol. 75.

<sup>124</sup> Irenæus adv. Hæreses, iii. 3. Tertullian de Præscription. c. 36, and Cyprian Epistol. 27. 55. 71. 75. Le Clerc (Hift. Ecclef. p. 764.) and Mosheim (p. 258. 578.) labour in the interpretation of these passages. But the loofe and rhetorical style of the fathers often appears favourable to-the pretentions of Rome.

<sup>126</sup> Concerning this dispute of the re-baptifm of heretics; fee the epifles of Cyprian, and the feventh book of Eufebius.

<sup>127</sup> For the origin of these words, see Mofheim, p. 141. Spanheim, Hift. Ecclesiast. ome.

p. 633. The diffinction of Clerus and Laicus was established before the time of Tertullian.

latter, according to the fignification of the word, was appropriated CHAP. to the chosen portion that had been set apart for the service of religion; a celebrated order of men which has furnished the most important, though not always the most edifying, subjects for modern history. Their mutual hostilities fometimes disturbed the peace of the infant church, but their zeal and activity were united in the common cause, and the love of power, which (under the most artful disguises) could infinuate itself into the breasts of bishops and martyrs, animated them to increase the number of their subjects, and to enlarge the limits of the Christian empire. They were destitute of any temporal force, and they were for a long time discouraged and oppressed, rather than assisted, by the civil magistrate; but they had acquired, and they employed within their own fociety, the two most efficacious instruments of government, rewards and punishments; the former derived from the pious liberality, the latter from the devout apprehensions, of the faithful.

I. The community of goods, which had so agreeably amused the Oblations imagination of Plato 123, and which subfifted in some degree among of the church. the auftere fect of the Essenians 129, was adopted for a short time in the primitive church. The fervour of the first proselytes prompted them to fell those worldly possessions, which they despised, to lay the price of them at the feet of the apostles, and to content themfelves with receiving an equal share out of the general distribution 130. The progress of the Christian religion relaxed, and gradually abolished this generous institution, which, in hands less pure than those of the apostles, would too soon have been corrupted and abused by the returning felfishness of human nature; and the converts who embraced

<sup>123</sup> The community instituted by Plato, is more perfect than that which Sir Thomas More had imagined for his Utopia. The community of women, and that of temporal goods, may be confidered as infeparable parts of the same system.

<sup>129</sup> Joseph. Antiquitat. xviii. 2. Philo, de Vit. Contemplativ.

<sup>130</sup> See the Acts of the Apostles, c. 2. 4, 5, with Grotius's Commentary. Mosheim, in a particular differtation, attacks the common opinion with very inconclusive arguments.

C H A P. embraced the new religion were permitted to retain the possession XV. of their patrimony, to receive legacies and inheritances, and to increase their separate property by all the lawful means of trade and industry. Instead of an absolute facrifice, a moderate proportion was accepted by the ministers of the gospel; and in their weekly or monthly affemblies, every believer, according to the exigency of the occasion, and the measure of his wealth and piety, presented his voluntary offering for the use of the common fund 131. Nothing, however inconfiderable, was refused; but it was diligently inculcated, that, in the article of Tythes, the Mosaic law was still of divine obligation; and that fince the Jews, under a less perfect discipline, had been commanded to pay a tenth part of all that they possessed, it would become the disciples of Christ to distinguish themfelves by a superior degree of liberality 132, and to acquire some merit by refigning a fuperfluous treasure, which must fo foon be annihilated with the world itself ';3. It is almost unnecessary to observe, that the revenue of each particular church, which was of fo uncertain and fluctuating a nature, must have varied with the poverty or the opulence of the faithful, as they were dispersed in obscure villages, or collected in the great cities of the empire. In the time of the emperor Decius, it was the opinion of the magistrates that the Christians of Rome were possessed of very considerable wealth; that vessels of gold and filver were used in their religious worship, and that many among their profelytes had fold their lands and houses to increase Tertullian, Apolog. c. 39.

132 Irenaus ad Hæref. 1. iv. c. 27. 34. Origen in Num. Hom. ii. Cyprian de Uni- writers of a very different character. tat. Ecclef. Constitut. Apostol. I. ii. c. 34, 35, with the notes of Cotelerius. The contythable articles, they enumerate corn, wine, the Church, vol. i. p. 457.

131 Justin Martyr, Apolog. Major, c. 89. oil, and wool. On this interesting subject, confult Prideaux's History of Tythes, and Fra-Paolo delle Materie Beneficiarie; two 133 The fame opinion which prevailed about the year one thousand, was productive flitutions introduce this divine precept, by of the fame effects. Most of the Donations declaring that priests are as much above kings, express their motive, "appropinquante munas the foul is above the body. Among the difine." See Mosheim's General History of the public riches of the fect, at the expence, indeed, of their un- CHAP. fortunate children, who found themselves beggars, because their parents had been faints 134. We should listen with distrust to the fuspicions of strangers and enemies: on this occasion, however, they receive a very specious and probable colour from the two following circumstances, the only ones that have reached our knowledge, which define any precise sums, or convey any distinct idea. Almost at the same period, the bishop of Carthage, from a fociety less opulent than that of Rome, collected an hundred thoufand festerces (above eight hundred and fifty pounds sterling) on a fudden call of charity to redeem the brethren of Numidia, who had been carried away captives by the barbarians of the defert 135. About an hundred years before the reign of Decius, the Roman church had received, in a fingle donation, the fum of two hundred thousand sesterces from a stranger of Pontus, who proposed to fix his residence in the capital 136. These oblations, for the most part, were made in money; nor was the fociety of Christians either defirous or capable of acquiring, to any confiderable degree, the incumbrance of landed property. It had been provided by feveral laws, which were enacted with the same design as our statutes of mortmain, that no real effates should be given or bequeathed to any corporate body, without either a special privilege or a particular dispensation from the emperor or from the senate 137; who were

feldom

Tum fumma cura eft fratribus (Ut fermo teflatur loquax.)
Offerre, fundis venditis Seflertiorum millia.
Addicta avorum prædia
Fædis fub auctionibus,
Succeffor exheres gemit Sanctis egens Parentibus.
Hæc occuluntur abditis Ecclefiarum in Angulis:
Et fumma pietas creditur Nudare dulces liberos.
Prudent. mtp repanar. Hymn. 2.

Vol. I.

The fubfequent conduct of the deacon Laurence, only proves how proper a use was made of the wealth of the Roman church; it was undoubtedly very confiderable; but Fra-Paolo (c. 3.) appears to exaggerate, when he supposes, that the successor of Commodus were urged to perfectite the Christians by their own avarice, or that of their Pratorian præsess.

235 Cyprian. Epistol. 62.

Tertullian de Preferiptione, c. 30.

137 Diocletian gave a refeript, which is only a declaration of the old law; "Collegium, fi nullo speciali privilegio subnixum G. fit,

CHAP. feldom disposed to grant them in favour of a fect, at first the object of their contempt, and at last of their fears and jealousy. A transaction however is related under the reign of Alexander Severus, which discovers that the restraint was sometimes eluded or sufpended, and that the Christians were permitted to claim and to possess lands within the limits of Rome itself 138. The progress of Christianity, and the civil confusions of the empire, contributed to relax the feverity of the laws, and before the close of the third century many confiderable effates were bestowed on the opulent churches of Rome, Milan, Carthage, Antioch, Alexandria, and the other great cities of Italy and the provinces.

Diffribution of the revenue.

The bishop was the natural steward of the church; the public flock was intrufted to his care without account or control; the presbyters were confined to their spiritual functions, and the more dependent order of deacons was folely employed in the management and distribution of the ecclesiastical revenue "9. If we may give credit to the vehement declamations of Cyprian, there were too many among his African brethren, who, in the execution of their charge, violated every precept, not only of evangelic perfection, but even of moral virtue. By fome of these unfaithful stewards the riches of the church were lavished in fensual pleasures, by others they were perverted to the purpoles of private gain, of fraudulent purchases, and of rapacious usury 140. But as long as the contributions of the Christian people were free and unconstrained, the abuse of their confidence could not be very frequent, and the general uses to which their liberality was applied, reflected honour on the religious fociety. A decent portion was referved for the non est." Fra-Paolo (c. 4.) thinks that these butchers. regulations had been much neglected fince the reign of Valerian.

fit, hæreditatem capere non posse, dubium tween the society of Christians, and that of 139 Conflitut. Apostol. ii. 35.

maintenance

<sup>140</sup> Cyprian de Lapsis, p. 89. Epistol. 65. had been public; and was now diffuted be-

maintenance of the bishop and his clergy; a sufficient sum was CHAP. allotted for the expences of the public worship, of which the feasts of love, the agape, as they were called, constituted a very pleafing part. The whole remainder was the facred patrimony of the poor. According to the discretion of the bishop, it was distributed to support widows and orphans, the lame, the fick, and the aged of the community; to comfort ftrangers and pilgrims, and to alleviate the misfortunes of prisoners and captives, more especially when their fufferings had been occasioned by their firm attachment to the cause of religion 141. A generous intercourse of charity united the most distant provinces, and the smaller congregations were cheerfully affifted by the alms of their more opulent brethren 142. Such an inflitution, which paid less regard to the merit than to the diffress of the object, very materially conduced to the progress of Christianity. The Pagans, who were actuated by a fense of humanity, while they derided the doctrines, acknowledged the benevolence of the new fect 143. The prospect of immediate relief and of future protection allured into its hospitable bosom many of those unhappy persons whom the neglect of the world would have abandoned to the miseries of want, of sickness, and of old age. There is fome reason likewise to believe, that great numbers of infants, who, according to the inhuman practice of the times, had been exposed by their parents, were frequently rescued from death, baptifed, educated, and maintained by the piety of the Christians, and at the expence of the public treasure 144.

<sup>143</sup> See the apologies of Justin, Tertullian, &c. 142 The wealth and liberality of the Romans to their most distant brethren, is gratefully celebrated by Dionyfius of Corinth, ap. Euseb. 1. iv. c. 23.

rity maintains not only their own, but like- p. 61. wife the heathen poor.

<sup>144</sup> Such, at leaft, has been the laudable conduct of more modern missionaries, under the fame circumstances. Above three thoufand new-born infants are annually exposed in the streets of Pekin. See Le Comte Me-343 See Lucian in Peregrin. Julian (Epist. moires fur la Chine, and the Recherches 40.) feems mortified, that the christian cha- fur les Chinois et les Egyptiens, tom. i.

C H A P. XV. Excommunication.

II. It is the undoubted right of every fociety to exclude from its communion and benefits, fuch among its members as reject or violate those regulations which have been established by general confent. In the exercise of this power, the censures of the Christian church were chiefly directed against scandalous sinners, and particularly those who were guilty of murder, of fraud, or of incontinence: against the authors, or the followers of any heretical opinions which had been condemned by the judgment of the episcopal order; and against those unhappy persons, who, whether from choice or from compulsion, had polluted themselves after their baptism by any act of idolatrous worship. The consequences of excommunication were of a temporal as well as a spiritual nature. The Christian against whom it was pronounced, was deprived of any part in the oblations of the faithful. The ties both of religious and of private friendship were dissolved: he found himself a profane object of abhorrence to the persons whom he the most effeemed, or by whom he had been the most tenderly beloved; and as far as an expulsion from a respectable society could imprint on his character a mark of difgrace, he was shunned or suspected by the generality of mankind. The fituation of these unfortunate exiles was in itself very painful and melancholy; but, as it usually happens, their apprehensions far exceeded their sufferings. The benefits of the Christian communion were those of eternal life, nor could they erafe from their minds the awful opinion, that to those ecclefiaffical governors by whom they were condemned, the Deity had committed the keys of Hell and of Paradife. The heretics, indeed, who might be supported by the consciousness of their intentions, and by the flattering hope that they alone had discovered the true path of falvation, endeavoured to regain, in their separate affemblies, those comforts, temporal as well as spiritual, which they no longer derived from the great fociety of Christians. But almost almost all those who had reluctantly yielded to the power of vice CHAP. or idolatry were fensible of their fallen condition, and anxiously defirous of being reftored to the benefits of the Christian communion.

With regard to the treatment of these penitents two opposite opinions, the one of justice, the other of mercy, divided the primitive church. The more rigid and inflexible cafuifts refused them for ever, and without exception, the meanest place in the holy community, which they had difgraced or deferted, and leaving them to the remorfe of a guilty confcience, indulged them only with a faint ray of hope, that the contrition of their life and death might possibly be accepted by the Supreme Being 145. A milder fentiment was embraced in practice as well as in theory, by the purest and most respectable of the Christian churches 146. The gates of reconciliation and of Heaven were feldom that against the returning penitent; but a fevere and folemn form of discipline was instituted, which, while it ferved to expiate his crime, might powerfully deter the spectators from the imitation of his example. Humbled Public penby a public confession, emaciated by fasting, and clothed in fack- nance. cloth, the penitent lay profirate at the door of the affembly, imploring with tears the pardon of his offences, and foliciting the prayers of the faithful 147. If the fault was of a very heinous nature, whole years of pennance were efteemed an inadequate fatisfaction to the Divine Juffice; and it was always by flow and painful gradations that the finner, the heretic, or the apostate, was re-admitted into the bosom of the church. A sentence of perpetual excommunication was, however, referved for fome crimes of an extraordinary

<sup>145</sup> The Montanists and the Novatians, who adhered to this opinion with the greatest rigour and obstinacy, found themselves at 1ast in the number of excommunicated heretics. See the learned and copious Mosheim, Secul. ii. and iii.

<sup>146</sup> Dionysius, ap. Eufeb. iv. 23. Cyprian, de Lapfis.

<sup>147</sup> Cave's Primitive Christianity, part iii. c. 5. The admirers of antiquity regret the loss of this public pennance.

C H A P. extraordinary magnitude, and particularly for the inexcufable relapses of those penitents who had already experienced and abused the clemency of their ecclefiaftical fuperiors. According to the circumstances or the number of the guilty, the exercise of the Christian discipline was varied by the discretion of the bishops. The councils of Ancyra and Illiberis were held about the same time, the one in Galatia, the other in Spain; but their respective canons, which are still extant, feem to breathe a very different spirit. The Galatian, who after his baptism had repeatedly facrificed to idols, might obtain his pardon by a pennance of feven years, and if he had feduced others to imitate his example, only three years more were added to the term of his exile. But the unhappy Spaniard, who had committed the same offence, was deprived of the hope of reconciliation, even in the article of death; and his idolatry was placed at the head of a lift of feventeen other crimes, against which a sentence no less terrible was pronounced. Among these we may distinguish the inexpiable guilt of calumniating a bithop, a prefbyter, or even a deacon 148.

The dignity of episcopal government.

The well tempered mixture of liberality and rigour, the judicious dispensation of rewards and punishments, according to the maxims of policy as well as justice, constituted the human strength of the church. The bishops, whose paternal care extended itself to the government of both worlds, were fensible of the importance of these prerogatives, and covering their ambition with the fair pretence of the love of order, they were jealous of any rival in the exercise of a discipline so necessary to prevent the desertion of those troops which had inlisted themselves under the banner of the

148 See in Dupin, Bibliotheque Ecclefiaf-tique, tom. ii. p. 304-313. a fhort but ra-tional exposition of the canons of those coun-difference which may, in some measure, accils, which were assembled in the first mo- count for the contrast of their regulations, ments of tranquillity, after the perfecution of cross, and whose numbers every day became more considerable. CHAP. From the imperious declamations of Cyprian, we should naturally conclude, that the doctrines of excommunication and pennance formed the most effential part of religion; and that it was much less dangerous for the disciples of Christ to neglect the observance of the moral duties, than to despise the censures and authority of their bishops. Sometimes we might imagine that we were listening to the voice of Moses, when he commanded the earth to open, and to fwallow up, in confuming flames, the rebellious race which refused obedience to the priesthood of Aaron; and we should sometimes suppose that we heard a Roman conful afferting the majesty of the republic, and declaring his inflexible resolution to enforce the rigour of the laws. " If fuch irregularities are fuffered with " impunity, (it is thus that the bishop of Carthage chides the " lenity of his colleague) if fuch irregularities are fuffered, there " is an end of Episcopal Vigour 149; an end of the fublime and " divine power of governing the church, an end of Christianity " itself." Cyprian had renounced those temporal honours, which it is probable he would never have obtained; but the acquisition of fuch absolute command over the consciences and understanding of a congregation, however obscure or despised by the world, is more truly grateful to the pride of the human heart, than the possession. of the most despotic power, imposed by arms and conquest on a reluctant people.

crofs,

In the course of this important, though perhaps tedious, inquiry, Recapitula-I have attempted to display the secondary causes which so essea tion of the five cause. ciously affifted the truth of the Christian religion. If among these causes we have discovered any artificial ornaments, any accidentalcircumstances, or any mixture of error and passion, it cannot appear furprifing that mankind should be the most fensibly affected by

CHAP. fuch motives as were fuited to their imperfect nature. It was by the aid of these causes, exclusive zeal, the immediate expectation of another world, the claim of miracles, the practice of rigid virtue, and the conflitution of the primitive church, that Christianity spread itself with so much success in the Roman empire. To the first of these the Christians were indebted for their invincible valour, which disdained to capitulate with the enemy whom they were resolved to vanquish. The three fucceeding causes supplied their valour with the most formidable arms. The last of these causes united their courage, directed their arms, and gave their efforts that irrefiftible weight, which even a fmall band of well-trained and intrepid volunteers has fo often possessed over an undisciplined multitude, ignorant of the fubject, and careless of the event of the war. In the various religions of Polytheism, some wandering fanatics of Egypt and Syria, who addreffed themselves to the credulous superstition of the populace, were perhaps the only order of priests 150 that derived their whole support and credit from their facerdotal profession, and were very deeply affected by a personal concern for the fafety or prosperity of their tutelar deities. The ministers of polytheifm, both in Rome and in the provinces, were, for the most part, men of a noble birth, and of an affluent fortune, who received, as an honourable distinction, the care of a celebrated temple, or of a public facrifice, exhibited, very frequently at their own expence, the facred games 151, and with cold indifference performed the ancient rites, according to the laws and fashion of their country. As they were engaged in the ordinary occupations of life, their zeal and de-

polytheifm.

of the priefts of the Syrian goddefs, are very fire the honour; none but the most wealthy humorously described by Apuleius, in the could support the expence. See in the Patres eight book of his Metamorphofes.

and it is frequently mentioned in Ariftides, felf in the martyrdom of Polycarp. - There the inscriptions, &c. It was annual and elec- were likewise Bithyniarchs, Lyciarchs, &c.

150 The arts, the manners, and the vices tive. None but the vainest citizens could de-Apostol. tom. ii. p. 200. with how much in-152 The office of Afiarch was of this nature, difference Philip the Afiarch conducted him-

votion

votion were feldom animated by a fense of interest, or by the habits C H A P. of an ecclefiastical character. Confined to their respective temples and cities, they remained without any connexion of discipline or government; and whilst they acknowledged the supreme jurisdiction of the fenate, of the college of pontiffs, and of the emperor, those civil magistrates contented themselves with the easy task of maintaining, in peace and dignity, the general worship of mankind. We have already feen how various, how loofe, and how uncertain were the religious fentiments of Polytheists. They were abandoned, almost without control, to the natural workings of a superstitious fancy. The accidental circumstances of their life and situation determined the object as well as the degree of their devotion; and as long as their adoration was fucceffively profituted to a thousand deities, it was fearcely possible that their hearts could be susceptible of a very fincere or lively passion for any of them.

When Christianity appeared in the world, even these faint and The scentiimperfect impressions had lost much of their original power. Human cism of the Pagan world reason, which by its unaffisted strength is incapable of perceiving proved fathe mysteries of faith, had already obtained an easy triumph over the new relithe folly of Paganism; and when Tertullian or Lactantius employ their labours in exposing its falsehood and extravagance, they are obliged to transcribe the eloquence of Cicero or the wit of Lucian. The contagion of these sceptical writings had been diffused far beyond the number of their readers. The fashion of incredulity was communicated from the philosopher to the man of pleasure or business, from the noble to the plebeian, and from the master to the menial flave who waited at his table, and who eagerly liftened to the freedom of his conversation. On public occasions the philosophic part of mankind affected to treat with respect and decency the religious institutions of their country; but their secret contempt penetrated through the thin and awkward difguife, and even the people, when they discovered that their deities were rejected VOL. I. 4 H and

CHAP, and derided by those whose rank or understanding they were accustomed to reverence, were filled with doubts and apprehensions concerning the truth of those doctrines, to which they had yielded the most implicit belief. The decline of ancient prejudise exposed a very numerous portion of human kind to the danger of a painful and comfortless situation. A state of scepticism and suspence may amuse a few inquisitive minds. But the practice of superstition is so congenial to the multitude, that if they are forcibly awakened, they still regret the loss of their pleasing vision. Their love of the marvellous and fupernatural, their curiofity with regard to future events, and their strong propensity to extend their hopes and fears beyond the limits of the visible world, were the principal causes which favoured the establishment of Polytheism. So urgent on the vulgar is the necessity of believing, that the fall of any system of mythology will most probably be succeeded by the introduction of some other mode of superstition: Some deities of a more recent and fashionable cast might foon have occupied the deferted temples of Jupiter and Apollo, if, in the decifive moment, the wifdom of Providence had not interpoled a genuine revelation, fitted to inspire the most rational efteem and conviction, whilft, at the fame time, it was adorned with all that could attract the curiofity, the wonder, and the veneration of the people. In their actual disposition, as many were almost disengaged from their artificial prejudices, but equally fusceptible and desirous of a devout attachment; an object much less deserving would have been sufficient to fill the vacant place in their hearts, and to gratify the uncertain eagerness of their passions, Those who are inclined to pursue this reflection, instead of viewing with aftonishment the rapid progress of Christianity, will perhaps be furprifed that its fuccess was not still more rapid and still more univerfal.

as well as the peace and union of the Roman empire.

It has been observed, with truth as well as propriety, that the conquests of Rome prepared and facilitated those of Christianity.

In the fecond chapter of this work we have attempted to explain CHAP. in what manner the most civilized provinces of Europe, Asia, and Africa, were united under the dominion of one fovereign, and gradually connected by the most intimate ties of laws, of manners, and of language. The Jews of Palestine, who had fondly expected a temporal deliverer, gave fo cold a reception to the miracles of the divine prophet, that it was found unnecessary to publish, or at least to preserve, any Hebrew gospel 152. The authentic histories of the actions of Christ were composed in the Greek language, at a confiderable diffance from Jerusalem, and after the Gentile converts were grown extremely numerous 153. As foon as those histories were translated into the Latin tongue, they were perfectly intelligible to all the subjects of Rome, excepting only to the pealants of Syria and Egypt, for whole benefit particular versions were afterwards made. The public highways, which had been constructed for the use of the legions, opened an easy passage for the Christian missionaries from Damascus to Corinth, and from Italy to the extremity of Spain or Britain; nor did those fpiritual conquerors encounter any of the obstacles which usually retard or prevent the introduction of a foreign religion into a distant country. There is the strongest reason to believe, that before the reigns of Diocletian and Constantine, the faith of Christ had been preached in every province, and in all the great cities of the empire; but the foundation of the feveral congregations, the Historical numbers of the faithful who composed them, and their proportion progress of to the unbelieving multitude, are now buried in obscurity, or dif-

<sup>152</sup> The modern critics are not disposed to believe what the fathers almost unanimously affert, that St. Matthew composed a Hebrew gospel, of which only the Greek translation is extant. It feems, however, dangerous to ner's fair and extensive collection, vol. xv. reject their testimony.

<sup>153</sup> Under the reigns of Nero and Domi tian, and in the cities of Alexandria, Antioch, Rome, and Ephefus. See Mill. Pro'egomena ad Nov. Testament, and Dr. Lard-

C H A P. guifed by fiction and declamation. Such imperfect circumstances, however, as have reached our knowledge concerning the increase of the Christian name in Asia and Greece, in Egypt, in Italy, and in the West, we shall now proceed to relate, without neglecting the real or imaginary acquisitions which lay beyond the frontiers of the Roman empire.

in the East.

The rich provinces that extend from the Euphrates to the Ionian fea, were the principal theatre on which the apostle of the Gentiles displayed his zeal and piety. The seeds of the gospel, which he had scattered in a fertile soil, were diligently cultivated by his disciples; and it should seem that, during the two first centuries, the most considerable body of Christians was contained within those limits. Among the societies which were instituted in Syria, none were more ancient or more illustrious than those of Damascus, of Berea or Aleppo, and of Antioch. The prophetic introduction of the Apocalypse has described and immortalised the seven churches of Afia; Ephefus, Smyrna, Pergamus, Thyatira 154, Sardes, Laodicea, and Philadelphia; and their colonies were foon diffused over that populous country. In a very early period, the islands of Cyprus and Crete, the provinces of Thrace and Macedonia, gave a favourable reception to the new religion; and Christian republics were foon founded in the cities of Corinth, of Sparta, and of Athens 155. 'The antiquity of the Greek and Afiatic churches allowed a fufficient space of time for their increase and multiplication, and even the fwarms of Gnostics and other heretics serve to display the flourishing condition of the orthodox church, fince the appellation of heretics has always been applied to the less numerous.

154 The Alogians (Epiphanius de Hæref. the spirit of prophecy. See Abauzit Difcours fur l'Apocalypse.

<sup>51.)</sup> disputed the genuineness of the Apocalypfe, because the church of Thyatira was not fact, extricates himfelf from the difficulty, by ingeniously supposing, that St. John wrote in to have been one of the least flourishing.

<sup>155</sup> The epiftles of Ignatius and Dionysius yet founded. Epiphanius, who allows the (ap. Eufeb. iv. 23.) point out many churches in Afia and Greece. That of Athens feems party. To these domestic testimonies we may add the confession, CHAP. the complaints, and the apprehensions of the Gentiles themselves. From the writings of Lucian, a philosopher who had studied mankind, and who describes their manners in the most lively colours, we may learn, that under the reign of Commodus, his native country of Pontus was filled with Epicureans and Christians 156. Within fourscore years after the death of Christ 157, the humane Pliny laments the magnitude of the evil which he vainly attempted to eradicate. In his very curious epiftle to the emperor Trajan, he affirms, that the temples were almost deserted, that the sacred victims scarcely found any purchasers, and that the superstition had not only infected the civies, but had even spread itself into the villages and the open country of Pontus and Bithynia 158.

Without descending into a minute scrutiny of the expressions, or The church of the motives of those writers who either celebrate or lament the of Antiochprogrefs of Christianity in the East, it may in general be observed, that none of them have left us any grounds from whence a just estimate might be formed of the real numbers of the faithful in those provinces. One circumstance, however, has been fortunately preferved, which feems to cast a more distinct light on this obscure but interesting subject. Under the reign of Theodosius, after Christianity had enjoyed, during more than fixty years, the funshine of Imperial favour, the ancient and illustrious church of Antioch confifted of one hundred thousand persons, three thousand of whom were supported out of the public oblations 159. The splendour and dignity

<sup>155</sup> Lucian in Alexandro, c. 25. Chriftianity however must have been very unequally diffused over Pontus; fince in the middle of the third century there were no more than feventeen believers in the extensive diocese of Neo-Cæfarea. See M. de Tillemont, Memoires Ecclefiast. tom. iv. p. 675. from Basil and Gregory of Nyssa, who were themselves natives of Cappadocia.

<sup>157</sup> According to the ancients, Jefus Christ fuffered under the confulfhip of the two Gemini, in the year 29 of our prefent æra. Pliny was fent into Bithynia (according to Pagi) in the year 110.

<sup>158</sup> Plin. Epift. x. 97.

<sup>159</sup> Chrysostom. Opera, tom. vii. p. 658, 810. Edit. Savil.

CHAP. dignity of the queen of the Eaft, the acknowledged populousness of Cæsarea, Seleucia, and Alexandria, and the destruction of two hundred and fifty thousand souls in the earthquake which afflicted Antioch under the elder Justin 160, are so many convincing proofs that the whole number of its inhabitants was not less than half a million, and that the Christians, however multiplied by zeal and power, did not exceed a fifth part of that great city. How different a proportion must we adopt when we compare the persecuted with the triumphant church, the West with the East, remote villages with populous towns, and countries recently converted to the faith, with the place where the believers first received the appellation of Christians. It must not, however, be dissembled, that, in another paffage, Chryfostom, to whom we are indebted for this useful information, computes the multitude of the faithful as even fuperior to that of the Jews and Pagans 161. But the folution of this apparent difficulty is easy and obvious. The eloquent preacher draws a parallel between the civil and the ecclefiaftical conflitution of Antioch; between the lift of Christians who had acquired Heaven by baptifm, and the lift of citizens who had a right to share the public liberality. Slaves, ftrangers, and infants were comprifed in the former; they were excluded from the latter.

In Egypt.

The extensive commerce of Alexandria, and its proximity to Palestine, gave an eafy entrance to the new religion. It was at first embraced by great numbers of the Therapeutæ, or Essenians of the lake Mareotis, a Jewish sect which had abated much of its reverence for the Mosaic ceremonies. The austere life of the Essenians, their fasts and excommunications, the community of goods, the love of celibacy, their zeal for martyrdom, and the warmth though not the populousness of Antioch.

<sup>101</sup> Chrysoftom. tom. i. p. 592. I am in- 370.

<sup>160</sup> John Malela, tom. ii. p. 144. He debted for these passages, though not for my draws the same conclusion with regard to the inference, to the learned Dr. Lardner. Credibility of the Gospel History, vol. xii, p.

purity of their faith, already offered a very lively image of the CHAP. primitive discipline 162. It was in the school of Alexandria that the Christian theology appears to have assumed a regular and scientifical form; and when Hadrian vifited Egypt, he found a church composed of Jews and of Greeks, sufficiently important to attract the notice of that inquisitive prince 161. But the progress of Christianity was for a long time confined within the limits of a fingle city, which was itself a foreign colony, and till the close of the second century. the predeceffors of Demetrius were the only prelates of the Egyptian church. Three bishops were confecrated by the hands of Demetrius, and the number was increased to twenty by his successor Heraclas. 64. The body of the natives, a people diffinguished by a fullen inflexibility of temper 165, entertained the new doctrine with coldness and reluctance: and even in the time of Origen, it was rare to meet with an Egyptian who had furmounted his early prejudices in favour of the facred animals of his country 166. As foon, indeed, as Christianity ascended the throne, the zeal of those barbarians obeyed the prevailing impulsion; the cities of Egypt were filled with bishops, and the deferts of Thebais swarmed with hermits.

A perpetual stream of strangers and provincials flowed into the In-Rome capacious bosom of Rome. Whatever was strange or odious, whoever was guilty or fuspected, might hope, in the obscurity of that immense capital, to elude the vigilance of the law. In such a various 162 Basnage, Histoire des Juifs, 1. 2. c. 20, 21, 22, 23. has examined with the most critical accuracy, the curious treatife of Philo, which describes the Therapeutæ. By proving that it was composed as early as the time of Augustus, Basnage has demonstrated, in fpite of Eusebius (l. ii. c. 17.), and a crowd of modern Catholics, that the Therapeutæ were neither Christians nor monks. It still remains probable that they changed their name, preserved their manners, adopted some new articles of faith, and gradually became the fathers of the Egyptian Afcetics.

163 See a letter of Hadrian in the Augustan History, p. 245.

264 For the fuccession of Alexandrian bifhops, confult Renaudot's History, p. 24, &c. This curious fact is preferved by the patriarch Eutychius (Annal. tom. i. p. 334. Verf. Pocock), and its internal evidence would alone be a fufficient answer to all the objections which Bishop Pearson has urged in the Vindiciæ Ignatianæ.

*65 Ammian. Marcellin. xxii. 16.

166 Origen contra Celfum, l. i. p. 40.

conflux

CHAP. conflux of nations, every teacher, either of truth or of falsehood, every founder, whether of a virtuous or a criminal affociation, might eafily multiply his disciples or accomplices. The Christians of Rome, at the time of the accidental perfecution of Nero, are reprefented by Tacitus as already amounting to a very great multitude 167, and the language of that great historian is almost fimilar to the style employed by Livy, when he relates the introduction and the fuppreffion of the rites of Bacchus. After the Bacchanals had awakened the feverity of the fenate, it was likewife apprehended that a very great multitude, as it were another people, had been initiated into those abhorred mysteries. A more careful inquiry soon demonfirated, that the offenders did not exceed feven thousand; a number indeed fufficiently alarming, when confidered as the object of public justice 168. It is with the same candid allowance that we should interpret the vague expressions of Tacitus, and in a former instance of Pliny, when they exaggerate the crowds of deluded fanatics who had forfaken the established worship of the gods. The church of Rome was undoubtedly the first and most populous of the empire; and we are possessed of an authentic record which attells the flate of religion in that city about the middle of the third century, and after a peace of thirty-eight years. The clergy, at that time, confifted of a bishop, forty-six presbyters, seven deacons, as many fub-deacons, forty-two acolythes, and fifty readers, exorcifts, and porters. The number of widows, of the infirm, and of the poor, who were maintained by the oblations of the faithful, amounted to fifteen hundred 169. From reason, as well as from the analogy of Antioch, we may venture to estimate the Christians of 167 Ingens multitudo is the expression of chanalians, whose depravity is described, and Tacitus, xv. 44.

Tacitus, xv. 44.

To itus, xxvix. 13. 15, 16, 17. No hing could exceed the horror and conflerna tion of the fenate on the difcovery of the Bac toreduce the number of prefbyters to forty-four.

Rome at about fifty thousand. The populousness of that great capi- C H A P. tal cannot perhaps be exactly afcertained; but the most modest calculation will not furely reduce it lower than a million of inhabitants, of whom the Christians might constitute at the most a twentieth part 17°.

of Christianity from the same source which had diffused among provinces. them the language, the fentiments, and the manners of Rome. In this more important circumstance, Africa, as well as Gaul, was gradually fashioned to the imitation of the capital. Yet notwithflanding the many favourable occasions which might invite the Roman missionaries to visit their Latin provinces, it was late before they passed either the sea or the Alps '7'; nor can we discover in those great countries any affured traces either of faith or of persecution that afcend higher than the reign of the Antonines'72. The flow progress of the gospel in the cold climate of Gaul, was extremely different from the eagerness with which it seems to have been received on the burning fands of Africa. The African Chriftians foon formed one of the principal members of the primitive church. The practice introduced into that province, of appointing bishops to the most inconsiderable towns, and very frequently to the most obscure villages, contributed to multiply the splendour and importance of their religious focieties, which during the course of

The western provincials appeared to have derived the knowledge In Africa and of the poor, to the rest of the people, was originally fixed by Burnet (Travels into Italy, p. 168), and is approved by Moyle (vol. ii. p. 151.). They were both unacquainted with their conjecture almost into a fact.

sem. ii. p. 316. According to the Donatifts, 497. Edit. Delphin.

*70 This proportion of the prefbyters and whose affertion is confirmed by the tacit acknowledgment of Augustin, Africa was the last of the provinces which received the gospel. Tillemont, Mem. Ecclesiast. tom. i. p. 754.

172 Tum primum intra Gallias martyria the passage of Chrysostom, which converts visa. Sulp. Severus, 1. ii. With regard to Africa, see Tertullian ad Scapulam, c. 3. 52 Serius trans Alpes, religione Dei fuf- It is imagined, that the Scyllitan martyrs ceptâ. Sulpicius Severus, I. ii. These were were the first (Acta Sincera Ruinart. p. 34.). the celebrated martyrs of Lyons. See Euse- One of the adversaries of Appleius seems to bius, v. 1. Tillemont, Mem. Ecclefiast: have been a Christian. Apolog. p. 496,

C H A P. the third century were animated by the zeal of Tertullian, directed by the abilities of Cyprian, and adorned by the eloquence of Lactantius. But if, on the contrary, we turn our eyes towards Gaul, we must content ourselves with discovering, in the time of Marcus Antoninus, the feeble and united congregations of Lyons and Vienna; and even as late as the reign of Decius, we are affured, that in a few cities only, Arles, Narbonne, Thouloufe, Limoges, Clermont, Tours, and Paris, fome scattered churches were supported by the devotion of a small number of Christians 173. Silence is indeed very confistent with devotion, but as it is feldom compatible with zeal, we may perceive and lament the languid state of Christianity in those provinces which had exchanged the Celtic for the Latin tongue; fince they did not, during the three first centuries, give birth to a single ecclesiastical writer. From Gaul, which claimed a just pre-eminence of learning and authority over all the countries on this fide of the Alps, the light of the gospel was more faintly reflected on the remote provinces of Spain and Britain; and if we may credit the vehement affertions of Tertullian, they had already received the first rays of the faith, when he addressed his apology to the magistrates of the emperor Severus '74. But the obscure and imperfect origin of the western churches of Europe has been so negligently recorded, that if we would relate the time and manner of their foundation, we must supply the silence of antiquity by those legends which avarice or fuperstition long afterwards dictated to the monks in the lazy gloom of their convents 175. Of these holy romances, that of the apostle > paucorum Christianorum devotione, resurgerent. Acta Sincera, p. 130. Gregory of Tours, l. i. c. 28. Mosheim, p. 207. 449. There is fome reason to believe, that, in the beginning of the fourth century, the extenave diocefes of Liege, of Treves, and of Co-

173 Raræ in aliquibus civitatibus ecclesiæ, had been very recently founded. See Memoires de Tillemont, tom. vi. part i. p. 43.

<sup>174</sup> The date of Tertullian's Apology is fixed in a differtation of Mosheim, to the year

<sup>175</sup> In the fifteenth century, there were logne, composed a fingle bishopric, which few who had either inclination or courage to question apostle St. James can alone, by its fingular extravagance, deserve to CHAP. be mentioned. From a peaceful fisherman of the lake of Gennesareth, he was transformed into a valorous knight, who charged at the head of the Spanish chivalry in their battles against the Moors. The gravest historians have celebrated his exploits; the miraculous shrine of Compostella displayed his power; and the sword of a military order, affished by the terrors of the Inquisition, were sufficient to remove every objection of profane criticism 176.

The progress of Christianity was not confined to the Roman Beyond the empire; and according to the primitive fathers, who interpret facts Roman emby prophecy, the new religion, within a century after the death of pire. its divine author, had already visited every part of the globe. "There exists not," fays Justin Martyr, " a people, whether Greek " or Barbarian, of any other race of men, by whatfoever appella-"tion or manners they may be diffinguished, however ignorant of arts or agriculture, whether they dwell under tents, or wander " about in covered waggons, among whom prayers are not offered " up in the name of a crucified Jesus to the Father and Creator of " all things "77." But this fplendid exaggeration, which even at present it would be extremely difficult to reconcile with the real flate of mankind, can be confidered only as the rash fally of a devout but careless writer, the measure of whose belief was regulated by that of his wishes. But neither the belief, nor the wishes of the fathers, can alter the truth of history. It will still remain an undoubted fact, that the barbarians of Scythia and Germany, who afterwards fubverted the Roman monarchy, were involved in the darkness ed the monastery of Glastenbury, and whether tion of the legend of St. James by Dr. Geddes, Dionysius the Areopagite preferred the resi- Miscellanies, vol. ii. p. 221. dence of Paris to that of Athens.

formed in the ninth century. See Mariana Tertullian adv. Jud. c. 7. See Mosheim, p. (Hift. Hifpan. v. 10. 13.), who, in every 203.

question whether Joseph of Arimathea found- fense, imitates Livy, and the honest detec-

177 Justin Martyr, Dialog. cum Tryphon, 176 The stupendous metamorphosis was per- p. 341. Irenæus adv. Hæref. 1. i. c. 10.

CHAP. of paganism; and that even the conversion of Iberia, of Armenia, or of Æthiopia, was not attempted with any degree of fuccess till the fceptre was in the hands of an orthodox emperor 178. Before that time, the various accidents of war and commerce might indeed diffuse an imperfect knowledge of the gospel among the tribes of Caledonia '79, and among the borderers of the Rhine, the Danube, and the Euphrates 180. Beyond the last mentioned river, Edessa was diftinguished by a firm and early adherence to the faith 181. From Edeffa, the principles of Christianity were easily introduced into the Greek and Syrian cities which obeyed the fuccessors of Artaxerxes; but they do not appear to have made any deep impression on the minds of the Perfians, whose religious system, by the labours of a well-disciplined order of priests, had been constructed with much more art and folidity than the uncertain mythology of Greece and Rome 182.

General proportion of Christians and Pagans.

From this impartial though imperfect furvey of the progress of Christianity, it may perhaps feem probable, that the number of its profelytes has been excessively magnified by fear on the one fide, and by devotion on the other. According to the irreproachable

History of the Church. Many, though very confused circumstances, that relate to the conversion of Iberia and Armenia, may be found in Moses of Chorene, I. ii. e. 78-89.

179 According to Tertullian, the Christian faith had penetrated into parts of Britain inaccessible to the Roman arms. About a century afterwards, Offian, the fon of Fingal, is faid to have disputed, in his extreme old age, with one of the foreign missionaries, and the difpute is still extant, in verse, and in the Erse language. See Mr. Macpherfon's Differtation on the Antiquity of Offian's Poems, p. 10. 183 The Goths, who ravaged Asia in the reign of Gallienus, carried away great numbers of captives; fome of whom were Christians, and became missionaries. See Tille-

178 See the fourth century of Mosheim's mont, Memoires Ecclesiast. tom. iv. p. 44.

181 The Legend of Abgarus, fabulous as it is, affords a decifive proof, that many years before Eusebius wrote his history, the greatest part of the inhabitants of Edessa had embraced Christianity. Their rivals, the eitizens of Carrhæ, adhered, on the contrary, to the cause of Paganism, as late as the fixth cen-

182 According to Bardesanes (ap. Euseb. Præpar. Evangel.) there were some Christians in Persia before the end of the second century. In the time of Constantine (see his Epistle to Sapor, Vit. l. iv. c. 13.) they composed a flourishing church. Confult Beausobre, Hist. Critique du Manicheisme, tom. i. p. 180. and the Bibliotheca Orientalis of Assemani.

testimony

testimony of Origen 183, the proportion of the faithful was very in- C H A P. confiderable when compared with the multitude of an unbelieving world; but, as we are left without any distinct information, it is impossible to determine, and it is difficult even to conjecture, the real numbers of the primitive Christians. The most favourable calculation, however, that can be deduced from the examples of Antioch and of Rome, will not permit us to imagine that more than a twentieth part of the fubjects of the empire had enlifted themselves under the banner of the cross before the important conversion of Constantine. But their habits of faith, of zeal, and of union, seemed to multiply their numbers; and the fame causes which contributed to their future increase, served to render their actual strength more apparent and more formidable.

are diffinguished by riches, by honours, and by knowledge, the tians were body of the people is condemned to obscurity, ignorance, and mean a norant. poverty. The Christian religion, which addressed itself to the whole human race, must consequently collect a far greater number of profelytes from the lower than from the fuperior ranks of life. This innocent and natural circumstance has been improved into a very odious imputation, which feems to be lefs strenuously denied by the apologists, than it is urged by the adversaries, of the faith; that the new fect of Christians was almost entirely composed of the dregs of the populace, of peafants and mechanics, of boys and women, of beggars and flaves, the last of whom might sometimes introduce the missionaries into the rich and noble families to which they belonged. These obscure teachers (such was the charge of malice and infidelity) are as mute in public as they are loquacious and dogmatical in private. Whilst they cautiously avoid the dangerous encounter of Such is the constitution of civil society, that whilst a few persons Whether the philosophers, they mingle with the rude and illiterate crowd, and

5

CHAP. infinuate themselves into those minds, whom their age, their fex, or their education, has the best disposed to receive the impression of superstitious terrors 184.

Some exceptions with regard to learning;

This unfavourable picture, though not devoid of a faint refemblance, betrays, by its dark colouring and difforted features, the pencil of an enemy. As the humble faith of Christ diffused itself through the world, it was embraced by feveral persons who derived fome confequence from the advantages of nature or fortune. Ariftides, who prefented an eloquent apology to the emperor Hadrian, was an Athenian philosopher 185. Justin Martyr had sought divine knowledge in the schools of Zeno, of Aristotle, of Pythagoras, and of Plato, before he fortunately was accosted by the old man, or rather the angel, who turned his attention to the study of the Jewish prophets 186. Clemens of Alexandria had acquired much various reading in the Greek, and Tertullian in the Latin, language. Julius Africanus and Origen possessed a very considerable share of the learning of their times; and although the style of Cyprian is very different from that of Lactantius, we might almost discover that both those writers had been public teachers of rhetoric. Even the fludy of philosophy was at length introduced among the Christians, but it was not always productive of the most falutary effects; knowledge was as often the parent of herefy as of devotion, and the description which was designed for the followers of Artemon. may, with equal propriety, be applied to the various fects that refifted the fuccessors of the apostles. "They presume to after " the holy scriptures, to abandon the ancient rule of faith, and to " form their opinions according to the fubtile precepts of logic. " The science of the church is neglected for the study of geometry.

<sup>184</sup> Minucius Fœlix, c. 8. with Wowerus's notes. Celfus ap. Origen, 1. iii. p. 138. 142. Julian ap. Cyril, l. vi. p. 206. Edit. Spanheim. 185 Eufeb. Hift. Ecclef. iv. 3. Hieronym. Epift. 83.

<sup>185</sup> The flory is prettily told in Juffin's Dialogues. Tillemont (Mem. Ecclefiaft, tom. ii. p. 334.), who relates it after him, is fure that the old man was a difguifed angel.

- 66 and they lose fight of Heaven while they are employed in measur- C H A P.
- " ing the earth. Euclid is perpetually in their hands. Aristotle -" and Theophrastus are the objects of their admiration; and they - " express an uncommon reverence for the works of Galen. Their
- " errors are derived from the abuse of the arts and sciences of
- " the infidels, and they corrupt the simplicity of the gospel by the
- " refinements of human reason '87."

Nor can it be affirmed with truth, that the advantages of birth and with regardfortune were always separated from the profession of Christianity, fortune. Several Roman citizens were brought before the tribunal of Pliny, and he foon discovered, that a great number of persons of every order of men in Bithynia had deferted the religion of their ancestors 188. His unsuspected testimony may, in this instance, obtain more credit than the bold challenge of Tertullian, when he addresses himfelf to the fears as well as to the humanity of the proconful of Africa, by affuring him, that if he perfifts in his cruel intentions, he must decimate Carthage, and that he will find among the guilty many persons of his own rank, senators and matrons of noblest extraction, and the friends or relations of his most intimate friends 189. It appears, however, that about forty years afterwards the emperor Valerian was perfuaded of the truth of this affertion. fince in one of his referipts he evidently supposes, that senators, Roman knights, and ladies of quality, were engaged in the Chriftian feet 190. The church still continued to increase its outward folendour as it lost its internal purity; and, in the reign of Diocletian, the palace, the courts of juffice, and even the army, concealed that none, except the heretics, gave occasion fexus, etiam vocantur in periculum et vocato the complaint of Celfus (ap. Origen, 1. ii. buntur. p. 77.), that the Christians were perpetually correcting and altering their Gospels.

<sup>138</sup> Plin. Epift. x. 97. Fuerunt alii fimi- tenth part of Carthage. lis amentiæ, cives Romani - - - - - Multi

<sup>187</sup> Eusebius, v. 28. It may be hoped, enim omnis ætatis, omnis ordinis, utriusque

<sup>189</sup> Tertullian ad Scapulam. Yet even his rhetoric rifes no higher than to claim a

<sup>194</sup> Cyprian, Epift, 79.

Christianity most favourably received by the poor and fimple.

C H A P. a multitude of Christians, who endeavoured to reconcile the interests XV. of the present, with those of a future, life.

And yet these exceptions are either too few in number, or too recent in time, entirely to remove the imputation of ignorance and obscurity which has been so arrogantly cast on the first proselytes of Christianity. Instead of employing in our defence the sictions of later ages, it will be more prudent to convert the occasion of fcandal into a fubject of edification. Our ferious thoughts will fuggest to us, that the apostles themselves were chosen by providence among the fishermen of Galilee, and that the lower we deprefs the temporal condition of the first Christians, the more reason we shall find to admire their merit and success. It is incumbent on us diligently to remember, that the kingdom of Heaven was promifed to the poor in spirit, and that minds afflicted by calamity and the contempt of mankind, cheerfully listen to the divine promise of future happiness; while, on the contrary, the fortunate are satisffied with the possession of this world; and the wife abuse in doubt and dispute their vain superiority of reason and knowledge.

Rejected by fome eminent men of the first and fecond centuries. We ftand in need of such reslections to comfort us for the loss of some illustrious characters, which in our eyes might have seemed the most worthy of the heavenly present. The names of Seneca, of the elder and the younger Pliny, of Tacitus, of Plutarch, of Galen, of the flave Epictetus, and of the emperor Marcus Antoninus, adorn the age in which they flourished, and exalt the dignity of human nature. They filled with glory their respective stations, either in active or contemplative life; their excellent understandings were improved by study; Philosophy had purified their minds from the prejudices of the popular superstition; and their days were spent in the pursuit of truth and the practice of virtue. Yet all these sages (it is no less an object of surprise than of concern) overlooked or rejected the persection of the Christian system. Their language or their filence equally discover their contempt for the growing sect, which in their time had diffused itself over the Roman empire. CHAP. Those among them who condescend to mention the Christians, confider them only as obstinate and perverse enthusiasts, who exacted an implicit fubmission to their mysterious doctrines, without being able to produce a fingle argument that could engage the attention of men of fense and learning '9'.

which

It is at least doubtful whether any of these philosophers perused Their nethe apologies which the primitive Christians repeatedly published phecy in behalf of themselves and of their religion; but it is much to be lamented that fuch a cause was not defended by abler advocates. They expose, with superfluous wit and eloquence, the extravagance of Polytheism. They interest our compassion by displaying the innocence and fufferings of their injured brethren. But when they would demonstrate the divine origin of Christianity, they infift much more firongly on the predictions which announced, than on the miracles which accompanied, the appearance of the Messiah. Their favourite argument might ferve to edify a Christian or to convert a Jew, fince both the one and the other acknowledge the authority of those prophecies, and both are obliged, with devout reverence, to fearch for their fense and their accomplishment. But this mode of persuasion loses much of its weight and influence, when it is addressed to those who neither understand nor respect the Mosaic dispensation and the prophetic style 192. In the unskilful hands of Justin and of the succeeding apologists, the volume of Jewish and Christian testimonies, collects and illustrates those of Pliny the younger, of Tacitus, of Galen, of Marcus Antoninus, and perhaps of Epictetus (for it is doubtful whether that philosopher means to fpeak of the Christians). The new fect is totally unnoticed by Seneca, the elder Pliny, (1. vii. p. 327.) express themselves concernand Plutarch.

glect of pro-

192 If the famous prophecy of the Seventy 191 Dr. Lardner, in his first and second Weeks had been alleged to a Roman philosopher, would he not have replied in the words of Cicero, " Quæ tandem ista auguratio est, annorum potius quam aut mensium aut die-rum?" De Divinatione, ii. 30. Observe with what irreverence Lucian (in Alexandro, c. 13.) and his friend Celfus ap. Origen, ing the Hebrew prophets.

VOL. I. 4 K fublime

CHAP. fublime meaning of the Hebrew oracles evaporates in distant types, affected conceits, and cold allegories; and even their authenticity was rendered fuspicious to an unenlightened Gentile, by the mixture of pious forgeries, which, under the names of Orpheus, Hermes, and the Sibyls '9', were obtruded on him as of equal value with the genuine inspirations of Heaven. The adoption of fraud and forhiftry in the defence of revelation, too often reminds us of the injudicious conduct of those poets who load their invulnerable heroes with a useless weight of cumbersome and brittle armour.

and of miracles.

General filence concerning the darkness of the Passion.

But how shall we excuse the supine inattention of the Pagan and philosophic world, to those evidences which were presented by the hand of Omnipotence, not to their reason, but to their senses? During the age of Christ, of his apostles, and of their first disciples, the doctrine which they preached was confirmed by innumerable prodicies. The lame walked, the blind faw, the fick were healed, the dead were raifed, dæmons were expelled, and the laws of Nature were frequently suspended for the benefit of the church. But the fages of Greece and Rome turned afide from the awful spectacle, and purfuing the ordinary occupations of life and study, appeared unconfcious of any alterations in the moral or physical government of the world. Under the reign of Tiberius, the whole earth 194, or at least a celebrated province of the Roman empire 195, was involved in a præternatural darkness of three hours. Even this miraculous 193 The Philosophers, who derided the more ancient predictions of the Sibyls, would eafily have detected the Jewish and Christian forgeries, which have been fo triumphantly quoted by the fathers from Justin Martyr to Lactantius. When the Sibylline verses had performed their appointed talk, they, like the fystem of the millennium, were quietly laid afide. The Christian Sibyl had unluckily fixed the ruin of Rome for the year 195, A. U. C. 948.

194 The fathers, as they are drawn out in battle array by Dom Calmet (Differtations fur la Bible, tom. iii. p. 295-308.), feem to cover the whole earth with darkness, in which they are followed by most of the moderns.

195 Origen ad Matth. c. 27. and a few modern critics, Beza, Le Clerc, Lardner, &c. are defirous of confining it to the land of Judea.

event, which ought to have excited the wonder, the curiofity, and CHAP. the devotion of mankind, passed without notice in an age of science and history 196. It happened during the lifetime of Seneca and the elder Pliny, who must have experienced the immediate effects, or received the earliest intelligence, of the prodigy. Each of these philosophers, in a laborious work, has recorded all the great phenomena of Nature, earthquakes, meteors, comets, and eclipses, which his indefatigable curiofity could collect '97. Both the one and the other have omitted to mention the greatest phenomenon to which the mortal eye has been witness fince the creation of the globe. A diftinct chapter of Pliny 198 is defigned for eclipfes of an extraordinary nature and unufual duration; but he contents himself with defcribing the fingular defect of light which followed the murder of Cæfar, when, during the greatest part of a year, the orb of the sun appeared pale and without fplendour. This feafon of obfourity; which cannot furely be compared with the præternatural darkness of the Passion, had been already celebrated by most of the poets '99 and historians of that memorable age "00.

195 The celebrated paffage of Phlegon is now wifely abandoned. When Tertullian affures the Pagans, that the mention of the prodigy is found in Arcanis (not Archivis) vefiris, (fee his Apology, c. 21.) he probably appeals to the Sibylline verfes, which relate it exactly in the words of the Gofpel.

197 Seneca Quæst. Natur. i. 1. 15. vi. 1. vii. 17. Plin. Hist, Natur. l. ii.

198 Plin. Hift. Natur. ii. 30.

199 Virgil Georgic, i. 466. Tibullus, l. i. Eleg. v. ver. 75. Ovid Metamorph, xv. 782. Lucan. Pharfal. i. 540. The laft of thefe poets places this prodigy before the civil war.
200 See a public epittle of M. Antony in Joseph, Antiquit, xiv. 12. Plutarch in Cafar, p. 471. Appian, Bell. Civil. I, iv. Dion Cassus, I, xlv. p. 431. Julius Obsequens, c. 128. His little treatise is an abstract of Livy's prodigies.

CHAP. XVI.

The Conduct of the Roman Government towards the Christians, from the Reign of Nero to that of Constantine.

C H A P. XVI. Christianity perfecuted by the Roman emperors. IF we feriously consider the purity of the Christian religion, the fanctity of its moral precepts, and the innocent as well as auftere lives of the greater number of those, who during the first ages embraced the faith of the gospel, we should naturally suppose, that fo benevolent a doctrine would have been received with due reverence, even by the unbelieving world; that the learned and the polite, however they might deride the miracles, would have esteemed the virtues of the new sect; and that the magistrates, instead of persecuting, would have protected an order of men who yielded the most passive obedience to the laws, though they declined the active cares of war and government. If on the other hand we recollect the universal toleration of Polytheisin, as it was invariably maintained by the faith of the people, the incredulity of philosophers, and the policy of the Roman fenate and emperors, we are at a loss to discover what new offence the Christians had committed, what new provocation could exasperate the mild indifference of antiquity, and what new motives could urge the Roman princes, who beheld without concern a thousand forms of religion subfifting in peace under their gentle sway, to inslict a fevere punishment on any part of their subjects, who had chosen for themselves a fingular but an inoffensive mode of faith and worship.

The religious policy of the ancient world feems to have affumed a more stern and intolerant character, to oppose the progress gress of Christianity. About fourscore years after the death of CHAP. Christ, his innocent disciples were punished with death by the fentence of a proconful of the most amiable and philosophic character, and according to the laws of an emperor, diftinguished by the wisdom and justice of his general administration. The apologies which were repeatedly addressed to the successors of Trajan are filled with the most pathetic complaints, that the Christians who obeyed the dictates, and folicited the liberty, of confcience, were alone, among all the subjects of the Roman empire, excluded from the common benefits of their auspicious government. The deaths of a few eminent martyrs have been recorded with care; and from the time that Christianity was invested with the supreme power, the governors of the church have been no less diligently employed in displaying the cruelty, than in imitating the conduct, of their Pagan adversaries. To separate (if it be possible) a few authentic as well as interesting facts from an undigested mass of siction and error, and to relate, in a clear and rational manner, the causes, the extent, the duration, and the most important circumstances of the persecutions to which the first Christians were exposed, is the design of the present Chapter.

The sectaries of a persecuted religion, depressed by fear, animated Inquiry into with refentment, and perhaps heated by enthusiasm, are seldom in their moa proper temper of mind calmly to investigate, or candidly to appreciate, the motives of their enemies, which often escape the impartial and difcerning view even of those who are placed at a secure distance from the slames of persecution. A reason has been assigned for the conduct of the emperors towards the primitive Christians, which may appear the more specious and probable as it is drawn from the acknowledged genius of Polytheism. It has already been observed, that the religious concord of the world was principally supported by the implicit affent and reverence which the nations of antiquity expressed for their respective traditions and ceremonies.

C H A P. It might therefore be expected, that they would unite with indignation against any fect or people which should separate itself from the communion of mankind, and claiming the exclusive possession of divine knowledge, should disdain every form of worship except its own, as impious and idolatrous. The rights of toleration were held by mutual indulgence: they were justly forfeited by a refusal of the accustomed tribute. As the payment of this tribute was inflexibly refused by the Jews, and by them alone, the confideration of the treatment which they experienced from the Roman magiftrates, will ferve to explain how far these speculations are justified by facts, and will lead us to discover the true causes of the persecution of Christianity.

Rebellious fpirit of the Jews.

Without repeating what has been already mentioned, of the reverence of the Roman princes and governors for the temple of Jerusalem, we shall only observe, that the destruction of the temple and city was accompanied and followed by every circmstance that could exasperate the minds of the conquerors, and authorize religious perfecution by the most specious arguments of political justice and the public fafety. From the reign of Nero to that of Antoninus Pius, the Jews discovered a fierce impatience of the dominion of Rome, which repeatedly broke out in the most furious massacres and infurrections. Humanity is shocked at the recital of the horrid cruelties which they committed in the cities of Egypt, of Cyprus, and of Cyrene, where they dwelt in treacherous friendship with the unfulpecting natives'; and we are tempted to applaud the fevere retaliation which was exercised by the arms of the legions against a race of fanatics, whose dire and credulous superstition seemed to 3 In Cyrene they massacred 220,000 Greeks; his example. The victorious Jews devoured render

in Cyprus, 240,000; in Egypt, a very great the flesh, licked up the blood, and twisted multitude. Many of these unhappy victims the entrails like a girdle round their bodies. were fawed afunder, according to a prece- See Dion Caffius, 1. lxviii. p. 1145. dent to which David had given the fanction of render them the implacable enemies not only of the Roman govern- CHAP. ment, but of humankind . The enthusiasm of the Jews was supported by the opinion, that it was unlawful for them to pay taxes to an idolatrous mafter; and by the flattering promife which they derived from their ancient oracles, that a conquering Meffiah would foon arife, destined to break their fetters, and to invest the favourites of heaven with the empire of the earth. It was by announcing himself as their long-expected deliverer, and by calling on all the defeendants of Abraham to affert the hope of Ifrael, that the famous Barchochebas collected a formidable army, with which he refifted during two years the power of the emperor Hadrian 3.

Notwithstanding these repeated provocations, the resentment of Toleration of the Jewish the Roman princes expired after the victory; nor were their appre-religion. hensions continued beyond the period of war and danger. By the general indulgence of polytheifm, and by the mild temper of Antoninus Pius, the Jews were restored to their ancient privileges, and once more obtained the permission of circumcifing their children, with the easy restraint, that they should never confer on any foreign profelyte that diffinguishing mark of the Hebrew race 4. The numerous remains of that people, though they were flill excluded from the precincts of Jerusalem, were permitted to form and to maintain confiderable establishments both in Italy and in the provinces, to acquire the freedom of Rome, to enjoy municipal honours, and to obtain at the same time an exemption from the burdensome and expensive offices of fociety. The moderation or the contempt of the ratives of Josephus, we may learn from Dion .l. v. c. 11, 12, 13. for the actions of Barcho-(l. lxix. p. 1162.), that in Hadrian's war chebas, l. vii. c. 12. 580,000 Jews were cut off by the fword, befides an infinite number which perished by famine, by difeafe, and by fire.

<sup>3</sup> For the fect of the Zealots, fee Bafnage, Histoire des Juifs, l. i. c. 17. for the charac-

<sup>2</sup> Without repeating the well-known nar- .ters of the Messiah, according to the Rabbis, <sup>4</sup> It is to Modestinus, a Roman lawyer (l. vi. regular.), that we are indebted for a diffinct knowledge of the Edict of Antoninus. See Cafaubon ad Hift, August. p. 27.

CHAP. XVI.

Romans gave a legal fanction to the form of ecclefiaftical policy which was inflituted by the vanquished sect. The patriarch, who had fixed his refidence at Tiberias, was empowered to appoint his fubordinate ministers and apostles, to exercise a domestic jurisdiction, and to receive from his difperfed brethren an annual contribution 5. New fynagogues were frequently erected in the principal cities of the empire; and the fabbaths, the fasts, and the festivals, which were either commanded by the Mosaic law, or enjoined by the traditions of the Rabbis, were celebrated in the most folemn and public manner 6. Such gentle treatment infenfibly affwaged the stern temper of the Jews. Awakening from their dream of prophecy and conquest, they assumed the behaviour of peaceable and industrious fubjects. Their irreconcilable hatred of mankind, instead of flaming out in acts of blood and violence, evaporated in lefs dangerous gratifications. They embraced every opportunity of over-reaching the idolaters in trade; and they pronounced fecret and ambiguous imprecations against the haughty kingdom of Edom 7.

The Jews were a people which followed, the Christians, a fect which deferted, the religion of their fathers.

Since the Jews, who rejected with abhorrence the deities adored by their fovereign and by their fellow-fubjects, enjoyed however the free exercise of their unsocial religion; there must have existed some other cause, which exposed the disciples of Christ to those severities from which the posterity of Abraham was exempt. The difference between them is fimple and obvious; but, according to the fentiments of antiquity, it was of the highest importance. The Jews were a nation; the Christians were a feet: and if it was natural for <sup>5</sup> See Bafnage, Histoire des Juifs, 1. iii. c. 2, 3. The office of Patriarch was fup- the grandfon of Efau, conducted into Italy pressed by Theodosius the younger.

<sup>6</sup> We need only mention the purim, or deliverance of the Jews from the rage of Haman, which, till the reign of Theodofius, of Romulus. For these, or for other reasons was celebrated with infolent triumph and of equal weight, the name of Edom was apriotous intemperance. Basnage, Hist. des plied by the Jews to the Roman empire. Juifs, l. vi. c. 17. l. viii. c. 6.

<sup>7</sup> According to the false Josephus, Tsepho. the army of Æneas, king of Carthage. Another colony of Idumæans, flying from the fword of David, took refuge in the dominions every community to respect the facred institutions of their neighbours, it was incumbent on them to persevere in those of their anceftors. The voice of oracles, the precepts of philosophers, and the authority of the laws, unanimously enforced this national obligation. By their lofty claim of superior fanctity, the Jews might provoke the Polytheists to consider them as an odious and impure race. By disdaining the intercourse of other nations they might deserve their contempt. The laws of Mofes might be for the most part frivolous or abfurd; yet fince they had been received during many ages by a large fociety, his followers were justified by the example of mankind: and it was univerfally acknowledged, that they had a right to practife what it would have been criminal in them to neglect. But this principle which protected the Jewish synagogue, afforded not any favour or fecurity to the primitive church. By embracing the faith of the Gospel, the Christians incurred the supposed guilt of an unnatural and unpardonable offence. They dissolved the facred ties of custom and education, violated the religious institutions of their country, and prefumptuously despised whatever their fathers had believed as true, or had reverenced as facred. Nor was this apoftacy (if we may use the expression) merely of a partial or local kind; fince the pious deferter who withdrew himself from the temples of Egypt or Syria, would equally difdain to feek an afylum in thofe of Athens or Carthage. Every Christian rejected with contempt the fuperstitions of his family, his city, and his province. The whole body of Christians unanimously refused to hold any communion with the gods of Rome, of the empire, and of mankind. It was in vain that the oppressed believer afferted the inalienable rights of confcience and private judgment. Though his fituation might excite the pity, his arguments could never reach the understanding, either of the philosophic or of the believing part of the Pagan world. To their apprehensions, it was no less a matter of surprise, that any individuals should entertain scruples against complying with the VOL. I. established 4 L

C H A P. established mode of worship, than if they had conceived a sudden abhorrence to the manners, the drefs, or the language of their native country 8.

the people and philofo-

The furprife of the Pagans was foon fucceeded by refentment; atheim, and and the most pious of men were exposed to the unjust but dangerous imputation of impiety. Malice and prejudice concurred in representing the Christians as a society of atheists, who, by the most daring attack on the religious conflitution of the empire, had merited the feverest animadversion of the civil magistrate. They had feparated themselves (they gloried in the confession) from every mode of superstition which was received in any part of the globe by the various temper of polytheifm: but it was not altogether to evident what deity, or what form of worship, they had substituted to the gods and temples of antiquity. The pure and fublime idea which they entertained of the Supreme Being escaped the gross conception of the Pagan multitude, who were at a loss to discover a spiritual and solitary God, that was neither represented under any corporcal figure or visible fymbol, nor was adored with the accustomed pomp of libations and festivals, of altars and facrifices?. The fages of Greece and Rome, who had elevated their minds to the contemplation of the existence and attributes of the First Cause, were induced by reason or by vanity to reserve for themselves and their chosen disciples the privilege of this philosophical devotion ". They were far from admitting the prejudices of mankind as the standard

8 From the arguments of Celfus, as they vel quisille, aut ubi, Deus unicus, folitarius, destitutus? Minucius Fœlix, c. 10. 'The Pagan Interlocutor goes on to make a distinction in favour of the Jews, who had once a temple, altars, victims, &c. 10 It is difficult (fays Plato) to attain, and are reprefented and refuted by Origen (l. v. p. 247-259), we may clearly discover the distinction that was made between the Jewish people and the Christian fedt. See in the Dialogue of Minucius Fœlix (c. 5, 6.) a fair and not inelegant description of the popular fentiments, with regard to the defertion of the established worship.

<sup>9</sup> Cur nullas aras habent? templa nulla? nulla nota simulacra? - - - Unde autem, p. 275.

dangerous to publish, the knowledge of the true God. See the Theologie des Philofophes, in the Abbè d'Olivet's French translation of Tully de Natura Deorum, tom. i.

of truth, but they confidered them as flowing from the original difpolition of human nature; and they supposed that any popular mode of faith and worship which presumed to disclaim the assistance of the senses, would, in proportion as it receded from superstition, find itself incapable of restraining the wanderings of the fancy and the visions of fanaticism. The careless glance which men of wit and learning condescended to cast on the Christian revelation, served only to confirm their hasty opinion, and to persuade them, that the principle, which they might have revered, of the divine unity, was defaced by the wild enthusiasm, and annihilated by the airy speculations, of the new sectaries. The author of a celebrated dialogue, which has been attributed to Lucian, whilst he affects to treat the mysterious subject of the Trinity in a style of ridicule and contempt, betrays his own ignorance of the weakness of human reason, and of the inscrutable nature of the Divine persections."

It might appear lefs furprifing, that the founder of Christianity should not only be revered by his disciples as a sage and a prophet, but that he should be adored as a God. The Polytheists were disposed to adopt every article of faith, which seemed to offer any resemblance, however distant or imperfect, with the popular mythology; and the legends of Bacchus, of Hercules, and of Æsculapius, had, in some measure, prepared their imagination for the appearance of the Son of God under a human form 12.

&quot;The author of the Philopatris perpetually treats the Chriftians as a company of dreaming enthufiafts language, ashpros, ashprostrumers, aspectaments, aspectaments, aspectaments, aspectaments, are deared to the third heaven. In another place, Triephon, who perfonates a Chriftian, after deriding the Gods of Paganifm, proposes a mylterious oath,

Υψιμεδοίλα θεον, μεγαν, αμθέρλον, υξανιώνα, Υιον σάλεθ», πνυμα τα παίλεθε εκπορευομείου

Er en triwi, n' eg er De Trize.

Αριθμικο με διδακκος, (is the prophane answer of Critias) κὸ οξκω η αξιθμήθεν. Εκ οίδα γάρ τι λιγκις εν τεία, τεία εν !

Major, c. 70-85), the dæmon, who had gained fome imperfect knowledge of the prophecies, purpofely contrived this refemblance, which might deter, though by different means, both the people and the philosophers from embracing the faith of Christ.

CHAP. But they were aftonished that the Christians should abandon the temples of those ancient heroes, who, in the infancy of the world, had invented arts, inflituted laws, and vanquished the tyrants or monsters who infested the earth; in order to choose for the exclusive object of their religious worship, an obscure teacher, who, in a recent age, and among a barbarous people, had fallen a facrifice either to the malice of his own countrymen, or to the jealoufy of the Roman government. The Pagan multitude, referving their gratitude for temporal benefits alone, rejected the inestimable present of life and immortality, which was offered to mankind by Jesus of Nazareth. His mild constancy in the midst of cruel and voluntary fufferings, his universal benevolence, and the sublime simplicity of his actions and character, were infufficient, in the opinion of those carnal men, to compensate for the want of fame, of empire, and of fuccess; and whilst they refused to acknowledge his stupendous triumph over the powers of darkness and of the grave, they mifreprefented, or they infulted, the equivocal birth, wandering life, and ignominious death, of the divine Author of Christianity 13.

The union and affemblies of the Christians confidered as a dangerous conspiracy.

The personal guilt which every Christian had contracted, in thus preferring his private fentiment to the national religion, was aggravated in a very high degree by the number and union of the criminals. It is well known, and has been already observed, that Roman policy viewed with the utmost jealousy and distrust any affociation among its subjects; and that the privileges of private corporations, though formed for the most harmless or beneficial purposes, were beflowed with a very sparing hand '4. The religious assemblies of the 13 In the first and second books of Origen, the fon of God. Socrates, Hist. Ecclefiast.

Christians.

Celfus treats the birth and character of our Saviour with the most impious contempt. The orator Libanius praifes Porphyry and Julian for confuting the folly of a fect, which <sup>14</sup> The emperor Trajan refused to incorporate a company of 150 fire-men, for the use of the city of Nicomedia. He disliked all styled a dead man of Palestine, God, and affociations. See Plin. Epist. x. 42, 43.

Christians, who had separated themselves from the public worship, CHAP. appeared of a much less innocent nature: they were illegal in their principle, and in their confequences might become dangerous; nor were the emperors conscious that they violated the laws of justice, when, for the peace of fociety, they prohibited those secret and sometimes nocturnal meetings 15. The pious disobedience of the Christians made their conduct, or perhaps their defigns, appear in a much more ferious and criminal light; and the Roman princes, who might perhaps have fuffered themselves to be disarmed by a ready submission, deeming their honour concerned in the execution of their commands, fometimes attempted, by rigorous punishments, to subdue this independent spirit, which boldly acknowledged an authority superior to that of the magistrate. The extent and duration of this spiritual conspiracy seemed to render it every day more deserving of his animadversion. We have already seen that the active and successful zeal of the Christians had insensibly diffused them through every province and almost every city of the empire. The new converts feemed to renounce their family and country, that they might connect themselves in an indissoluble band of union with a peculiar fociety, which every where assumed a different character from the rest of mankind. Their gloomy and austere aspect, their abhorrence of the common bufiness and pleasures of life, and their frequent predictions of impending calamities 16, inspired the Pagans with the apprehension of some danger, which would arise from the new fect, the more alarming as it was the more obscure. "Whatever," fays Pliny, "may be the principle of their con-omit the exercise of public worship.

<sup>16</sup> As the prophecies of the Antichrift, ap- p. 413-

<sup>15</sup> The proconful Pliny had published a proaching conflagration, &c. provoked those general edict against unlawful meetings. The Pagans whom they did not convert, they were prudence of the Christians suspended their mentioned with caution and reserve; and the Agapæ; but it was impossible for them to Montanists were censured for disclosing too freely the dangerous fecret. See Mosheim, CHAP. "duct, their inflexible obstinacy appeared deserving of punish-" ment 17."

XVI.

Their manners calumniated.

The precautions with which the disciples of Christ performed the offices of religion were at first dictated by fear and necessity; but they were continued from choice. By imitating the awful fecrecy which reigned in the Eleusinian mysteries, the Christians had flattered themselves, that they should render their facred institutions more respectable in the eyes of the Pagan world 18. But the event, as it often happens to the operations of fubtile policy, deceived their wishes and their expectations. It was concluded, that they only concealed, what they would have blushed to disclose. Their mistaken prudence afforded an opportunity for malice to invent, and for fuspicious credulity to believe, the horrid tales which described the Christians as the most wicked of human kind, who practised in their dark recesses every abomination that a depraved fancy could fuggest, and who solicited the favour of their unknown God by the facrifice of every moral virtue. There were many who pretended to confess or to relate the ceremonies of this abhorred society. It was afferted, "that a new-born infant, entirely covered over with " flour, was prefented, like fome myflic fymbol of initiation, to the " knife of the profelyte, who unknowingly inflicted many a fecret " and mortal wound on the innocent victim of his error; that as " foon as the cruel deed was perpetrated, the fectaries drank up the " blood, greedily tore afunder the quivering members, and pledged " themselves to eternal secrecy, by a mutual consciousness of guilt. " It was as confidently affirmed, that this inhuman facrifice was " fucceeded by a fuitable entertainment, in which intemperance " ferved as a provocative to brutal lust; till, at the appointed mo-

<sup>*7</sup> Neque enim dubitabam, quodcunque 13 See Mosheim's Ecclesiastical History, effet quod faterentur, (such are the words of vol. i. p. 101, and Spanheim, Remarques sur Pliny) pervicaciam certe et inflexibilem ob- les Cesars de Julien, p. 468, &c. stinationem debere puniri.

- " ment, the lights were fuddenly extinguished, shame was banished, C H A P. XVI.
- " nature was forgotten; and, as accident might direct, the dark-
- " ness of the night was polluted by the incestuous commerce of
- " fifters and brothers, of fons and of mothers "9."

move even the flightest fuspicion from the mind of a candid adver- dent defence. fary. The Christians, with the intrepid fecurity of innocence, appeal from the voice of rumour to the equity of the magistrates. They acknowledge, that if any proof can be produced of the crimes, which calumny has imputed to them, they are worthy of the most fevere punishment. They provoke the punishment, and they challenge the proof. At the fame time they urge with equal truth and propriety, that the charge is not less devoid of probability, than it is deflitute of evidence; they ask, whether any one can feriously believe that the pure and holy precepts of the Gospel, which so frequently restrain the use of the most lawful enjoyments, should inculcate the practice of the most abominable crimes; that a large fociety should resolve to dishonour itself in the eyes of its own members; and that a great number of persons of either fex, and every age and character, infensible to the fear of death or infamy, should consent to violate those principles which nature and education had imprinted most deeply in their minds 20.

Nothing, it should feem, could weaken the force or destroy the effect of so unanswerable a justification, unless it were the injudicious conduct of the apologists themselves, who betrayed the common cause of religion, to gratify their devout hatred to the domestic ene-

But the perufal of the ancient apologies was fufficient to re- Theirimpru-

<sup>19</sup> See Jufin Martyr, Apolog. i. 35. ii. 14. Athenagoras in Legation. c. 27. Tertullian, Apolog. c. 7, 8, 9. Minucius Fælix, c. 9, 10. 30, 31. The laft of the writers relates the accufation in the most elegant and circumfantial manner. The answer of Tertullian is the boldeß and most vigorous.

<sup>20</sup> In the perfecution of Lyons, fome Gentile flaves were compelled, by the fear of tortures, to accuse their Christian maßer. The church of Lyons, writing to their brethren of Asia, treat the horrid charge with proper indignation and contempt. Euseb, Hist. Ecclef. v. 1.

XVI.

CHAP, mies of the church. It was fometimes faintly infinuated, and fometimes boldly afferted, that the fame bloody facrifices, and the fame inceftuous festivals, which were fo falfely ascribed to the orthodox believers, were in reality celebrated by the Marcionites, by the Carpocratians, and by feveral other fects of the Gnoftics, who, notwithstanding they might deviate into the paths of herefy, were still actuated by the fentiments of men, and still governed by the precepts of Christianity 21. Accusations of a similar kind were retorted upon the church by the schismatics who had departed from its communion 22, and it was confessed on all sides, that the most scandalous licentiousness of manners prevailed among great numbers of those who affected the name of Christians. A Pagan magistrate, who possessed neither leifure nor abilities to discern the almost imperceptible line which divides the orthodox faith from heretical pravity, might eafily have imagined that their mutual animofity had extorted the discovery of their common guilt. It was fortunate for the repose, or at least for the reputation, of the first Christians, that the magistrates fometimes proceeded with more temper and moderation than is usually confistent with religious zeal, and that they reported, as the impartial refult of their judicial inquiry, that the fecturies, who had deferted the established worship, appeared to them fincere in their professions, and blameless in their mannæus adv. Hæref. i. 24. Clemens Alexandrin. Stromat. L. iii. p. 438. Euseb. iv. 8. It would be tedious and difguffing to relate all that the fucceeding writers have imagined, all that Epiphanius has received, and all that Tillemont has copied. M. de Beaufobre (Hist. du Manicheisme, l. ix. c. 8, 9.) has exposed with great spirit, the difingenuous arts of Augustin and Pope Leo I.

<sup>22</sup> When Tertullian became a Montanist,

<sup>21</sup> See Justin Martyr, Apolog. i. 35. Ire- he aspersed the morals of the church which he had fo refolutely defended. " Sed majoris " est Agape, quia per hanc Adolescentes tui " cum Sororibus dormiunt, appendices scili-" cet gulæ lascivia et luxuria." De Jejuniis, c. 17. The 35th canon of the council of Illiberis provides against the scandals which too often polluted the vigils of the church, and difgraced the Christian name, in the eyes of unbelievers.

ners; however they might incur, by their abfurd and exceffive fuper- C H A P. stition, the censure of the laws 23.

XVI.

History, which undertakes to record the transactions of the past, Idea of the for the instruction of future, ages; would ill deserve that honour-the emperors able office, if the condescended to plead the cause of tyrants, or to towards the Christians. justify the maxims of perfecution. It must however be acknowledged, that the conduct of the emperors who appeared the least favourable to the primitive church, is by no means fo criminal as that of modern fovereigns, who have employed the arm of violence and terror against the religious opinions of any part of their subjects. From their reflections, or even from their own feelings, a Charles V. or a Louis XIV. might have acquired a just knowledge of the rights of conscience, of the obligation of faith, and of the innocence of error. But the princes and magistrates of ancient Rome were strangers to those principles which inspired and authorized the inflexible bbslinacy of the Christians in the cause of truth, nor could they themselves discover in their own breasts, any motive which would have prompted them to refuse a legal, and as it were a natural, submission to the facred institutions of their country. The same reason which contributes to alleviate the guilt, must have tended to abate the rigour, of their perfecutions. As they were actuated, not by the furious zeal of bigots, but by the temperate policy of legiflators, contempt must often have relaxed, and humanity must frequently have suspended the execution of those laws, which they enacted against the humble and obscure followers of Christ. From the general view of their character and motives we might naturally conclude: I. That a confiderable time elapfed before they confidered the new fectaries as an object deferving of the attention of government. II. That in the conviction of any of their subjects who

<sup>23</sup> Tertullian (Apolog. c. 2.) expatiates on with much reason, and some declamation. the fair and honourable testimony of Pliny,

C H A P. were accused of so very fingular a crime, they proceeded with caution and reluctance. III. That they were moderate in the use of punishments; and IV. That the afflicted church enjoyed many intervals of peace and tranquillity. Notwithstanding the careless indifference which the most copious and the most minute of the Pagan writers have shewn to the affairs of the Christians 2+, it may ffill be in our power to confirm each of these probable suppositions, by the evidence of authentic facts.

They negleded the Christians as a feet of Jews.

I. By the wife dispensation of Providence, a mysterious veil was cast over the infancy of the church, which, till the faith of the Christians was matured, and their numbers were multiplied, ferved to protect them not only from the malice but even from the knowledge of the pagan world. The flow and gradual abolition of the Mofaic ceremonies afforded a fafe and innocent difguife to the more early proselytes of the Gospel. As they were far the greater part of the race of Abraham, they were diffinguished by the peculiar mark of circumcifion, offered up their devotions in the Temple of Jerusalem till its final destruction, and received both the Law and the Prophets as the genuine inspirations of the Deity. The Gentile converts, who by a spiritual adoption had been associated to the hope of Israel, were likewise confounded under the garb and appearance of Jews 25, and as the Polytheists paid less regard to articles of faith than to the external worship, the new sect, which carefully concealed, or faintly announced, its future greatness and ambition, was permitted to shelter itself under the general toleration which was granted to an ancient and celebrated people in the Roman empire. It was not long, perhaps, before the Jews themselves, animated with a fiercer zeal and a more jealous faith, perceived the gradual feparation of gustan History (a part of which was composed 25 An obscure passage of Suetonius (in under the reign of Constantine), there are not Claud. c. 25.) may feem to offer a proof how fix lines which relate to the Christians; nor strangely the Jews and Christians of Rome has the diligence of Xiphilin discovered their were confounded with each other.

24 In the various compilation of the Au- name in the large history of Dion Cassius.

their Nazarene brethren from the doctrine of the synagogue; and CHAP. they would gladly have extinguished the dangerous herely in the blood of its adherents. But the decrees of heaven had already difarmed their malice; and though they might fometimes exert the licentious privilege of fedition, they no longer poffeffed the adminifiration of criminal justice; nor did they find it easy to infuse into the calm breast of a Roman magistrate the rancour of their own zeal and prejudice. The provincial governors declared themselves ready to listen to any accusation that might affect the public safety: but as foon as they were informed, that it was a question not of facts but of words, a dispute relating only to the interpretation of the Jewish laws and prophecies, they deemed it unworthy of the majesty of Rome feriously to discuss the obscure differences which might arife among a barbarous and superstitious people. The innocence of the first Christians was protected by ignorance and contempt; and the tribunal of the pagan magistrate often proved their most assured refuge against the fury of the synagogue 26. If indeed we were disposed to adopt the traditions of a too credulous antiquity, we might relate the distant peregrinations, the wonderful atchievements, and the various deaths of the twelve apostles: but a more accurate inquiry will induce us to doubt, whether any of those persons who had been witnesses to the miracles of Christ were permitted, beyond the limits of Palestine, to seal with their blood the truth of their testimony 27. From the ordinary term of human life, it may very naturally be prefumed that most of them were deceased before the discontent of the Jews broke out into that furious war, which was terminated procurator of Judea.

of Alexandria, the glory of martyrdom was See Mosheim, p. 81, and Tillemont, Meconfined to St. Peter, St. Paul, and St. James. moires Ecclefiastiques, tom. i. part iii.

<sup>26</sup> See in the xviiith and xxvth chapters of It was gradually bestowed on the rest of the the Acts of the Apostles, the behaviour of apostles, by the more recent Greeks, who Gallio, proconful of Achaia, and of Festus, prudently felected for the theatre of their preaching and fufferings, fome remote coun-27 In the time of Tertullian and Clemens try beyond the limits of the Roman empire.

 $^{
m C}$   $_{ m XVI.}^{
m H~A~P.}$  only by the ruin of Jerufalem. During a long period, from the death of Christ to that memorable rebellion, we cannot discover any traces of Roman intolerance, unless they are to be found in the fudden, the transient, but the cruel perfecution, which was exercised by Nero against the Christians of the capital, thirty-five years after the former, and only two years before the latter of those great events. The character of the philosophic historian, to whom we are principally indebted for the knowledge of this fingular tranfaction, would alone be fufficient to recommend it to our most attentive confideration.

The fire of Rome under the reign of Nero.

In the tenth year of the reign of Nero, the capital of the empire was afflicted by a fire which raged beyond the memory or example of former ages 28. The monuments of Grecian art and of Roman virtue, the trophies of the Punic and Gallic wars, the most holy temples, and the most splendid palaces, were involved in one common destruction. Of the fourteen regions or quarters into which Rome was divided, four only subfisted entire, three were levelled with the ground, and the remaining feven, which had experienced the fury of the flames, displayed a melancholy prospect of ruin and desolation. The vigilance of government appears not to have neglected any of the precautions which might alleviate the fense of so dreadful a calamity. The Imperial gardens were thrown open to the diffressed multitude, temporary buildings were erected for their accommodation, and a plentiful supply of corn and provisions was distributed at a very moderate price 29. The most generous policy feemed to have dictated the edicts which regulated the difposition of the streets and the construction of private houses; and as it usually happens, in an age of prosperity, the conflagration of Rome, in Neron. c. 38. Dion Cassius, I. Ixii. p. 1014. which would be equivalent to about fifteen Orofius, vii. 7.

<sup>24</sup> The price of wheat (probably of the

the course of a few years, produced a new city, more regular and more beautiful than the former. But all the prudence and humanity affected by Nero on this occasion were insufficient to preserve him from the popular fuspicion. Every crime might be imputed to the affaffin of his wife and mother; nor could the prince, who proflituted his person and dignity on the theatre, be deemed incapable of the most extravagant folly. The voice of rumour accused the emperor as the incendiary of his own capital; and as the most incredible stories are the best adapted to the genius of an enraged people. it was gravely reported, and firmly believed, that Nero, enjoying the calamity which he had occasioned, amused himself with singing to his lyre the destruction of ancient Troy 3°. To divert a suspicion, which the power of despotism was unable to suppress, the emperor resolved to substitute in his own place some sictitious crimi-"With this view (continues Tacitus) he inflicted the most " exquifite tortures on those men, who, under the vulgar appella-"tion of Christians, were already branded with deserved infamy. " They derived their name and origin from Christ, who in the " reign of Tiberius had fuffered death, by the fentence of the pro-" curator Pontius Pilate ". For a while, this dire fuperflition was " checked; but it again burst forth; and not only spread itself over " Judæa, the first seat of this mischievous sect, but was even intro"duced into Rome, the common afylum which receives and pro-

Cruel punishment of the Chriftians, as the incendiaries of the city.

mentioned by Tacitus with a very becoming diffrust and hesitation, whilst it is greedily transcribed by Suetonius, and solemnly confirmed by Dion.

31 This testimony is alone sufficient to expose the anachronism of the Jews, who place the birth of Christ near a century fooner (Bafnage, Histoire des Juifs, l. v. c. 14, 15.). We may learn from Josephus (Antiquitat. xviii. 3.), that the procuratorship of Pilate

30 We may observe, that the rumour is corresponded with the last ten years of Tiberius, A. D. 27-37. As to the particular time of the death of Christ, a very early tradition fixed it to the 25th of March, A. D. 29, under the confulfhip of the two Gemini (Tertullian adv. Judæos, c. 8.). This date, which is adopted by Pagi, cardinal Norris, and Le Clerc, feems, at least, as probable as the vulgar æra, which is placed (I know not from what conjectures) four years later.

CHAP. " tects, whatever is impure, whatever is atrocious. The confessions " of those who were seized, discovered a great multitude of their " accomplices, and they were all convicted, not so much for the " crime of fetting fire to the city, as for their hatred of human " kind 32. They died in torments, and their torments were embit-" tered by infult and derifion. Some were nailed on croffes; others " fewn up in the skins of wild beafts, and exposed to the fury of "dogs: others again, fmeared over with combustible materials, " were used as torches to illuminate the darkness of the night. "The gardens of Nero were deflined for the melancholy spectacle, " which was accompanied with a horse race, and honoured with "the presence of the emperor, who mingled with the populace in " the drefs and attitude of a charioteer. The guilt of the Chrif-" tians deserved indeed the most exemplary punishment, but the " public abhorrence was changed into commiferation, from the opinion that those unhappy wretches were facrificed, not so much " to the public welfare, as to the cruelty of a jealous tyrant "." Those who survey with a curious eye the revolutions of mankind, may observe, that the gardens and circus of Nero on the Vatican, which were polluted with the blood of the first Christians, have been rendered fill more famous, by the triumph and by the abuse of the persecuted religion. On the same spot 34, a temple, which far surpaffes the ancient glories of the Capitol, has been fince erected by ferred the latter fense, as the most agreeable error, which a precept of the Gospel (See Luke, xiv. 26.) had been, perhaps, the innocent occasion. My interpretation is justified by the authority of Lipfius; of the Italian, the French and the English translators of Tacitus; of Mosheim (p. 102.), of Le 32 Odio humani generis convicti. These Clerc (Historia Ecclesiast. p. 427.), of Dr. words may either fignify the hatred of man- Lardner (Testimonies, vol. i. p. 345.), and kind towards the Christians, or the hatred of of the bishop of Gloucester (Divine Legathe Christians towards mankind. I have pre- tion, vol. iii. p. 38.). But as the word convičii does not unite very happily with the to the flyle of Tacitus, and to the popular rest of the fentence, James Gronovius has preferred the reading of conjuncti, which is authorised by the valuable MS. of Florence.

33 Tacit. Annal. xv. 44.

34 Nardini Roma Antica, p. 387. natus de Româ Antiquâ, 1. iii. p. 449.

the

the Cariffian Pontiffs, who, deriving their claim of universal do- CHAP. minion from an humble fisherman of Galilee, have succeeded to the throne of the Cæsars, given laws to the barbarian conquerors of Rome, and extended their spiritual jurisdiction from the coast of the Baltic to the shores of the Pacific Ocean.

But it would be improper to dismiss this account of Nero's perfecution, till we have made fome observations, that may serve to remove the difficulties with which it is perplexed, and to throw fome light on the fubfequent history of the church.

1. The most sceptical criticism is obliged to respect the truth of Remarks on this extraordinary fact, and the integrity of this celebrated passage of Tacitus. The former is confirmed by the diligent and accurate Suetonius, who mentions the punishment which Nero inflicted on the Christians, a sect of men who had embraced a new and criminal fuperstition 35. The latter may be proved by the consent of the most ancient manuscripts; by the inimitable character of the style of Tacitus: by his reputation, which guarded his text from the interpolations of pious fraud, and by the purport of his narration, which accused the first Christians of the most atrocious crimes, without infinuating that they possessed any miraculous or even magical powersabove the rest of mankind 36. 2. Notwithstanding it is probable that Tacitus was born fome years before the fire of Rome 37, he could de-

the passage of Tacitus persecution of the Christians by <sup>35</sup> Sueton. in Nerone, c. 16. The epithet of malefica, which fome fagacious commentators have translated magical, is considered by the more rational Mosheim as only synonymous to the exitiabilis of Tacitus.

<sup>16</sup> The passage concerning Jesus Christ, which was inferted into the text of Josephus, between the time of Origen and that of Eufebius, may furnish an example of no vulgar forgery. The accomplishment of the prophecies, the virtues, miracles, and refurrection of Jesus, are distinctly related. Josephus acknowledges that he was the Mcfliah, and hesitates whether he should call him a man.

If any doubt can still remain concerning thiscelebrated paffage, the reader may examine the pointed objections of Le Fevre (Havercamp. Joseph. tom. ii. p. 267-273.), the laboured answers of Daubuz (p. 187-232.), and the mafterly reply (Bibliotheque Ancienne et Moderne, tom. vii. p. 237-288.) of an anonymous critic, whom I believe to have been the learned Abbé de Longuerue.

<sup>37</sup> See the lives of Tacitus by Lipfius and the Abbè de la Bleterie, Dictionnaire de Baylo à l'article TACITE, and Fabricius, Biblioth. Latin. tom. ii. p. 386. Edit. Erneft.

C H A P. rive only from reading and conversation the knowledge of an event which happened during his infancy. Before he gave himself to the Public, he calmly waited till his genius had attained its full maturity, and he was more than forty years of age, when a grateful regard for the memory of the virtuous Agricola, extorted from him the most early of those historical compositions which will delight and inftruct the most distant posterity. After making a trial of his strength in the life of Agricola and the description of Germany, he conceived, and at length executed, a more arduous work; the hiftory of Rome, in thirty books, from the fall of Nero to the acceffion of Nerva. The administration of Nerva introduced an age of justice and prosperity, which Tacitus had destined for the occupation of his old age 38; but when he took a nearer view of his fubject, judging, perhaps, that it was a more honourable, or a lefs invidious office, to record the vices of past tyrants, than to celebrate the virtues of a reigning monarch, he chose rather to relate, under the form of annals, the actions of the four immediate fuccefors of Augustus. To collect, to dispose, and to adorn a series of fourscore years, in an immortal work, every fentence of which is pregnant with the deepest observations and the most lively images, was an undertaking fufficient to exercise the genius of lacitus himself during the greatest part of his life. In the last years of the reign of Trajan, whilft the victorious monarch extended the power of Rome beyond its ancient limits, the historian was describing, in the second and fourth books of his annals, the tyranny of Tiberius 39; and the emperor Hadrian must have succeeded to the throne, before Tacitus, in the regular profecution of his work, could relate the fire of the capital and the cruelty of Nero towards the unfortunate Christians. At the distance of fixty years, it was the duty of the annalist to adopt the narratives of cotemporaries; but it was natural for the CHAP. philo opher to indulge himself in the description of the origin, the progress, and the character of the new fect, not so much according to the knowledge or prejudices of the age of Nero, as according to those of the time of Hadrian. 3. Tacitus very frequently trusts to the curiosity or reflection of his readers to supply those intermediate circumstances and ideas, which, in his extreme concifeness, he has thought proper to suppress. We may therefore prefume to imagine fome probable cause which could direct the cruclty of Nero against the Christians of Rome, whose obscurity, as well as innocence, should have shielded them from his indignation, and even from his notice. The Jews, who were numerous in the capital, and oppressed in their own country, were a much fitter object for the fuspicions of the emperor and of the people; nor did it feem unlikely that a vanquished nation, who already discovered their abhorrence of the Roman yoke, might have recourse to the most atrocious means of gratifying their implacable revenge. But the Jews possessed very powerful advocates in the palace, and even in the heart of the tyrant; his wife and mistress, the beautiful Poppæa, and a favourite player of the race of Abraham, who had already employed their intercession in behalf of the obnoxious people 40. In their room it was necessary to offer some other victims, and it might eafily be fuggested that although the genuine followers of Mofes were innocent of the fire of Rome, there had arisen among them a new and pernicious fect of GALILEANS, which was capable of the most horrid crimes. Under the appellation of GALILEANS, two distinctions of men were confounded, the most opposite to each other in their manners and principles; the disciples who had em-

<sup>38</sup> Principatum Divi Nervæ, et imperium fenectuti fepofui, Tacit. Hift. i. Trajani, uberiorem securioremque materiam 39 See Tacit. Annal. ii. 61. iv. 4.

<sup>4</sup>º The player's name was Aliturus, tained the pardon and release of some Jewish Through the same channel, Josephus (de Vita priests who were prisoners at Rome. fuß, c, 1,), about two years before had ob-

C H A P. braced the faith of Jesus of Nazareth 41, and the zealots who had followed the standard of Judas the Gaulonite 42. The former were the friends, the latter were the enemies, of humankind; and the only refemblance between them confifted in the same inflexible conflancy, which, in the defence of their cause, rendered them insenfible of death and tortures. The followers of Judas, who impelled their countrymen into rebeilion, were foon buried under the ruins of Jerusalem; whilst those of Jesus, known by the more celebrated name of Christians, diffused themselves over the Roman empire. How natural was it for Tacitus, in the time of Hadrian, to appropriate to the Christians, the guilt and the fufferings, which he might, with far greater truth and justice, have attributed to a feet whose odious memory was almost extinguished! 4. Whatever opinion may be entertained of this conjecture (for it is no more than a conjecture), it is evident that the effect, as well as the cause, of Nero's persecution, were confined to the walls of Rome 43; that the religious tenets of the Galilæans, or Christians, were never made a subject of punishment, or even of inquiry; and that, as the idea of their fufferings was, for a long time, connected with the idea of cruelty and injustice, the moderation of fucceeding princes inclined them to spare a fect, oppressed by a tyrant, whose rage had been usually directed against virtue and innocence.

Oppression of the lews and Christians by Domitian.

It is fomewhat remarkable, that the flames of war confumed almost at the same time the temple of Jerusalem and the Capitol of 41 The learned Dr. Lardner (Jewish and Heathen testimonies, vol. ii. p. 102, 103.) has proved that the name of Galileans, was a very ancient, and perhaps the primitive, appellation of the Christians.

his most desperate followers. When the bat- toire d'Espagne, tom. i. p. 192.

tering ram had made a breach, they turned their fwords against their wives, their children, and at length against their own breasts. They died to the last man.

43 See Dodwell. paucitat. Mart. 1. xiii. 42 Joseph. Antiquitat. xviii. 1, 2. Tille- The Spanish Inscription in Gruter, p. 238, mont, Ruine des Juifs, p. 742. The fons of No. 9, is a manifest and acknowledged for-Judas were crucified in the time of Claudius. gery, contrived by that noted impostor Cyria-His grandfon Eleazar, after Jerufalem was cus of Ancona to flatter the pride and prejutaken, defended a strong fortress with 960 of dices of the Spaniards. See Ferreras, His-

Rome

Rome 44; and it appears no less singular, that the tribute which de- C H A P. votion had defined to the former, should have been converted by the power of an infulting victor to reftore and adorn the splendour of the latter 45. The emperors levied a general capitation tax on the Jewish people; and although the sum affessed on the head of each individual was inconfiderable, the use for which it was defigned, and the feverity with which it was exacted, were confidered as an intolerable grievance 46. Since the officers of the revenue extended their unjust claim to many perfons who were strangers to the blood or religion of the Jews, it was impossible that the Christians, who had fo often sheltered themselves under the shade of the synagogue, should now escape this rapacious persecution. Anxious as they were to avoid the flightest infection of idolatry, their conscience forbade them to contribute to the honour of that dæmon who had affumed the character of the Capitoline Jupiter. As a very numerous though declining party among the Christians still adhered to the law of Moses, their efforts to dissemble their Jewish origin were detected by the decifive test of circumcision 47: nor were the Roman magifirates at leifure to inquire into the difference of their religious tenets. Among the Christians who were brought before the tribunal of the emperor, or, as it feems more probable, before that of the procurator of Judæa, two persons are said to have appeared, di-

44 The Capitol was burnt during the civil war between Vitellius and Vefpafian, the 19th of December, A. D. 69. On the 10th of August, A. D. 70, the temple of Jerusalem was defroyed by the hands of the Jews themfelves, rather than by those of the Romans.

45 The new Capitol was dedicated by Domitian. Sucton. in Domitian, c. 5. Plutarch in Poplicola, tom.i.p. 230. Edit. Bryan. The gilding alone coft 12,000 talents (above two millions and a half). It was the opinion of Martial (l. ix. Epigram 3.), that if the emperor had called in his debts, Jupiter himfelf, even though he had made a general aution of Olympus, would have been unable to pay two shillings in the pound.

46 With regard to the tribute, fee Dion Caffus, I. Ixvi. p. 1082, with Reimarus's notes. Spanheim, de Ufü Numifmatum, tom. ii. p. 571, and Bafnage, Hilt. des Juïfs, I. vii. c. 2.

47 Suetonius (in Domitian, c. 12.) had feen an old man of ninety publickly examined before the procurator's tribunal. This is what Martial calls, Mentula tributis dannata.

CHAP. stinguished by their extraction, which was more truly noble than that of the greatest monarchs. These were the grandsons of St. Iude the apostle, who himself was the brother of Jesus Christ 48. Their natural pretentions to the throne of David, might perhaps attract the respect of the people, and excite the jealousy of the governor; but the meanness of their garb, and the simplicity of their answers, foon convinced him that they were neither defirous nor capable of diffurbing the peace of the Roman empire. They frankly confessed their royal origin, and their near relation to the Meffiah; but they disclaimed any temporal views, and professed that his kingdom, which they devoutly expected, was purely of a spiritual and angelic nature. When they were examined concerning their fortune and occupation, they shewed their hands hardened with daily labour, and declared that they derived their whole subfishence from the cultivation of a farm near the village of Cocaba, of the extent of about twenty-four English acres 49, and of the value of nine thousand drachms, or three hundred pounds sterling. The grandfons of St. Jude were difmiffed with compassion and contempt 5°.

Execution of Clemens the conful.

But although the obscurity of the house of David might protect them from the fuspicions of a tyrant, the present greatness of his own family alarmed the pufillanimous temper of Domitian, which could only be appealed by the blood of those Romans whom he in the most obvious sense, and it was sup- lemont, Mem. Ecclesiast. tom. i. part iii. and pofed, that the brothers of Jesus were the lawful iffue of Joseph and of Mary. A devout re- 1. ii. c. 2. fpect for the virginity of the mother of God, orthodox Greeks, the expedient of bestowing a fecond wife on Joseph. The Latins (from the time of Jerome) improved on that hint, afferted the perpetual celibacy of Joseph, and justified by many fimilar examples the new interpretation that Jude, as well as Simon and James, who are styled the brothers of Jesus from Hegesippus.

48 This appellation was at first understood Christ, were only his first cousins. See Til-Beaufobre, Hist. Critique du Manicheisme, 49 Thirty-nine πλιθρα, fquares of an hunfuggested to the Gnostics, and afterwards to the dred feet each, which if strictly computed would fearcely amount to nine acres. But the probability of circumstances, the practice of other Greek writers, and the authority of M. de Valois, incline me to believe that the mhelps is used to express the Roman jugerum. 50 Eusebius, iii. 20. The story is taken either feared, or hated, or esteemed. Of the two sons of his uncle CHAP. Flavius Sabinus ", the elder was foon convicted of treasonable intentions, and the younger, who bore the name of Flavius Clemens, was indebted for his fafety to his want of courage and ability 52, The emperor, for a long time, diffinguished fo harmless a kinsman by his favour and protection, bestowed on him his own niece Domitilla, adopted the children of that marriage to the hope of the fuccession, and invested their father with the honours of the confulfhip. But he had fearcely finished the term of his annual magiftracy, when on a flight pretence he was condemned and executed; Domitilla was banished to a desolate island on the coast of Campania 53; and fentences either of death or of confiscation were pronounced against a great number of persons who were involved in the fame accufation. The guilt imputed to their charge was that of Atheism and Jewish manners 54; a singular association of ideas, which cannot with any propriety be applied except to the Christians, as they were obscurely and imperfectly viewed by the magistrates and by the writers of that period. On the strength of fo probable an interpretation, and too eagerly admitting the fufpicions of a tyrant as an evidence of their honourable crime, the church has placed both Clemens and Domitilla among its first martyrs, and has branded the cruelty of Domitian with the name of the fecond perfecution. But this perfecution (if it deferves that epithet) was of no long duration. A few months after the death of Clemens, elder brother, and till the accession of Vefpafian, had been confidered as the principal fupport of the Flavian family.

either

Flavium Clementem patruelem suum astiques, tom. ii. p. 224. contemtissima inertia . . . ex tenuissima fuspicione interemit. Sueton, in Domitian, c. 15.

banishes her to that of Pontia, which was not him as a contemporary writer.

51 See the death and character of Sabinus in far distant from the other. That difference, Tacitus (Hist. iii. 74, 75.). Sabinus was the and a mistake either of Eusebius, or of his transcribers, have given occasion to suppose two Domitillas, the wife and the niece of Clemens. See Tillemont Memoires Ecclefi-

54 Dion, I. Ixvii. p. 1112. If the Bruttius Præfens, from whom it is probable that he 53 The isle of Pandataria, according to collected this account, was the correspondent Dion. Bruttius Præsens (apud Euseb. iii. 18.) of Pliny (Epistol. vii. 3.), we may consider

CHAP. and the banishment of Domitilla, Stephen, a freedman belonging to the latter, who had enjoyed the favour, but who had not furely embraced the faith, of his miftrefs, affaffinated the emperor in his palace 55. The memory of Domitian was condemned by the fenate; his acts were rescinded; his exiles recalled; and under the gentle administration of Nerva, while the innocent were restored to their rank and fortunes, even the most guilty either obtained pardon or escaped punishment 56.

Ignorance of Pliny concerning the Christians.

II. About ten years afterwards, under the reign of Trajan, the younger Pliny was intrusted by his friend and master with the government of Bithynia and Pontus. He foon found himfelf at a loss to determine by what rule of justice or of law he should direct his conduct in the execution of an office the most repugnant to his humanity. Pliny had never affifted at any judicial proceedings against the Christians, with whose name alone he scems to be acquainted; and he was totally uninformed with regard to the nature of their guilt, the method of their conviction, and the degree of their punishment. In this perplexity he had recourse to his usual expedient, of fubmitting to the wifdom of Trajan an impartial, and in some respects, a favourable, account of the new superstition, requefting the emperor, that he would condescend to resolve his doubts, and to instruct his ignorance 57. The life of Pliny had been employed in the acquifition of learning, and in the bufiness of the world. Since the age of nineteen he had pleaded with diffinction in the tribunals of Rome 58, filled a place in the fenate, had 56 Dion. l. lxviii. p. 1118. Plin. Epiftol.

58 Sueton, in Domit, c. 17. Philostratus Lardner's suspicions (see Jewish and Heathen Testimonies, vol. ii. p. 46.) I am unable to difcover any bigotry in his language or pro-in Vit. Apollon. 1. viii.

<sup>57</sup> Plin. Epistol. x. 97. The learned Mofheim expresses himself (p. 147. 232.) with the highest approbation of Pliny's moderate and candid temper. Notwithstanding Dr.

<sup>58</sup> Plin. Epistol. v. 8. He pleaded his first cause, A. D. 81; the year after the famous eruptions of Mount Vesuvius, in which his uncle loft his life.

been invested with the honours of the consulfhip, and had formed CHAP. very numerous connexions with every order of men, both in Italy and in the provinces. From his ignorance therefore we may derive fome useful information. We may affure ourselves, that when he accepted the government of Bithynia, there were no general laws or decrees of the senate in force against the Christians; that neither Trajan nor any of his virtuous predecessors, whose edicts were received into the civil and criminal jurisprudence, had publickly declared their intentions concerning the new fect; and that whatever proceedings had been carried on against the Christians, there were none of fufficient weight and authority to establish a precedent. for the conduct of a Roman magistrate.

The answer of Trajan, to which the Christians of the succeeding age have frequently appealed, discovers as much regard for justice establish a and humanity as could be reconciled with his miftaken notions proceeding of religious policy 59. Instead of displaying the implacable zeal of an inquisitor, anxious to discover the most minute particles of herefy, and exulting in the number of his victims, the emperor expresses much more folicitude to protect the security of the innocent, than to prevent the escape of the guilty. He acknowledges the difficulty of fixing any general plan; but he lays down two falutary rules, which often afforded relief and support to the diffressed Christians. Though he directs the magistrates to punish fuch persons as are legally convicted, he prohibits them, with a very humane inconfiftency, from making any inquiries concerning the supposed criminals. Nor was the magistrate allowed to proceed on every kind of information. Anonymous charges the emperor rejects, as too repugnant to the equity of his government :

Trajan and his fucceffors legal mode of against them.

<sup>59</sup> Plin. Epistol. x. 98. Tertullian (Apo-tullian, in another part of his apologists, exlog. c. 5.) confiders this refeript as a relaxa- poses the inconfishency of prohibiting inquifion of the abeient penal laws, " quas Tra- ries, and enjoining punishments, janus ex parte frustratus est:" and yet Ter-and he strictly requires, for the conviction of those to whom the guilt of Chistianity is imputed, the positive evidence of a fair and open accuser. It is likewise probable, that the persons who assumed fo invidious an office, were obliged to declare the grounds of their suspicions, to specify (both in respect to time and place) the secret assemblies, which their Christian adversary had frequented, and to disclose a great number of circumstances, which were concealed with the most vigilant jealousy from the eye of the profane. If they fucceeded in their profecution, they were exposed to the refentment of a confiderable and active party, to the censure of the more liberal portion of mankind, and to the ignominy which, in every age and country, has attended the character of an informer. If, on the contrary, they failed in their proofs, they incurred the fevere and perhaps capital penalty, which, according to a law published by the emperor Hadrian, was inflicted on those who falsely attributed to their fellow-citizens the crime of Christianity. The violence of personal or superstitious animosity might sometimes prevail over the most natural apprehensions of difgrace and danger; but it cannot furely be imagined, that accufations of fo unpromifing an appearance were either lightly or frequently undertaken by the Pagan subjects of the Roman empire 60.

Popular clamours.

The expedient which was employed to elude the prudence of the laws, affords a fufficient proof how effectually they disappointed the mischievous designs of private malice or superstitious In a large and tumultuous affembly the restraints of fear and shame, so forcible on the minds of individuals, are deprived of the greatest part of their influence. The pious Christian, as he was defirous to obtain or to escape the glory of martyrdom, 60 Eusebius (Hist. Ecclesiast. 1. iv. c. 9.) authenticity of which is not so universally likewise (c. 13.) given us one still more fa-vourable under the name of Antoninus; the accusations of christians.

expected, has preferved the edict of Hadrian. He has allowed. The fecond apology of Justin con-

and

expected, either with impatience or with terror, the flated returns CHAP. of the public games and festivals. On those occasions, the inhabitants of the great cities of the empire were collected in the circus or the theatre, where every circumstance of the place, as well as of the ceremony, contributed to kindle their devotion, and to extinguish their humanity. Whilst the numerous spectators, crowned with garlands, perfumed with incense, purified with the blood of victims, and furrounded with the altars and statues of their tutelar deities, refigned themselves to the enjoyment of pleasures, which they confidered as an effential part of their religious worship; they recollected that the Christians alone abhorred the gods of mankind, and by their abfence and melancholy on these solemn festivals, seemed to insult or to lament the public felicity. If the empire had been afflicted by any recent calamity, by a plague, a famine, or an unsuccessful war; if the Tiber had, or if the Nile had not, rifen beyond its banks; if the earth had shaken, or if the temperate order of the feafons had been interrupted, the fuperstitious Pagans were convinced, that the crimes and the impiety of the Christians, who were spared by the excessive lenity of the government, had at length provoked the Divine Justice. It was not among a licentious and exasperated populace, that the forms of legal proceedings could be observed; it was not in an amphitheatre flained with the blood of wild beafts and gladiators, that the voice of compassion could be heard. The impatient clamours of the multitude denounced the Christians as the enemies of gods and men, doomed them to the feverest tortures, and venturing to accuse by name fome of the most distinguished of the new sectaries, required with irrefiftible vehemence that they should be instantly apprehended and cast to the lions 61. The provincial governors

<sup>61</sup> See Tertullian (Apolog. c. 40.). The lively picture of these tumults, which were acts of the martyrdom of Polycarp, exhibit a usually fomented by the malice of the Jews.

CHAP. and magistrates who presided in the public spectacles were usually inclined to gratify the inclinations, and to appeale the rage, of the people, by the facrifice of a few obnoxious victims. But the wisdom of the emperors protected the church from the danger of these tumultuous clamours and irregular accufations, which they juftly cenfured as repugnant both to the firmness and to the equity of their administration. The edicts of Hadrian and of Antoninus Pius expressly declared, that the voice of the multitude should never be admitted as legal evidence to convict or to punish those unfortunate persons who had embraced the enthusiasm of the Christians 62.

Trials of the Christians.

III. Punishment was not the inevitable consequence of conviction, and the Christians, whose guilt was the most clearly proved by the testimony of witnesses, or even by their voluntary confession, fill retained in their own power the alternative of life or death. It was not fo much the past offence, as the actual resistance, which excited the indignation of the magistrate. He was perfuaded that he offered them an eafy pardon, fince if they confented to cast a few grains of incense upon the altar, they were dismissed from the tribunal in fafety and with applause. It was esteemed the duty of a humane judge to endeavour to reclaim, rather than to punish, those deluded enthusiasts. Varying his tone according to the age, the fex, or the fituation of the prifoners, he frequently condescended to set before their eyes every circumstance which could render life more pleafing, or death more terrible; and to folicit, nay to intreat, them, that they would shew some compassion to themselves, to their families, and to their friends 63. If threats and perfuasions proved ineffectual, he had often recourse to violence; the scourge and the rack were called in to supply the deficiency of argument, and every art of cruelty was employed to fubdue fuch inflexible, and as it CHAP. appeared to the Pagans, fuch criminal, obstinacy. The ancient apologists of Christianity have censured, with equal truth and feverity, the irregular conduct of their perfecutors, who, contrary to every principle of judicial proceeding, admitted the use of torture, in order to obtain, not a confession, but a denial, of the crime which was the object of their inquiry 64. The monks of fucceeding ages. who, in their peaceful folitudes, entertained themselves with diversifying the deaths and sufferings of the primitive martyrs, have frequently invented torments of a much more refined and ingenious nature. In particular, it has pleafed them to suppose, that the zeal of the Roman magistrates, disdaining every consideration of moral virtue or public decency, endeavoured to feduce those whom they were unable to vanquish, and that by their orders the most brutal violence was offered to those whom they found it impossible to seduce. It is related, that pious females, who were prepared to despise death. were fometimes condemned to a more fevere trial, and called upon to determine whether they fet a higher value on their religion or on their chaffity. The youths to whose licentious embraces they were abandoned, received a folemn exhortation from the judge, to exert their most strenuous efforts to maintain the honour of Venus against the impious virgin who refused to burn incense on her altars. Their violence however was commonly disappointed, and the seasonable interpolition of some miraculous power preserved the chaste spoules of Christ from the dishonour even of an involuntary defeat. We should not indeed neglect to remark, that the more ancient as well as authentic memorials of the church are feldom polluted with thefe extravagant and indecent fictions 65.

<sup>62</sup> These regulations are inserted in the 63 See the rescript of Trajan, and the conabove-mentioned edicts of Hadrian and Pius, duct of Pliny. The most authentic acts of See the apology of Melito (apud Eufeb. 1. iv. the martyrs abound in thefe exhortations. £. 26.).

The

<sup>64</sup> In particular, fee Tertullian, (Apol. gifts had been a lawyer, and the other a rhec. 2, 3, ) and Lactantius (Infittut. Divin. v. torician.

<sup>9.).</sup> Their reasonings are almost the same;  $^{65}$  See two inflances of this kind of torture but we may discover, that one of these apole in the Atla Sincera Martyrum, published by  $^{4}$  O  $_{2}$

C H A P. XVI. Humanity of the Roman magistrates.

The total difregard of truth and probability in the representation of these primitive martyrdoms was occasioned by a very natural mistake. The ecclesiastical writers of the fourth or fifth centuries ascribed to the magistrates of Rome the same degree of implacable and unrelenting zeal which filled their own breafts against the heretics or the idolaters of their own times. It is not improbable that fome of those persons who were raised to the dignities of the empire, might have imbibed the prejudices of the populace, and that the cruel disposition of others might occasionally be stimulated by motives of avarice or of personal resentment 66. But it is certain, and we may appeal to the grateful confessions of the first Christians, that the greatest part of those magistrates who exercised in the provinces the authority of the emperor, or of the fenate, and to whose hands alone the jurisdiction of life and death was intrusted, behaved like men of polished manners and liberal educations, who respected the rules of justice, and who were converfant with the precepts of philosophy. They frequently declined the odious task of persecution, dismissed the charge with contempt, or fuggefted to the accused Christian some legal evasion, by which he might elude the feverity of the laws 67. Whenever they were invested with a discretionary power 68, they used it much less for the oppression, than for the relief and benefit, of the afflicted church-They were far from condemning all the Christians who were accufed before their tribunal, and very far from punishing with death

Ruinart, p. 160. 399. Jerome, in his Legend of Paul the Hermit, tells a firange flory of a young man, who was chained naked on a bed of flowers, and affaulted by a beautiful and wanton courtezan. He quelled the rifing temptation by biting off his tongue.

66 The convertion of his wife provoked Claudius Herminianus, governor of Cappadocia, to treat the Christians with uncommon feverity. Tertullian ad Scapulam, c. 3. 67 Tertullian, in his epifile to the governor of Africa, mentions feveral remarkable inftances of lenity and forbearance, which had happened within his knowledge.

6: Neque enim in univerfum aliquid quod quafi certam formam habeat, conflitui poreft: an expression of Trajan, which gave a very great latitude to the governors of provinces.

all those who were convicted of an obstinate adherence to the new CHAP. fuperstition. Contenting themselves, for the most part, with the milder chastisements of imprisonment, exile, or slavery in the mines 69, they left the unhappy victims of their justice some reason to hope, that a profperous event, the accession, the marriage, or the triumph of an emperor, might speedily restore them by a general pardon to their former state. The martyrs, devoted to immediate Inconsiderexecution by the Roman magistrates, appear to have been selected able number of martyrs. from the most opposite extremes. They were either bishops and presbyters, the persons the most distinguished among the Christians by their rank and influence, and whose example might strike terror into the whole fect 70; or elfe they were the meanest and most abject among them, particularly those of the fervile condition whose lives were esteemed of little value, and whose sufferings were viewed by the ancients with too careless an indifference 71. The learned Origen who, from his experience as well as reading, was intimately acquainted with the history of the Christians, declares, in the most express terms, that the number of martyrs was very inconsiderable 72. His authority would alone be fufficient to annihilate that formidable army of martyrs, whose relics, drawn for the most part from the catacombs of Rome, have replenished so many churches 73, and whofe

69 In Metalla damnamur, in infulas relegemur. Tertullian. Apolog. c. 12. The mines of Numidia contained nine bishops, with a proportionable number of their clergy and people, to whom Cyprian addressed a pious epistle of praise and comfort. See Cyprian. Epistol. 76, 77.

7º Though we cannot receive with entire confidence, either the epiftles, or the acts, of Ignatius (they may be found in the 2d volume of the Apostolic Fathers), yet we may quote that bishop of Antioch as one of these exemplary martyrs. He was sent in chains to Rome as a public spectacle - and when he arrived at Troas, he received the pleafing intelligence, that the perfecution of Antioch was already at an end.

71 Among the martyrs of Lyons (Euseb. I. v. c. 1.), the flave Blandina was diftinguished by more exquisite tortures. Of the five martyrs fo much celebrated in the acts of Felicitas and Perpetua, two were of a fervile, and two others of a very mean, condition.

72 Origen advers. Celsum, 1. iii. p. 116. His words deferve to be transcribed. "Oh-

73 If we recollect that all the Plebeians of Rome were not Christians, and that all the Christians were not faints and martyrs, we

C H A P. whose marvellous attchievements have been the subject of so many volumes of Holy Romance 74. But the general affertion of Origen may be explained and confirmed by the particular testimony of his friend Dionysius, who in the immense city of Alexandria, and under the rigorous persecution of Decius, reckons only ten men and feven women who fuffered for the profession of the Christian name 75.

Example of Cyprian, bishop of Carthage.

During the same period of persecution, the zealous, the eloquent, the ambitious Cyprian governed the church, not only of Carthage, but even of Africa. He possessed every quality which could engage the reverence of the faithful, or provoke the fuspicions and refentment of the Pagan magistrates. His character as well as his station feemed to mark out that holy prelate as the most distinguished object of envy and of danger 76. The experience, however, of the life of Cyprian, is fufficient to prove, that our fancy has exaggerated the perilous fituation of a Christian bishop; and that the dangers to which may judge with how much fafety religious honours can be ascribed to bones or urns, indifcriminately taken from the public burialplace. After ten centuries of a very free and open trade, some suspicions have arisen among the more learned catholics. They now require, as a proof of fanctity and martyrdom, the letters BM, a viol full of red liquor, fupposed to be blood, or the figure of a palm-tree. But the two former figns are of little weight, and with regard to the laft, it is observed by the critics, 1. That the figure, as it is called, of a palm, is perhaps a cypress, and perhaps only a stop, the slourish of a comma, used in the monumental inscriptions. 2. That the palm was the fymbol of victory among the Pagans. 3. That among the Christians it ferved as the emblem, not only of martyrdom, but in general of a joyful refurrection. See the epiftle of P. Mabillon, on the worship of unknown faints, and Muratori fopra le Antichità Italiane, Differtat. lviii.

74 As a specimen of these legends, we may be fatisfied with 10,000 Christian foldiers crucified in one day, either by Trajan or Hadrian, on mount Ararat. See Baronius ad Martyrologium Romanum. Tillemont, Mem. Ecclesiast. tom. ii. part ii. p. 438. and Geddes's Mifcellanies, vol. ii. p. 203. The abbreviation of MIL. which may fignify either foldiers or thousands, is faid to have occasioned fome extraordinary mistakes.

75 Dionysius ap. Euseb. l. vi. c. 41. One of the feventeen was likewife accufed of robbery.

"6 The letters of Cyprian exhibit a very curious and original picture, both of the man and of the times. See likewife the two lives of Cyprian, composed with equal accuracy, though with very different views; the one by Le Clerc (Bibliotheque Univerfelle, tom. xii. p. 208 - 378.), the other by Tillemont, Memoires Ecclefiaftiques, tom. iv. part i. p. 76-459.

he

he was exposed were less imminent than those which temporal am- C H A P. bition is always prepared to encounter in the pursuit of honours. Four Roman emperors, with their families, their favourites, and their adherents, perished by the sword in the space of ten years, during which, the bishop of Carthage guided by his authority and eloquence the counfels of the African church. It was only in the third year of his administration, that he had reason, during a few months, to apprehend the fevere edicts of Decius, the vigilance His danger of the magistrate, and the clamours of the multitude, who loudly demanded, that Cyprian, the leader of the Christians, should be thrown to the lions. Prudence fuggested the necessity of a temporary retreat, and the voice of prudence was obeyed. He withdrew himfelf into an obscure solitude, from whence he could maintain a conftant correspondence with the clergy and people of Carthage; and concealing himself till the tempest was past, he preserved his life without relinquishing either his power or his reputation. His extreme caution did not however escape the censure of the more rigid Christians who lamented, or the reproaches of his personal enemies who insulted, a conduct which they confidered as a pufillanimous and criminal defertion of the most facred duty 77. The propriety of referving himself for the future exigencies of the church, the example of feveral holy bishops 78, and the divine admonitions which, as he declares himfelf, he frequently received in visions and extasies, were the reasons alleged in his juffification 79. But his best apology may be found in the cheerful resolution, with which, about eight years afterwards, he fuffered death in the cause of religion. The authentic history the greatest care and diligence to justify his part in p. 685. master against the general censure.

<sup>2</sup> In particular those of Dionysius of Alex- Pontius.

<sup>27</sup> See the polite but severe epistle of the andria, and Gregory Thaumaturgus of Neoclergy of Rome, to the bishop of Carthage Casfarca. See Euseb. Hist. Ecclesiast, 1. vi. (Cyprian Epift. 8, 9.). Pontius labours with c. 40. and Memoires de Tillemont, tom. iv.

<sup>79</sup> See Cyprian, Epist. 16, and his life by

XVI.

CHAP. of his martyrdom has been recorded with unufual candour and impartiality. A short abstract therefore of its most important circumstances will convey the clearest information of the spirit, and of the forms, of the Roman persecutions 80.

A. D. 257. His banishment.

When Valerian was conful for the third, and Gallienus for the fourth, time: Paternus, proconful of Africa, fummoned Cyprian to appear in his private council-chamber. He there acquainted him with the Imperial mandate which he had just received 81, that those who had abandoned the Roman religion should immediately return to the practice of the ceremonies of their ancestors. Cyprian replied without hesitation, that he was a Christian and a bishop, devoted to the worship of the true and only Deity, to whom he offered up his daily supplications for the fafety and prosperity of the two emperors, his lawful fovereigns. With modest confidence he pleaded the privilege of a citizen, in refusing to give any answer to some invidious and indeed illegal questions which the proconful had proposed. A fentence of banishment was pronounced as the penalty of Cyprian's disobedience; and he was conducted without delay to Curubis, a free and maritime city of Zeugitania, in a pleasant situation, a fertile territory, and at the distance of about forty miles from Carthage 82.

80 We have an original life of Cyprian by the deacon Pontius, the companion of his exile, and the spectator of his death; and we likewife possess the ancient proconfular acts of his martyrdom. These two relations are confishent with each other, and with probability; and what is fomewhat remarkable, they are both unfullied by any miraculous cir-

81 It should feem that these were circular orders, fent at the same time to all the governors. Dionyfius (ap. Eufeb. 1. vii. c. 11.) relates the history of his own banishment from Alexandria, almost in the fame manner. But as he escaped and furvived the perfecution, we must account him either more or less fortunate than Cyprian.

82 See Plin. Hift. Natur. v. 3. Cellarius, Geograph. Antiq. part iii. p. 96. Shaw's Travels, p. 90.; and for the adjacent country (which is terminated by Cape Bona, or the promontory of Mercury) l'Afrique de Marmol. tom. ii. p. 474. There are the remains of an aqueduct, near Curubis, or Curbis, at prefent altered into Gurbes; and Dr. Shaw read an infcription, which flyles that city, Colonia Fulvia. The deacon Pontius (in Vit. Cyprian. c. 12.) calls it " Apricum et competentem locum, hospitium pro voluntate fecretum, et quicquid apponi eis ante promissum est, qui regnum et justitiam Dei quærunt."

The exiled bishop enjoyed the conveniencies of life and the con- C H A P. fciousness of virtue. His reputation was diffused over Africa and Italy; an account of his behaviour was published for the edification of the Christian world 83; and his folitude was frequently interrupted by the letters, the vifits, and the congratulations of the faithful. On the arrival of a new proconful in the province, the fortune of Cyprian appeared for fome time to wear a still more favourable afpect. He was recalled from banishment; and though not yet permitted to return to Carthage, his own gardens in the neighbourhood of the capital were affigned for the place of his refidence 84.

At length, exactly one year 85 after Cyprian was first appre- His condemhended, Galerius Maximus, proconful of Africa, received the Imperial warrant for the execution of the Christian teachers. The bishop of Carthage was fenfible that he should be fingled out for one of the first victims; and the frailty of nature tempted him to withdraw himself, by a secret slight, from the danger and the honour of martyrdom: but foon recovering that fortitude which his character required, he returned to his gardens, and patiently expected the ministers of death. Two officers of rank, who were intrusted with that commission, placed Cyprian between them in a chariot, and as the proconful was not then at leifure, they conducted him, not to a prifon, but to a private house in Carthage, which belonged to one of them. An elegant supper was provided for the entertainment of the bishop, and his Christian friends were permitted for the last time to enjoy his fociety, whilft the streets were filled with a multitude of the faithful, anxious and alarmed at the approaching fate of of fome Christian friend) restored them to nifying a year. Pontius, c. 12. Cyprian. See Pontius, c. 15.

<sup>83</sup> See Cyprian. Epistol. 77. Edit. Fell.

<sup>85</sup> When Cyprian, a twelvemonth before. ** Upon his convertion he had fold those gardens for the benefit of the poor. The indulgence of God (most probably the liberality made it necessary to explain that word, as signature of God (most probably the liberality made it necessary to explain that word, as signature of God (most probably the liberality made it necessary to explain that word, as signature of God (most probably the liberality made it necessary to explain that word, as signature of God (most probably the liberality made it necessary to explain that the should be put to death the next day.

C H A P. their spiritual father 86. In the morning he appeared before the tribunal of the proconful, who, after informing himself of the name and fituation of Cyprian, commanded him to offer facrifice, and preffed him to reflect on the confequences of his disobedience. The refufal of Cyprian was firm and decifive; and the magistrate, when he had taken the opinion of his council, pronounced with fome reluctance the fentence of death. It was conceived in the following terms: "That Thaseius Cyprianus should be immediately beheaded, " as the enemy of the gods of Rome, and as the chief and ring-" leader of a criminal affociation, which he had feduced into an " impious refistance against the laws of the most holy emperors, " Valerian and Gallienus 87." The manner of his execution was the mildest and least painful that could be inflicted on a person convicted of any capital offence: nor was the use of torture admitted to obtain from the bishop of Carthage either the recantation of his principles, or the discovery of his accomplices.

His martyr-

As foon as the fentence was proclaimed, a general cry of "We " will die with him," arose at once among the listening multitude of Christians who waited before the palace gates. The generous effusions of their zeal and affection were neither ferviceable to Cyprian nor dangerous to themselves. He was led away under a guard of tribunes and centurions, without refishance and without infult, to the place of his execution, a spacious and level plain near the city, which was already filled with great numbers of spectators. His faithful prefbyters and deacons were permitted to accompany their holy bishop. They affisted him in laying aside his upper garment, fpread linen on the ground to catch the precious relics prian, with whom he supped, passed the night crowd. Act. Proconsularia, c. 2. custodia delicata. The bishop exercised a directing that the younger females, who watched in the street, should be removed from

<sup>86</sup> Pontius (c. 15.) acknowledges that Cy- the dangers and temptations of a nocturnal

<sup>87</sup> See the original fentence in the Acts, last and very proper act of jurisdiction, by c. 4. and in Pontius, c. 17. The latter expresses it in a more rhetorical manner, of his blood, and received his orders to bestow five-and-twenty pieces CHAP. of gold on the executioner. The martyr then covered his face with his hands, and at one blow his head was feparated from his body. His corpfe remained during fome hours exposed to the curiofity of the Gentiles: but in the night it was removed, and transported in a triumphal procession and with a splendid illumination to the burialplace of the Christians. The funeral of Cyprian was publickly celebrated without receiving any interruption from the Roman magiftrates; and those among the faithful who had performed the last offices to his person and his memory, were secure from the danger of inquiry or of punishment. It is remarkable, that of so great a multitude of bishops in the province of Africa, Cyprian was the first who was esteemed worthy to obtain the crown of martyrdom 88.

It was in the choice of Cyprian either to die a martyr or to live Various inan apostate: but on that choice depended the alternative of honour martyrdom. or infamy. Could we suppose that the bishop of Carthage had employed the profession of the Christian faith only as the instrument of his avarice or ambition, it was still incumbent on him to support the character which he had affumed 89; and, if he poffessed the smallest degree of manly fortitude, rather to expose himself to the most cruel tortures, than by a fingle act to exchange the reputation of a whole life, for the abhorrence of his Christian brethren and the contempt of the Gentile world. But if the zeal of Cyprian was fupported by the fincere conviction of the truth of those doctrines which he preached, the crown of martyrdom must have appeared to him as an object of defire rather than of terror. It is not easy to extract any diffinct ideas from the vague though eloquent declama-

citements to

Pontius, c. 19. M. de Tillemont (Me- the character or principles of Thomas Becker, moires, tom. iv. part i. p. 450. note 50) is we mult acknowledge that he fuffered death not pleased with so positive an exclusion of wich a constancy not unworthy of the primiany former martyrs of the episcopal rank. tive martyrs. See Lord Lyttelton's History of by Whatever opinion we may entertain of Henry II. vol. ii. p. 592, &c.

CHAP. tions of the Fathers, or to afcertain the degree of immortal glory and happiness which they confidently promised to those who were fo fortunate as to fled their blood in the cause of religion 9°. They inculcated with becoming diligence, that the fire of martyrdom fupplied every defect and expiated every fin; that while the fouls of ordinary Christians were obliged to pass through a flow and painful purification, the triumphant fufferers entered into the immediate fruition of eternal blifs, where, in the fociety of the patriarchs, the apostles, and the prophets, they reigned with Christ, and acted as his affesfors in the universal judgment of mankind. The affurance of a lasting reputation upon earth, a motive so congenial to the vanity of human nature, often ferved to animate the courage of the martyrs. The honours which Rome or Athens bestowed on those citizens who had fallen in the cause of their country were cold and unmeaning demonstrations of respect, when compared with the ardent gratitude and devotion which the primitive church expressed towards the victorious champions of the faith. The annual commemoration of their virtues and fufferings was observed as a facred ceremony, and at length terminated in religious worship. Among the Christians who had publickly confessed their religious principles, those, who (as it very frequently happened) had been dismissed from the tribunal or the prisons of the Pagan magistrates, obtained such honours as were justly due to their imperfect martyrdom and their generous resolution. The most pious females courted the permission of imprinting kiffes on the fetters which they had worn, and on the wounds which they had received. Their persons were esteemed holy, their decisions were admitted with deference, and they too often abused, by their spiritual pride and licentious manners, the ge See in particular the treatife of Cyprian Enquiry, p. 162, &c.), have left fcarcely any de Lapfis, p. 87-98. Edit. Fell. The learning of Dodwell (Differtat, Cyprianic, xii. nours, and the motives of the martyrs.

xiii.), and the ingenuity of Middleton (Free pre-eminence which their zeal and intrepidity had acquired 91. Di- CHAP. stinctions like these, whilst they display the exalted merit, betray the inconfiderable number of those who suffered, and of those who died for the profession of Christianity.

The fober diferetion of the present age will more readily censure Ardour of than admire, but can more eafily admire than imitate, the fervour Christians. of the first Christians, who, according to the lively expression of Sulpicius Severus, defired martyrdom with more eagerness than his own contemporaries folicited a bishopric 92. The epistles which Ignatius composed as he was carried in chains through the cities of Afia, breathe fentiments the most repugnant to the ordinary feelings of human nature. He earnestly beseeches the Romans, that when he should be exposed in the amphitheatre, they would not, by their kind but unfeafonable intercession, deprive him of the crown of glory; and he declares his resolution to provoke and irritate the wild beafts which might be employed as the inftruments of his death 93. Some stories are related of the courage of martyrs, who actually performed what Ignatius had intended; who exasperated the fury of the lions, pressed the executioner to hasten his office, cheerfully leaped into the fires which were kindled to confume them, and discovered a sensation of joy and pleasure in the midst of the most exquisite tortures. Several examples have been preserved of a zeal impatient of those restraints which the emperors had provided for the fecurity of the church. The Christians fometimes supplied by their voluntary declaration the want of an accuser, rudely diftended martyrs has been very much multi- word nunc. plied, by the custom which was introduced of 92 Certatim gloriofa in certamina ruebatur; tibus quarcbantur, quam nunc Episcopatus timents of Ignatius.

91 Cyprian Epistol. 5, 6, 7. 22. 24. and pravis ambionibus appetuntur. Sulpicius de Unitat. Ecclesia. The number of pre- Severus, I. ii. He might have omitted the 53 See Epist. ad Roman. c. 4, 5. ap. Pabestowing that honourable name on con- tres Apostol, tom. ii. p. 27. It suited the purpose of Bishop Pearson (see Vindiciæ Ignatianæ, part ii. c. g.) to justify by a promultique avidius tum martyria gloriofis mor- fusion of examples and authorities, the fen-

turbed

C H A F. turbed the public fervice of Paganifm 94, and rufhing in crowds round the tribunal of the magistrates, called upon them to pronounce and to inflict the fentence of the law. The behaviour of the Christians was too remarkable to escape the notice of the ancient philosophers; but they feem to have confidered it with much lefs admiration than aftonishment. Incapable of conceiving the motives which sometimes transported the fortitude of believers beyond the bounds of prudence or reason, they treated such an eagerness to die as the strange refult of obstinate despair, of stupid infensibility, or of superstitious phrenzy 95. "Unhappy men," exclaimed the procenful Antoninus to the Christians of Asia, "unhappy men, if you are thus weary of " your lives, is it so difficult for you to find ropes and precipices 96?" He was extremely cautious (as it is observed by a learned and pious historian) of punishing men who had found no accusers but themfelves, the Imperial laws not having made any provision for fo unexpected a case: condemning therefore a few, as a warning to their brethren, he dismissed the multitude with indignation and contempt 97. Notwithstanding this real or affected disdain, the intrepid constancy of the faithful was productive of more falutary effects on those minds which nature or grace had disposed for the easy reception of religious truth. On these melancholy occasions, there were many among the Gentiles who pitied, who admired, and who were converted. The generous enthulialin was communicated from the neille has founded a very beautiful tragedy, is one of the most celebrated, though not perhaps the most authentic, instances of this excessive zeal. We should observe, that the 60th canon of the council of Illiberis refuses the title of martyrs to those who exposed the idols.

<sup>95</sup> See Epistetus, I. iv. c. 7. (though there is some doubt whether he alludes to the stantin, p. 235.

<sup>94</sup> The flory of Polyeucles, on which Cor- Christians) Marcus Antoninus de Rebus suis, 1. xi. c. 3. Lucian in Percgrin.

<sup>96</sup> Tertullian ad Scapul. c. 5. The learned are divided between three persons of the same name, who were all proconfuls of Afia. I am inclined to ascribe this story to Antoninus Pius, who was afterwards emperor; and who themselves to death, by publickly destroying may have governed Asia, under the reign of fufferer to the spectators; and the blood of martyrs, according to a well-known observation, became the seed of the church.

<sup>97</sup> Mosheim, de Rebus Christ, ante Con-

But although devotion had raifed, and eloquence continued to Gradual reinflame, this fever of the mind, it infenfibly gave way to the more natural hopes and fears of the human heart, to the love of life, the apprehension of pain, and the horror of disfolution. The more prudent rulers of the Church found themselves obliged to restrain the indifereet ardour of their followers, and to diffrust a constancy which too often abandoned them in the hour of trial 98. As the lives of the faithful became less mortified and austere, they were every day less ambitious of the honours of martyrdom; and the foldiers of Christ, instead of distinguishing themselves by voluntary deeds of heroifm, frequently deferted their post, and fled in confusion before the enemy whom it was their duty to refift. There were three methods, however, of escaping the flames of persecution, which were not attended with an equal degree of guilt: the first indeed was generally allowed to be innocent; the fecond was of a doubtful, or at least of a venial, nature; but the third implied a direct and criminal apostacy from the Christian faith.

> Three memartyrdom.

I. A modern inquifitor would hear with furprife, that whenever an information was given to a Roman magistrate of any person thousand within his jurisdiction who had embraced the fect of the Christians, the charge was communicated to the party accused, and that a convenient time was allowed him to fettle his domestic concerns, and to prepare an answer to the crime which was imputed to him 99. If he entertained any doubt of his own constancy, such a delay afforded him the opportunity of preserving his life and honour by flight, of withdrawing himfelf into fome obscure retirement or some

ap. Eufeb. Hift. Ecclef. I. iv. c. 15.

a particular and very curious inflance of this mentions the "Dies negantibus præflitutus."

<sup>98</sup> See the Epistle of the Church of Smyrna, legal delay. The same indulgence was granted to accused Christians, in the persecution of 99 In the fecond apology of Justin, there is Decius; and Cyprian (de Lapsis) expressly

CHAP. distant province, and of patiently expecting the return of peace and fecurity. A measure so consonant to reason was soon authorized by the advice and example of the most holy prelates; and seems to have been cenfured by few, except by the Montanists, who deviated into herefy by their strict and obstinate adherence to the rigour of ancient discipline '00. II. The provincial governors, whose zeal was less prevalent than their avarice, had countenanced the practice of felling certificates (or libels as they were called), which attefted, that the persons therein mentioned had complied with the laws, and sacrificed to the Roman deities. By producing these false declarations, the opulent and timid Christians were enabled to silence the malice of an informer, and to reconcile in some meafure their fafety with their religion. A flight pennance atoned for this profane diffimulation 101. III. In every perfecution there were great numbers of unworthy Christians, who publickly disowned or renounced the faith which they had professed; and who confirmed the fincerity of their abjuration, by the legal acts of burning incense or of offering sacrifices. Some of these apostates had yielded on the first menace or exhortation of the magistrate; whilst the patience of others had been fubdued by the length and repetition of tortures. The affrighted countenances of fome betrayed their inward remorfe, while others advanced with confidence and alacrity to the altars of the gods 102. But the difguise, which fear had imposed, subsisted no longer than the present danger. As soon as the > 100 Tertullian confiders flight from perfecution, as an imperfect, but very criminal, apoflacy, as an impious attempt to elude the will of God, &c. &c. He has written a treatife on this fubject (see p. 536-544. Edit. Rigalt.), which is filled with the wildest fanaticism, and the most incoherent declamation. It is, however, fomewhat remarkable, that Tertullian did not fuffer martyrdom himfelf.

101 The Libellatici, who are chiefly known by the writings of Cyprian, are described with the utmost precision, in the copious commentary of Mosheim, p. 483-489.

172 Plin. Epistol. x. 97. Dionysius Alexandrin. ap. Euseb. I. vi. c. 41. Ad prima statim verba minantis inimici maximus fratrum numerus fidem fuam prodidit: nec proftratus est persecutionis impetu, sed voluntario lapsu seipsum prostravit. Cyprian. Opera, p. 89. Among these deserters were many priefts, and even bishops, feverity of the perfecution was abated, the doors of the churches CHAP. were affailed by the returning multitude of penitents, who detefted their idolatrous fubmiffion, and who folicited with equal ardor, but with various fuccess, their re-admission into the society of Christians 103.

feverity

IV. Notwithstanding the general rules, established for the con- Alternatives viction and punishment of the Christians, the fate of those sections, and tolerain an extensive and arbitrary government, must still, in a great mea-tion. fure, have depended on their own behaviour, the circumstances of the times, and the temper of their supreme as well as subordinate rulers. Zeal might fometimes provoke, and prudence might fometimes avert or affuage, the fuperflitious fury of the Pagans. A variety of motives might dispose the provincial governors either to enforce or to relax the execution of the laws; and of these motives. the most forcible was their regard not only for the public edicts, but for the fecret intentions of the emperor, a glance from whose eye was fufficient to kindle or to extinguish the flames of perfecution. As often as any occasional severities were exercised in the different parts of the empire, the primitive Christians lamented and perhaps magnified their own fufferings; but the celebrated number The ten perof ten perfecutions has been determined by the ecclefiaffical writers fecutions. of the fifth century, who possessed a more distinct view of the profperous or adverse fortunes of the church, from the age of Nero to that of Diocletian. The ingenious parallels of the ten plagues of Egypt, and of the ten horns of the Apocalypse, first suggested this calculation to their minds, and in their application of the faith of prophecy to the truth of history, they were careful to felect those reigns which were indeed the most hostile to the Christian cause 104,

103 It was on this occasion that Cyprian less intimate knowledge of their history? wrote his treatise De Lapsis and many of his epiftles. The controverfy concerning the treatment of penitent apostates, does not occur among the Christians of the preceding century. Shall we afcribe this to the fuperiority of their faith and courage, or to our 104 See Mosheim, p. 97. Sulpicius Severus was the first author of this computation; though he feemed defirous of referving the tenth and greatest perfecution for the coming of the Antichrift.

VOL. I.

4 Q

But

Lumpmend

CHAP. But these transfent persecutions served only to revive the zeal, and to restore the discipline of the faithful: and the moments of extraordinary rigour were compensated by much longer intervals of peace and fecurity. The indifference of fome princes, and the indulgence of others, permitted the Christians to enjoy, though not perhaps a legal, yet an actual and public, toleration of their religion.

Supposed edicts of Tiberius and Marcus Antoninus.

The apology of Tertullian contains two very ancient, very fingular, but at the same time very suspicious instances of Imperial clemency; the edicts published by Tiberius, and by Marcus Antoninus, and defigned not only to protect the innocence of the Christians, but even to proclaim those stupendous miracles which had attested the truth of their doctrine. The first of these examples is attended with fome difficulties which might perplex a fceptical mind 105. We are required to believe, that Pontius Pilate informed the emperor of the unjust sentence of death which he had pronounced against an innocent, and, as it appeared, a divine, person; and that, without acquiring the merit, he exposed himself to the danger, of martyrdom; that Tiberius, who avowed his contempt for all religion, immediately conceived the defign of placing the Jewish Messiah among the gods of Rome; that his servile senate ventured to disobey the commands of their master; that Tiberius, instead of refenting their refusal, contented himself with protecting the Christians from the feverity of the laws, many years before fuch laws were enacted, or before the church had assumed any distinct name or existence; and lastly, that the memory of this extraordinary transaction was preserved in the most public and authentic records, which escaped the knowledge of the historians of Greece and Rome, and were only visible to the eyes of an African Christian, who composed his apology one hundred and fixty years after the death of CHAP. Tiberius. The edict of Marcus Antoninus is supposed to have been the effect of his devotion and gratitude, for the miraculous deliverance which he had obtained in the Marcomannic war. The diffress of the legions, the feafonable tempest of rain and hail, of thunder and of lightning, and the difmay and defeat of the barbarians, have been celebrated by the eloquence of feveral Pagan writers. If there were any Christians in that army, it was natural that they should ascribe some merit to the fervent prayers, which in the moment of danger they had offered up for their own and the public fafety. But we are still assured by monuments of brass and marble, by the Imperial medals, and by the Antonine column, that neither the prince nor the people entertained any fense of this fignal obligation, fince they unanimously attribute their deliverance to the providence of Jupiter, and to the interpolition of Mercury. During the whole course of his reign, Marcus despised the Christians as a philosopher, and punished them as a fovereign 106.

<sup>105</sup> The testimony given by Pontius Pi- tom, Orosius, Gregory of Tours, and the late is first mentioned by Justin. The suc- authors of the several editions of the acts of cessive improvements which the story has ac-quired (as it passed through the hands of Dissertat, sur l'Ecriture, tom. iii. p. 651, &c. Tertullian, Eusebius, Epiphanius, Chryfof-

By a fingular fatality, the hardships which they had endured un- State of the der the government of a virtuous prince, immediately ceased on the accession of a tyrant, and as none except themselves had experienced the injuffice of Marcus, fo they alone were protected by the lenity of Commodus. The celebrated Marcia, the most favoured of his concubines, and who at length contrived the murder of her Imperial lover, entertained a fingular affection for the oppressed church; and though it was impossible that she could reconcile the practice of vice with the precepts of the Gospel, she might hope to atone for the frailties of her fex and profession, by declaring herself the patroness of the Christians 107. Under the gracious protection

Christians in the reigns of Commodus and Severus. A. D. 180.

&lt;sup>10</sup> On this miracle, as it is commonly called, of the thundering legion, fee the admirable criticism of Mr. Moyle, in his Works, vol. ii. p. 81 -- 390.

<sup>1 7</sup> Dion Cassius, or rather his abbreviator Xiphilin, 1. lxxii. p. 1206. Mr. Moyle (p. 266.) has explained the condition of the church under the reign of Commodus.

C H A P. of Marcia, they passed in safety the thirteen years of a cruel tyranny; and when the empire was established in the house of Severus, they formed a domestic but more honourable connexion with the new court. The emperor was perfuaded, that, in a dangerous fickness, he had derived some benefit, either spiritual or physical, from the holy oil, with which one of his flaves had anointed him. He always treated with peculiar diffinction feveral persons of both fexes who had embraced the new religion. The nurse as well as the preceptor of Caracalla were Christians; and if that young prince ever betrayed a fentiment of humanity, it was occasioned by an incident, which, however trifling, bore fome relation to the cause of Christianity 108. Under the reign of Severus, the fury of the populace was checked; the rigour of ancient laws was for fome time fufpended; and the provincial governors were fatisfied with receiving an annual present from the churches within their jurisdiction, as the price, or as the reward, of their moderation 109. The controversy concerning the precife time of the celebration of Easter armed the bishops of Asia and Italy against each other, and was considered as the most important business of this period of leisure and tranquillity ". Nor was the peace of the church interrupted, till the increafing numbers of profelytes feem at length to have attracted the attention, and to have alienated the mind, of Severus. With the defign of restraining the progress of Christianity, he published an edict, which, though it was defigned to affect only the new converts, could not be carried into firict execution, without exposing to danger and punishment the most zealous of their teachers and missionaries. In

A. D. 198.

Augustan History, with the epistle of Tertullian to Scapula. Dr. Jortin (Remarks on Ecclefiaftical History, vol. ii. p. 5, &c.) confiders the cure of Severus, by the means of holy oil, with a strong defire to convert it into a miracle.

108 Compare the life of Caracalla in the was made during the feast of the Saturnalia; and it is a matter of ferious concern to Tertullian, that the faithful should be confounded with the most infamous professions which purchased the connivance of the government.

<sup>109</sup> Tertullian de Fugâ, c. 13. The present

<sup>110</sup> Euseb. l. v. c. 23, 24. Mosheim, p. 435-447

this mitigated perfecution, we may fill discover the indulgent spirit CHAP. of Rome and of Polytheifm, which fo readily admitted every excuse in favour of those who practifed the religious ceremonies of their fathers "".

But the laws which Severus had enacted foon expired with Of the fuethe authority of that emperor; and the Christians, after this verus. accidental tempest, enjoyed a calm of thirty-eight years "2. Till 249. this period they had usually held their affemblies in private houses and fequestered places. They were now permitted to erect and confecrate convenient edifices for the purpose of religious worship "3"; to purchase lands, even at Rome itself, for the use of the community; and to conduct the elections of their ecclefiaftical ministers in fo public, but at the fame time in fo exemplary, a manner, as to deserve the respectful attention of the Gentiles "4. This long repose of the church was accompanied with dignity. The reigns of those princes who derived their extraction from the Afiatic provinces proved the most favourable to the Christians; the eminent perfons of the fect, instead of being reduced to implore the protection of a flave or concubine, were admitted into the palace in the honourable characters of priefts and philosophers; and their mysterious doctrines, which were already diffused among the people, insensibly attracted the curiosity of their sovereign. When the empress Mammæa passed through Antioch, she expressed a defire of converfing with the celebrated Origen, the fame of whose piety and ceffors of Se-A. D. 211-

Judæos fieri fub gravi pœna vetuit. Mr. Moyle (vol. i. p. 378-398). The Idem etiam de Christianis fanxit. Hist. August. p. 70.

<sup>112</sup> Sulpicius Severus, I. ii. p. 384. This computation (allowing for a fingle exception) is confirmed by the history of Eusebius, and by the writings of Cyprian.

<sup>113</sup> The antiquity of Christian churches is discussed by Tillemont (Memoires Ecclesiaftiques, tom. iii. part ii. p. 68-72.), and by former refers the first construction of them to the peace of Alexander Severus; the latter, to the peace of Gallienus.

<sup>114</sup> See the Augustan History, p. 130. The emperor Alexander adopted their method of publicly proposing the names of those persons who were candidates for ordination. It is true, that the honour of this practice is likewife attributed to the Jews.

C H A P. learning was fpread over the East. Origen obeyed so flattering an invitation, and though he could not expect to fucceed in the conversion of an artful and ambitious woman, she listened with pleasure to his eloquent exhortations, and honourably difmiffed him to his retirement in Palestine 115. The fentiments of Mammæa were adopted by her fon Alexander, and the philosophic devotion of that emperor was marked by a fingular but injudicious regard for the Christian religion. In his domestic chapel he placed the statues of Abraham, of Orpheus, of Apollonius, and of Christ, as an honour justly due to those respectable sages who had instructed mankind in the various modes of addressing their homage to the supreme and universal deity 116. A purer faith, as well as worship, was openly professed and practifed among his household. Bishops, perhaps for the first time, were feen at court; and, after the death of Alexander, when the inhuman Maximin discharged his fury on the favourites and servants of his unfortunate benefactor, a great number of Christians, of every rank and of both fexes, were involved in the promifcuous maffacre, which, on their account, has improperly received the name of Persecution "7.

Of Maximin, Philip, and Decius.

A. D. 235.

Notwithstanding the cruel disposition of Maximin, the effects of his refentment against the Christians were of a very local and tem-

115 Eufeb. Hift. Ecclefiaft. l. vi. c. 21. Hieronym. de Script. Ecclef. c. 54. Mammæawas flyled a holy and pious woman, both by the Christians and the Pagans. From the former, therefore, it was impossible that she should deserve that honourable epithet.

116 See the Augustan History, p. 123. Mofheim (p. 465.) feems to refine too much on the domestic religion of Alexander. His defign of building a public temple to Christ (Hift. August. p. 129.), and the objection which was suggested either to him, or in similar circumstances to Hadrian, appear to have no other foundation than an improbable report, invented by the Christians, and cre- p. 303. tom. xxv. p. 432).

duloufly adopted by an historian of the age of Constantine.

117 Euseb. 1. vi. c. 28. It may be prefumed, that the fuccess of the Christians had exasperated the increasing bigotry of the Pagans. Dion Cassius, who composed his history under the former reign, had most probably intended for the use of his master those counsels of perfecution, which he ascribes to a better age, and to the favourite of Augustus. Concerning this oration of Mæcenas, or rather of Dion, I may refer to my own unbiaffed opinion (p. 41. Not. 25.), and to the Abbè de la Bletcrie (Memoires de l'Academie, tom. xxiv.

porary

porary nature, and the pious Origen, who had been profcribed as a CHAP. devoted victim, was still reserved to convey the truths of the Gospel to the ear of monarchs 118. He addressed several edifying letters A.D. 244.

to the emperor Philip, to his wife, and to his mother; and as foon as that prince, who was born in the neighbourhood of Palestine, had usurped the Imperial sceptre, the Christians acquired a friend and a protector. The public and even partial favour of Philip towards the fectaries of the new religion, and his constant reverence for the ministers of the church, gave some colour to the suspicion, which prevailed in his own times, that the emperor himself was become a convert to the faith "; and afforded fome grounds for a fable which was afterwards invented, that he had been purified by confession and pennance from the guilt contracted by the murder of his innocent predecessor 120. The fall of Philip introduced, A. D. 240. with the change of masters, a new system of government, so oppreffive to the Christians, that their former condition, ever fince the time of Domitian, was represented as a state of perfect freedom and fecurity, if compared with the rigorous treatment which they experienced under the short reign of Decius 121. The virtues of that prince will scarcely allow us to suspect that he was actuated by a mean refentment against the favourites of his pre-

as the object of Maximin's refentment; and Firmilianus, a Cappadocian bishop of that age, gives a just and confined idea of this persecution (apud Cyprian. Epist. 75.).

149 The mention of those princes who were publickly supposed to be Christians, as we find it in an epistle of Dionysius of Alexaudria (ap. Eufeb. l. vii. c. 10.), evidently alludes to Philip and his family; and forms a contemporary evidence, that fuch a report had prevailed; but the Egyptian bishop, who lived at an humble distance from the court of fion of good princes: he adds, " Extitit post Rome, expresses himself with a becoming annos plurimos, execrabile animal, Decius. diffidence, concerning the truth of the fact. qui vexaret Ecclefiam."

Orofius, 1. vii. c. 19, mentions Origen The epiftles of Origen (which were extant in the time of Eusebius, see l. vi. c. 36.) would most probably decide this curious, rather than important, question.

120 Euseb. l. vi. c. 34. The story, as is ufual, has been embellished by succeeding writers, and is confuted, with much fuperfluous learning, by Frederick Spanheim (Ope ra Varia, tom. ii. p. 400, &c.).

121 Lactantius, de Mortibus Perfecutorum, c. 3, 4. After celebrating the felicity and increase of the church, under a long succes-deceffor.

CHAP. decessor, and it is more reasonable to believe, that in the prosecution of his general delign to restore the purity of Roman manners, he was defirous of delivering the empire from what he condemned as a recent and criminal superstition. The bishops of the most confiderable cities were removed by exile or death: the vigilance of the magistrates prevented the clergy of Rome during fixteen months from proceeding to a new election; and it was the opinion of the Christians, that the emperor would more patiently endure a competitor for the purple, than a bishop in the capital 122. Were it possible to suppose that the penetration of Decius had discovered pride under the difguife of humility, or that he could foresee the temporal dominion which might infenfibly arise from the claims of spiritual authority, we might be less surprised, that he should consider the succesfors of St. Peter as the most formidable rivals to those of Augustus.

Of Valerian, Gallienus, and his fucceffors. A. D. 253-260.

The administration of Valerian was distinguished by a levity and inconflancy, ill fuited to the gravity of the Roman Cenfor. In the first part of his reign, he surpassed in clemency those princes who had been suspected of an attachment to the Christian faith. In the last three years and a half, listening to the infinuations of a minister addicted to the superstitions of Egypt, he adopted the maxims, and imitated the feverity, of his predecessor Decius 123. The accession of Gallienus, which increased the calamities of the empire, restored peace to the church; and the Christians obtained the free exercise of their religion, by an edict addressed to the bishops, and conceived in fuch terms as feemed to acknowledge their office and public character 124. The ancient laws, without being formally repealed, were 222 Euseb. l. vi. c. 39. Cyprian. Epistol. has very clearly shewn, that the Præfect Ma-55. The fee of Rome remained vacant from crianus, and the Egyptian Magus, are one fuffered.

the martyrdom of Fabianus, to the 20th of and the same person. January, A. D. 250, till the election of Corhad probably left Rome, fince he was killed before the end of that year.

<sup>123</sup> Eufeb. 1, vii. c. 10. Mosheim (p. 548.) flored to the Christians.

<sup>124</sup> Eufebius (l. vii. c. 13.) gives us a Greek nelius, the 4th of June, A. D. 251. Decius version of this Latin edict, which seems to have been very concife. By another edict, he directed, that the Cameteria should be re-fuffered to fink into oblivion; and (excepting only fome hostile in- C H A P. tentions which are attributed to the emperor Aurelian 125) the difciples of Christ passed above forty years in a state of prosperity, 303. far more dangerous to their virtue than the feverest trials of perfecution.

A. D. 260-

The flory of Paul of Samofata, who filled the metropolitan fee of Paul of Sa-Antioch, while the East was in the hands of Odenathus and Zeno- moiata, manners. bia, may serve to illustrate the condition and character of the times. A. D. 260. The wealth of that prelate was a fufficient evidence of his guilt, fince it was neither derived from the inheritance of his fathers, nor acquired by the arts of honest industry. But Paul confidered the fervice of the church as a very lucrative profession 126. His ecclesiastical jurisdiction was venal and rapacious; he extorted frequent contributions from the most opulent of the faithful, and converted to his own use a considerable part of the public revenue. By his pride and luxury, the Christian religion was rendered odious in the eyes of the Gentiles. His council chamber and his throne, the fplendour with which he appeared in public, the suppliant crowd who folicited his attention, the multitude of letters and petitions to which he dictated his answers, and the perpetual hurry of business in which he was involved, were circumstances much better suited to the state of a civil magistrate 127, than to the humility of a primifius, l. vii. c. 23. Their language is in general fo ambiguous and incorrect, that we are at a loss to determine how far Aurelian had carried his intentions before he was assafaffinated. Most of the moderns (except Dodwell, Differtat. Cyprian. xi. 64.) have feized the occasion of gaining a few extraordinary martyrs.

126 Paul was better pleafed with the title of Ducenarius, than with that of bishop. The tia, or 1,600l. a year. (See Salmafius ad at about 2,400l.

125 Euseb. 1. vii. c. 30. Lactantius de M. Hist. August. p. 124.). Some critics suppose, P. c. 6. Hieronym.in Chron. p. 177. Oro- that the bishop of Antioch had actually obtained fuch an office from Zenobia, while others confider it only as a figurative expreffion of his pomp and infolence.

127 Simony was not unknown in those times; and the clergy fometimes bought what they intended to fell. It appears that the bishopric of Carthage was purchased by a wealthy matron, named Lucilla, for her fervant Majorinus. The price was 400 Folles. (Monument. Antiq. ad calcem Optati, p. Ducenerius was an Imperial procurator, fo 263.). Every Follis contained 125 pieces of called from his falary of two hundred Sefter- filver, and the whole fum may be computed

VOL. I.

a R

tive

CHAP. tive bishop. When he harangued his people from the pulpit, Paul affected the figurative ftyle and the theatrical gestures of an Asiatic fophift, while the cathedral refounded with the loudest and most extravagant acclamations in the praise of his divine eloquence. Against those who refused his power, or refused to flatter his vanity, the prelate of Antioch was arrogant, rigid, and inexorable; but he relaxed the discipline, and lavished the treasures, of the church on his dependent clergy, who were permitted to imitate their mafter in the gratification of every fenfual appetite. For Paul indulged himfelf very freely in the pleasures of the table, and he had received into the episcopal palace two young and beautiful women, as the constant companions of his leifure moments 123.

He is degraded from the fee of Antioch. A. D. 270.

Notwithstanding these scandalous vices, if Paul of Samosata had preserved the purity of the orthodox faith, his reign over the capital of Syria would have ended only with his life; and had a feafonable perfecution intervened, an effort of courage might perhaps have placed him in the rank of faints and martyrs. Some nice and fubtle errors, which he imprudently adopted and obstinately maintained, concerning the doctrine of the Trinity, excited the zeal and indignation of the eaftern churches 129. From Egypt to the Euxine fea, the bishops were in arms and in motion. Several councils were held, confutations were published, excommunications were pronounced, ambiguous explanations were by turns accepted and refused, treaties were concluded and violated, and at length Paul of Samofata was degraded from his epifcopal character, by the fentence of feventy or eighty bishops, who affembled for that purpose at Antioch, and who, without confulting the rights of the clergy or people, appointed a fucceffor by their own authority. The manifest 128 If we are defirous of extenuating the to all the churches of the empire (ap. Eufeb. &c. * 1. vii. c. 30.).

129 His herefy (like those of Noetus and vices of Paul, we must suspect the assembled Sabellius, in the same century) tended bishops of the East of publishing the most ma- to consound the mysterious distinction of licious calumnies in circular epifles addreffed the divine perfons. See Motheim, p. 702, irregularity of this proceeding increased the numbers of the discon- C H A P. tented faction; and as Paul, who was no stranger to the arts of courts, had infinuated himfelf into the favour of Zenobia, he maintained above four years the possession of the episcopal house and office. The victory of Aurelian changed the face of the East, and the two contending parties, who applied to each other the epithets of schism and herefy, were either commanded or permitted to plead their cause before the tribunal of the conqueror. This public and very fingular trial affords a convincing proof, that the existence, the property, the privileges, and the internal policy, of the Christians were acknowledged, if not by the laws, at least by the magistrates of the empire. As a Pagan and as a foldier, it could fearcely be expected that Aurelian should enter into the discussion, whether the fentiments of Paul or those of his adversaries were most agreeable to the true standard of the orthodox faith. His determination, however, The sentence was founded on the general principles of equity and reason. He by Aurelian, confidered the bishops of Italy as the most impartial and respectable A.D. 274. judges among the Christians, and as soon as he was informed, that they had unanimously approved the sentence of the council, he acquiesced in their opinion, and immediately gave orders that Paul should be compelled to relinquish the temporal possessions belonging to an office, of which, in the judgment of his brethren, he had been regularly deprived. But while we applaud the juffice, we should not overlook the policy, of Aurelian; who was defirous of reftoring and cementing the dependance of the provinces on the capital, by every means which could bind the interest or prejudices of any part 'of his fubjects '; '.

Amidst the frequent revolutions of the empire, the Christians still Peace and flourished in peace and prosperity; and notwithstanding a cele-the church

150 Fufb, Hift. Lock f ft. 1. vii. c. 30. We flory of Paul of Samofata.

XVI. under Diocletian. A. D. 284-303.

C H A P. brated æra of martyrs has been deduced from the accession of Diocletian 131, the new system of policy, introduced and maintained by the wisdom of that prince, continued, during more than eighteen years, to breathe the mildest and most liberal spirit of religious toleration. The mind of Diocletian himself was less adapted indeed to fpeculative inquiries, than to the active labours of war and government. His prudence rendered him averse to any great innovation, and though his temper was not very susceptible of zeal or enthufiafm, he always maintained an habitual regard for the ancient deities of the empire. But the leifure of the two empresses, of his wife Prisca, and of Valeria his daughter, permitted them to listen with more attention and respect to the truths of Christianity, which in every age has acknowledged its important obligations to female devotion 132. The principal eunuchs, Lucian 133 and Dorotheus, Gorgonius and Andrew, who attended the person, possessed the fayour, and governed the household, of Diocletian, protected by their powerful influence the faith which they had embraced. Their example was imitated by many of the most considerable officers of the palace, who, in their respective stations, had the care of the Imperial ornaments, of the robes, of the furniture, of the jewels, and even of the private treasury; and, though it might fometimes be incumbent on them to accompany the emperor when he facrificed in the temple 134, they enjoyed, with their wives, their children, and their flaves, the free exercise of the Christian religion. Diocletian > use among the Copts and the Abyssinians, must be reckoned from the 29th of August, A. D. 284; as the beginning of the Egyptian year was nineteen days earlier than the real accession of Diocletian. See Differtation preliminaire à l'Art de verifier les Dates.

> 132 The expression of Lactantius (de M. P. c. 15.) " facrificio pollui coegit," implies their antecedent conversion to the faith; but 13t The Æra of Martyrs, which is still in does not feem to justify the affertion of Mofheim (p. 912.), that they had been privately baptized.

<sup>133</sup> M. de Tillemont (Memoires Ecclefiaftiques, tom. v. parti. p. 11, 12.) has quoted from the Spicilegium of Dom. Luc d'Acheri, a very curious instruction which bishop Theonas composed for the use of Lucian.

<sup>134</sup> Lactantius de M. P. c. 10.

and his colleagues frequently conferred the most important offices CHAP. on those persons, who avowed their abhorrence for the worship of the gods, but who had displayed abilities proper for the service of the flate. The bishops held an honourable rank in their respective provinces, and were treated with diffinction and respect, not only by the people, but by the magistrates themselves. Almost in every city, the ancient churches were found infufficient to contain the increafing multitude of profelytes; and in their place more flately and capacious edifices were erected for the public worship of the faithful. The corruption of manners and principles, fo forcibly lamented by Eusebius 135, may be considered, not only as a consequence, but as a proof, of the liberty, which the Christians enjoyed and abused under the reign of Diocletian. Prosperity had relaxed the nerves of discipline. Fraud, envy, and malice, prevailed in every congregation. The prefbyters aspired to the episcopal office, which every day became an object more worthy of their ambition. The bishops, who contended with each other for ecclesiastical preeminence, appeared by their conduct to claim a fecular and tyrannical power in the church; and the lively faith which still distinguished the Christians from the Gentiles, was shewn much less in their lives, than in their controverfial writings.

Notwithstanding this seeming security, an attentive observer Progress of might difcern fome fymptoms that threatened the church with a more violent perfecution than any which she had yet endured. The among the Pagans. zeal and rapid progress of the Christians awakened the Polytheists from their fupine indifference in the cause of those deities, whom cuftom and education had taught them to revere. The mutual provocations of a religious war, which had already continued above two hundred years, exasperated the animosity of the contending zeal and fuperstition

The reader who confults the original will not cession of the emperor Diocletian. accuse me of heightening the picture. Euse-

135 Eusebius Hist. Ecclefiast. I. viii. c. 1. bius was about fixteen years of age at the ac-parties.

XVI.

CHAP. parties. The Pagans were incenfed at the rashness of a recent and obscure sec, which presumed to accuse their countrymen of error, and to devote their ancestors to eternal misery. The habits of justifying the popular mythology against the invectives of an implacable enemy, produced in their minds some sentiments of faith and reverence for a fystem which they had been accustomed to consider with the most careless levity. The supernatural powers assumed by the church inspired at the same time terror and emulation. The followers of the established religion intrenched themselves behind a fimilar fortification of prodigies; invented new modes of facrifice, of expiation, and of initiation 136; attempted to revive the credit of their expiring oracles 137; and listened with eager credulity to every impostor, who flattered their prejudices by a tale of wonders 138. Both parties feemed to acknowledge the truth of those miracles which were claimed by their adverfaries; and while they were contented with ascribing them to the arts of magic, and to the power of dæmons, they mutually concurred in restoring and establishing the reign of superstition 139. Philosophy, her most dangerous enemy, was now converted into her most useful ally. The groves of the academy, the gardens of Epicurus, and even the portico of the > 136 We might quote, among a great numher of inflances, the mysterious worship of Mythras, and the Taurobolia; the latter of which became fashionable in the time of the Antonines (See a Differtation of M. de Boze, in the Memoires de l'Academie des Infcriptions, tom. ii. p. 443.). The remance of Apuleius is as full of devotion as of fatire.

137 The impostor Alexander very strongly recommended the oracle of Trophonius at Mallos, and those of Apollo, at Claros and Miletus (Lucian, tom. ii. p. 236, Edit. Reitz). The last of these, whose singular history would furnish a very curious episode, was consulted by Diocletian before he published his edicts of persecution (Laclantius, de M. P. c. 11).

<sup>118</sup> Befides the ancient stories of Pythagoras and Arifleas; the cures performed at the fhrine of Æsculapius, and the fables related of Apollonius of Tyana, were frequently opposed to the miracles of Christ; though I agree with Dr. Lardner (fee Testimonies, vol. iii. p. 252. 352.), that when Philostratus composed the life of Apollonius, he had no such intention.

<sup>139</sup> It is ferioufly to be lamented, that the Christian fathers, by acknowledging the fupernatural, or, as they deem it, the infornal, part of Paganifm, destroy with their own hands the great advantage which we might otherwise derive from the liberal concessions

Stoics, were almost deserted, as so many different schools of scepti- CHAP. cifm or impiety 140: and many among the Romans were defirous that the writings of Cicero should be condemned and suppressed by the authority of the fenate 141. The prevailing fect of the new Platonicians judged it prudent to connect themselves with the priests, whom perhaps they despised, against the Christians, whom they had reason to fear. These fashionable philosophers prosecuted the defign of extracting allegorical wifdom from the fictions of the Greek poets; instituted mysterious rites of devotion for the use of their chosen disciples; recommended the worship of the ancient gods as the emblems or ministers of the Supreme Deity, and composed against the faith of the gospel many elaborate treatises '42, which have fince been committed to the flames by the prudence of orthodox emperors 143.

Although the policy of Diocletian and the humanity of Con- Maximian flantius inclined them to preserve inviolate the maxims of toleration, it was foon discovered that their two affociates, Maximian and Galerius, entertained the most implacable aversion for the name and religion of the Christians. The minds of those princes had never been enlightened by science; education had never foftened their temper. They owed their greatness to their fwords and in their most elevated fortune they still retained their superstiand Galerius punifly a few Christian sol-

240 Julian (p. 301. Edit. Spanheim) expresses a pious joy, that the providence of the gods had extinguished the impious sects, and for the most part destroyed the books of the Pyrrhonians and Epicureans, which had been very numerous, fince Epicurus himfelf composed no less than 300 volumes. See Diogenes Laertius, 1. x. c. 26.

141 Cumque alios audiam mustitare indignanter, et dicere opportere flatui per Senatum, aboleantur ut hæc scripta, quibus Christiana Religio comprobetur, et vetustatis opprimatur auctoritas. Arnobius adversus Gentes, I. iii. p. 103, 104. He adds very properly, Erroris convincite Ciceronem . . . nam intercipere fcripta, et publicatam velle fubmergere lectionem, non est Deum defendere sed veritatis testificationem timere.

142 Lactantius (Divin. Institut. 1. v. c. 2, 3.) gives a very clear and spirited account of two of these philosophic adversaries of the faith. The large treatife of Porphyry against the Christians confished of thirty books, and was composed in Sicily about the year 270.

143 See Socrates Hift. Ecclefiaft. 1. i. c. o, and Codex Theodofian. I. i. tit. i. 1. 3.

CHAP. tious prejudices of foldiers and peafants. In the general adminifiration of the provinces they obeyed the laws which their benefactor had established; but they frequently found occasions of exercifing within their camp and palaces a fecret perfecution 144, for which the imprudent zeal of the Christians fometimes offered the most specious pretences. A sentence of death was executed upon Maximilianus, an African youth, who had been produced by his own father before the magistrate as a sufficient and legal recruit, but who obstinately persisted in declaring, that his conscience would not permit him to embrace the profession of a soldier 145. It could scarcely be expected that any government should suffer the action of Marcellus the Centurion to pass with impunity. On the day of a public festival, that officer threw away his belt, his arms, and the enfigns of his office, and exclaimed with a loud voice, that he would obey none but Jesus Christ the eternal King, and that he renounced for ever the use of carnal weapons, and the service of an idolatrous master. The soldiers, as soon as they recovered from their astonishment, secured the person of Marcellus. He was examined in the city of Tingi by the prefident of that part of Mauritania; and as he was convicted by his own confession, he was condemned and beheaded for the crime of defertion 146. Examples of fuch a nature, favour much less of religious persecution than of martial or even

> 144 Eusebius, 1. viii. c. 4. c. 17. He limits the number of military martyrs, by a remarkable expression ( THANW; TOUTWO ES; THE NAI SEUTEPOS) of which neither his Latin nor French translator have rendered the energy. Notwithflanding the authority of Eufebius, and the filence of Lactantius, Ambrofe, Sulpicius, Orofius, &c. it has been long believed, that the Thebæan legion, confifted of 6000 Christians, fuffered martyrdom, by the order of accounts of his martyrdom and of that of Maximian, in the valley of the Penine Alps. The flory was first published about the middle of the vth century, by Eucherius, hishop of Lyons, who received it from certain persons, who received it from Isaac bishop of Geneva, who is faid to have received it from Theodore bishop of Octodurum. The Abbey of St. Maurice still subsists, a rich monument of the credulity of Sigifmond, king of Burgundy. See an excellent Differtation in the xxxvith volume of the Bibliothêque Raifonnée, p. 427-454.

345 See the Acta Sincera, p. 299. The Marcellus bear every mark of truth and authenticity.

245 Acta Sincera, p. 302.

civil law: but they ferved to alienate the mind of the emperors, to CHAP. justify the severity of Galerius, who dismissed a great number of Christian officers from their employments; and to authorize the opinion, that a fect of enthuliafts, which avowed principles fo repugnant to the public fafety, must either remain useless, or would soon become dangerous, subjects of the empire.

After the success of the Persian war had raised the hopes and the Galerius prereputation of Galerius, he passed a winter with Diocletian in the cletian to bepalace of Nicomedia; and the fate of Christianity became the object gin a general of their fecret confultations 147. The experienced emperor was still inclined to purfue measures of lenity; and though he readily confented to exclude the Christians from holding any employments in the household or the army, he urged in the strongest terms the danger as well as cruelty of shedding the blood of those deluded fanatics. Galerius at length extorted from him the permission of summoning a council, composed of a few persons the most distinguished in the civil and military departments of the state. The important question was agitated in their presence, and those ambitious courtiers eafily discerned, that it was incumbent on them to second, by their eloquence, the importunate violence of the Cæfar. It may be prefumed, that they infifted on every topic which might interest the pride, the piety, or the fears, of their fovereign in the destruction of Christianity. Perhaps they represented that the glorious work of the deliverance of the empire was left imperfect, as long as an independent people was permitted to fubfift and multiply in the heart of the provinces. The Christians, (it might speciously be alleged) renouncing the gods and the institutions of Rome, had conflituted a diffinct republic, which might yet be suppressed before it had acquired any military force: but which was already governed at that time, an inhabitant of Nicomedia; passed in the Imperial cabinet.

147 De M. P. c. 11. Lactantius (or who- but it feems difficult to conceive how he could ever was the author of this little treatife) was, acquire fo accurate a knowledge of what

C H A P. by its own laws and magistrates, was possessed of a public treasure, and was intimately connected in all its parts, by the frequent affemblies of the bishops, to whose decrees their numerous and opulent congregations yielded an implicit obedience. Arguments like thefe, may feem to have determined the reluctant mind of Diocletian to embrace a new system of persecution: but though we may suspect, it is not in our power to relate, the fecret intrigues of the palace, the private views and refentments, the jealoufy of women or eunuchs, and all those trifling but decisive causes which so often influence the fate of empires, and the counfels of the wifest monarchs 148.

Demolition of the church of Nicomedia. A. D. 303. 23d Feb.

The pleasure of the emperors was at length fignified to the Christians, who, during the course of this melancholy winter, had expected, with anxiety, the refult of fo many fecret confultations-The twenty-third of February, which coincided with the Roman festival of the Terminalia 149, was appointed (whether from accident or defign) to fet bounds to the progress of Christianity. At the earliest dawn of day, the Prætorian præfect 150, accompanied by feveral generals, tribunes, and officers of the revenue, repaired to the principal church of Nicomedia, which was fituated on an eminence in the most populous and beautiful part of the city. The doors were infantly broke open; they rushed into the fanctuary; and as they fearched in vain for some visible object of worship, they were obliged to content themselves with committing to the slames the volumes of holy scripture. The ministers of Diocletian were followed by a numerous body of guards and pioneers, who marched discover, is the devotion and jealoufy of the Boze. Mem. de l'Academie des Inscriptions, mother of Galerius. She is described by Lactantius, as Deorum montium cultrix; mulier fluence over her fon, and was offended by the difregard of fome of her Christian fervants.

149 The worship and fellival of the God stitute præfectus.

147 The only circumftance which we can Terminus are elegantly illustrated by M. de toni, i. p. 50.

150 In our only MS. of Lactantius, we read admodum superstitiosa. She had a great in- professus; but reason, and the authority of all the critics, allow us, inflead of that word, which deltroys the fense of the passage, to subin order of battle, and were provided with all the inflruments used CHAP. in the destruction of fortified cities. By their incessant labour, a facred edifice, which towered above the Imperial palace, and had long excited the indignation and envy of the Gentiles, was in a few hours levelled with the ground "5".

tians. bruary.

The next day the general edict of perfecution was published 152; The first and though Diocletian, fill averse to the effusion of blood, had mo- the Chrisderated the fury of Galerius, who proposed, that every one refusing tans. to offer facrifice, should immediately be burnt alive, the penalties inflicted on the obstinacy of the Christians might be deemed fusficiently rigorous and effectual. It was enacted, that their churches, in all the provinces of the empire, should be demolished to their foundations; and the punishment of death was denounced against all who should presume to hold any secret assemblies for the purpole of religious worship. The philosophers, who now assumed the unworthy office of directing the blind zeal of perfecution, had diligently studied the nature and genius of the Christian religion; and as they were not ignorant that the speculative doctrines of the faith were supposed to be contained in the writings of the prophets, of the evangelists, and of the apostles, they most probably suggested the order, that the bishops and presbyters should deliver all their facred books into the hands of the magistrates; who were commanded, under the feverest penalties, to burn them in a public and folemn manner. By the fame edict, the property of the church was at once conficated; and the feveral parts of which it might confift, were either fold to the highest bidder, united to the Imperial domain, bestowed on the cities and corporations, or granted to the folicitations of rapacious courtiers. After taking fuch effec-

151 Lactantius de M. P. c: 12, gives a very has collected a very just and accurate notion of lively picture of the destruction of the church. this edict; though he sometimes deviates into

<sup>152</sup> Mosheim (p. 922-926.), from many conjecture and refinement. feattered paffages of Lactantius and Eufebius,

C H A P. tual measures to abolish the worship, and to dissolve the government, of the Christians, it was thought necessary to subject to the most intolerable hardships the condition of those perverse individuals who should still reject the religion of Nature, of Rome, and of their ancestors. Persons of a liberal birth were declared incapable of holding any honours or employments; flaves were for ever deprived of the hopes of freedom, and the whole body of the people were put out of the protection of the law. The judges were authorized to hear and to determine every action that was brought against a Christian. But the Christians were not permitted to complain of any injury which they themselves had suffered; and thus those unfortunate fectaries were exposed to the feverity, while they were excluded from the benefits, of public justice. This new species of martyrdom, fo painful and lingering, fo obscure and ignominious, was, perhaps, the most proper to weary the constancy of the faithful: nor can it be doubted that the passions and interest of mankind were disposed on this occasion to second the designs of the emperors. But the policy of a well-ordered government must fometimes have interpofed in behalf of the oppressed Christians; nor was it possible for the Roman princes entirely to remove the apprehension of punishment, or to connive at every act of fraud and violence, without exposing their own authority and the rest of their subjects to the most alarming dangers 153.

Zeal and punishment of a Christian.

This edict was fearcely exhibited to the public view, in the most conspicuous place of Nicomedia, before it was torn down by the hands of a Christian, who expressed, at the same time, by the bitterest invectives, his contempt as well as abhorrence for such impious and tyrannical governors. His offence, according to the mildest laws, amounted to treason, and deserved death. And if it

Many ages afterwards, Edward I. prac- See Hume's History of England, vol. i. p. 300. tifed, with great fuccess, the same mode of last 4to edition. perfecution against the clergy of England, be true that he was a person of rank and education, those circum- CHAP. flances could ferve only to aggravate his guilt. He was burnt, or rather roafted, by a flow fire; and his executioners, zealous to revenge the personal infult which had been offered to the emperors. exhausted every refinement of cruelty, without being able to subdue his patience, or to alter the fleady and infulting fmile which in his dying agonies he still preserved in his countenance. The Christians, though they confessed that his conduct had not been strictly conformable to the laws of prudence, admired the divine fervour of his zeal; and the excessive commendations which they lavished on the memory of their hero and martyr, contributed to fix a deep impression of terror and hatred in the mind of Diocletian 154.

His fears were foon alarmed by the view of a danger from which Fire of the he very narrowly escaped. Within fifteen days the palace of Nicomedia, and even the bedchamber of Diocletian, were twice in flames; puted to the Christians, and though both times they were extinguished without any material damage, the fingular repetition of the fire was justly confidered as an evident proof that it had not been the effect of chance or negligence. The fufpicion naturally fell on the Christians; and it was fuggefted, with fome degree of probability, that those desperate fanatics, provoked by their prefent fufferings, and apprehensive of impending calamities, had entered into a conspiracy with their faithful brethren, the eunuchs of the palace, against the lives of two emperors, whom they detefted as the irreconcilable enemies of the church of God. Jealoufy and refentment prevailed in every breast, but especially in that of Diocletian. A great number of perfons, diffinguished either by the offices which they had filled, or by the favour which they had enjoyed, were thrown into prison.

comedia im-

154 Lactantius only calls him quidam, etfi to mention his name; but the Greeks cele-

non recte, magno tamen animo, &c. c. 12. brate his memory under that of John. See Eusebius (l. viii. c. 5.) adorns him with se- Tillemont, Memoires Ecclesiastiques, tom. v. cular honours. Neither have condescended part ii. p. 320.

CHAP. Every mode of torture was put in practice, and the court, as well as city, was polluted with many bloody executions 155. But as it was found impossible to extort any discovery of this mysterious transaction, it seems incumbent on us either to presume the innocence, or to admire the refolution, of the sufferers. A few days afterwards Galerius haftily withdrew himfelf from Nicomedia, declaring, that if he delayed his departure from that devoted palace, he should fall a facrifice to the rage of the Christians. The ecclefiastical hiftorians, from whom alone we derive a partial and imperfect knowledge of this perfecution, are at a lofs how to account for the fears and danger of the emperors. Two of these writers, a Prince and a Rhetorician, were eye-witnesses of the fire of Nicomedia. The one ascribes it to lightning, and the divine wrath; the other assirms, that it was kindled by the malice of Galerius himself 156.

Execution of the first edict

As the edicts against the Christians was designed for a general law of the whole empire, and as Diocletian and Galerius, though they might not wait for the confent, were affured of the concurrence. of the western princes, it would appear more consonant to our ideas of policy, that the governors of all the provinces should have received fecret inftructions to publish, on one and the fame day, this declaration of war within their respective departments. It was at least to be expected, that the convenience of the public highways and established posts would have enabled the emperors to transmit their orders with the utmost dispatch from the palace of Nicomedia to the extremities of the Roman world; and that they would not have fuffered fifty days to elapfe, before the edict was published titlimi quondam Eunuchi necati, per quos Palatium et ipse conslabat. Eusebius (l. viii. c. 6.) mentions the cruel executions of the eunuchs, Gorgonius and Dorotheus, and of Anthimius, bishop of Nicomedia; and both those writers describe, in a vague but tragi-

<sup>155</sup> Lactantius de M. P. c. 13, 14. Poten- cal manner, the horrid feenes which were acted even in the Imperial prefence.

<sup>156</sup> See Lactantius, Eusebius, and Constantine, ad Cœtum Sanctorum, c. 25. Eusebins confesses his ignorance of the cause of

in Syria, and near four months before it was fignified to the cities CHAP. of Africa 157. This delay may perhaps be imputed to the cautious temper of Diocletian, who had yielded a reluctant confent to the measures of persecution, and who was desirous of trying the experiment under his more immediate eye, before he gave way to the diforders and discontent which it must inevitably occasion in the distant provinces. At first, indeed, the magistrates were reftrained from the effusion of blood; but the use of every other feverity was permitted and even recommended to their zeal; nor could the Christians, though they cheerfully refigned the ornaments of their churches, refolve to interrupt their religious affemblies, or to deliver their facred books to the flames. The pious obflinacy of Felix, an African bishop, appears to have embarrassed the subordinate ministers of the government. The curator of his city fent him in chains to the proconful. The proconful transmitted him to the Prætorian præfect of Italy; and Felix, who disdained even to give an evafive answer, was at length beheaded at Venusia, in Lucania, a place on which the birth of Horace has conferred fame 158. This precedent, and perhaps fome Imperial refeript, which was iffued in confequence of it, appeared to authorize the governors of provinces, in punishing with death the refusal of the Christians to deliver up their facred books. There were undoubtedly many perfors who embraced this opportunity of obtaining the crown of martyrdom; but there were likewife too many who purchased an ignominious life, by discovering and betraying the holy scripture into the hands of infidels. A great number even of bishops and preflyters acquired, by this criminal compliance, the opprobrious epithet of Traditors; and their offence was productive of much those of Fœlix of Thibara, or Tibiur, ap-

157 Tillemont, Memoires Ecclefiast. tom. v. pear much less corrupted than in the other editions, which afford a lively specimen of present

<sup>155</sup> See the Acta Sincera of Ruinart, p. 353; legendary licence.

of the churches.

CHAP. XVI. Demolition

present scandal, and of much future discord, in the African Church 159.

The copies, as well as the versions of scripture, were already so multiplied in the empire, that the most severe inquisition could no longer be attended with any fatal confequences; and even the facrifice of those volumes, which, in every congregation, were preferved for public use, required the consent of some treacherous and unworthy Christians. But the ruin of the churches was easily effected by the authority of the government, and by the labour of the Pagans. In some provinces, however, the magistrates contented themselves with shutting up the places of religious worship. In others, they more literally complied with the terms of the edict; and after taking away the doors, the benches, and the pulpit, which they burnt, as it were in a funeral pile, they completely demolished the remainder of the edifice 160. It is perhaps to this melancholy occasion, that we should apply a very remarkable story, which is related with fo many circumstances of variety and improbability, that it serves rather to excite than to satisfy our curiosity. In a small town in Phrygia, of whose name as well as situation we are left ignorant, it should feem, that the magistrates and the body of the people had embraced the Christian faith; and as some refistance might be apprehended to the execution of the edict, the governor of the province was supported by a numerous detachment of legionaries. On their approach the citizens threw themfelves into the church, with the refolution either of defending by arms that facred edifice, or of perifhing in its ruins. They ings of the governors in the destruction of apparel. churches. They made a minute inventory of 159 See the first book of Optatus of Milevis the plate, &c. which they found in them. against the Donatists at Paris, 1700. Edit. That of the church of Cirta, in Numidia, is Dupin. He lived under the reign of Valens. still extant. It consisted of two chalices of the The ancient monuments, published at gold, and fix of filver; fix urns, one kettle, the end of Optatus, p. 261, &c. deferibe, in feven lamps, all likewife of filver; befides a very circumstantial manner, the proceed-large quantity of brafs utenfils, and wearing indignantly rejected the notice and permission which was given CHAP. them, to retire, till the foldiers, provoked by their obstinate refusal, fet fire to the building on all fides, and confumed, by this extraordinary kind of martyrdom, a great number of Phrygians with their wives and children 161.

indignantly

Some flight diffurbances, though they were suppressed almost as Subsequent foon as excited, in Syria and the frontiers of Armenia, afforded the enemies of the church a very plaufible occasion to infinuate, that those troubles had been fecretly fomented by the intrigues of the bishops, who had already forgotten their oftentatious professions of passive and unlimited obedience 162. The refentment, or the fears, of Diocletian, at length transported him beyond the bounds of moderation, which he had hitherto preferved, and he declared, in a feries of cruel edicts, his intention of abolishing the Christian name. By the first of these edicas, the governors of the provinces were directed to apprehend all persons of the ecclesiastical order; and the prisons, destined for the vilest criminals, were soon filled with a multitude of bishops, presbyters, deacons, readers, and exorcists. By a fecond edict, the magistrates were commanded to employ every method of feverity, which might reclaim them from their odious fuperstition, and oblige them to return to the established worship of the gods. This rigorous order was extended, by a fubfequent

161 Lactantius (Inflitut. Divin. v. 11.) confines the calamity to the conventiculum, with its congregation. Eufebius (viii. 11.) extends it to a whole city, and introduces fomething very like a regular fiege. His ancient Latin translator, Rufinus, adds the important circumstance of the permission given to the inhabitants of retiring from thence. As Phrygia reached to the confines of Isauria, it is possible that the restless temper of those independent Barbarians may have contributed to this misfortune.

162 Eusebius, 1. viii. c. 6. M. de Valois (with some probability) thinks that he has discovered the Syrian rebellion in an oration of Libanius; and that it was a rash attempt of the tribune Eugenius, who with only five hundred men feized Antioch, and might perhaps allure the Christians by the promise of religious toleration. From Eusebius (l. ix. c. 8.) as well as from Mofes of Chorene (Hift. Armen. 1. ii. c. 77, &c.) it may be inferred, that Christianity was already intro-

VOL. I.

4 T

edict.

CHAP. edict, to the whole body of Christians, who were exposed to a violent and general persecution 163. Instead of those falutary restraints, which had required the direct and folemn testimony of an accuser, it became the duty as well as interest of the Imperial officers, to discover, to pursue, and to torment, the most obnoxious among the faithful. Heavy penalties were denounced against all who should prefume to fave a profcribed fectary from the just indignation of the gods, and of the emperors. Yet, notwithstanding the severity of this law, the virtuous courage of many of the Pagans, in concealing their friends or relations, affords an honourable proof, that the rage of superstition had not extinguished in their minds the sentiments of nature and humanity 164.

General idea of the perfecution

Diocletian had no fooner published his edicts against the Christians, than, as if he had been desirous of committing to other hands the work of perfecution, he divested himself of the Imperial purple. The character and fituation of his colleagues and fucceffors fometimes urged them to enforce, and fometimes inclined them to fuspend, the execution of these rigorous laws; nor can we acquire a just and distinct idea of this important period of ecclefiaffical history, unless we separately consider the state of Christianity, in the different parts of the empire, during the space of ten years, which elapfed between the first edicts of Diocletian, and the final peace of the church.

in the western provinces under Constantius and Conftantine;

The mild and humane temper of Constantius was averse to the oppression of any part of his subjects. The principal offices of his palace were exercised by Christians. He loved their persons, esteemed their fidelity, and entertained not any diflike to their religious principles. But as long as Conftantius remained in the subordinate febius very plainly shews, that the governors, their brethren.

whose powers were enlarged, not restrained, by the new laws, could punish with death the Mem. Ecclesiast. tom. v. part i. p. 90.

<sup>163</sup> See Mosheim, p. 938; the text of Eu-most obstinate Christians, as an example to

<sup>164</sup> Athanasius, p. 833, ap. Tillemont, flation of Cæsar, it was not in his power openly to reject the edicts CHAP. of Diocletian, or to disobey the commands of Maximian. His authority contributed, however, to alleviate the fufferings which he pitied and abhorred. He confented, with reluctance, to the ruin of the churches; but he ventured to protect the Christians themselves from the fury of the populace, and from the rigour of the laws. The provinces of Gaul (under which we may probably include those of Britain) were indebted for the fingular tranquillity which they enjoyed, to the gentle interpolition of their fovereign 165. But Datianus, the prefident or governor of Spain, actuated either by zeal or policy, chose rather to execute the public edicts of the emperors, than to understand the secret intentions of Constantius; and it can fcarcely be doubted, that his provincial administration was stained with the blood of a few martyrs 166. The elevation of Constantius to the supreme and independent dignity of Augustus, gave a free scope to the exercise of his virtues, and the shortness of his reign did not prevent him from establishing a system of toleration, of which he left the precept and the example to his fon Constantine. His fortunate fon, from the first moment of his accession, declaring himself the protector of the church, at length deserved the appellation of the first emperor, who publickly professed and established the Christian religion. The motives of his conversion, as they may variously be deduced from benevolence, from policy, from convic-

M. P. c. 15. Dodwell (Differtat. Cyprian. xi. 75.) represents them as inconfistent with each other. But the former evidently speaks of Constantius in the station of Cæsar, and the latter of the same prince in the rank of Augustus.

266 Datianus is mentioned in Gruter's Infcriptions, as having determined the limits between the territories of Pax Julia, and those of Ebora, both cities in the fouthern part of Lufitania. If we recollect the neighbourhood

168 Eusebius, I. viii. c. 13. Lactantius de of those places to Cape St. Vincent, we may fuspect that the celebrated deacon and martyr of that name has been inaccurately affigned by Prudentius, &c. to Saragossa, or Valentia. See the pompous history of his sufferings, in the Memoires de Tillemont, tom. v. part ii. p. 58-85. Some critics are of opinion, that the department of Constantius, as Cæsar, did not include Spain, which still continued under the immediate jurisdiction of Maximian.

CHAP. tion, or from remorfe; and the progress of the revolution, which, under his powerful influenc eand that of his fons, rendered Christianity the reigning religion of the Roman empire, will form a very interesting and important chapter in the second volume of this history. At prefent it may be sufficient to observe, that every victory of Constantine was productive of some relief or benefit to the church.

in Italy and Africa, under and Severus;

The provinces of Italy and Africa experienced a short but violent perfecution. The rigorous edicts of Diocletian were strictly and cheerfully executed by his affociate Maximian, who had long hated the Christians, and who delighted in acts of blood and violence. In the autumn of the first year of the perfecution, the two emperors met at Rome to celebrate their triumph; feveral oppressive laws appear to have issued from their secret consultations, and the diligence of the magistrates was animated by the presence of their fovereigns. After Diocletian had divested himself of the purple, Italy and Africa were administered under the name of Severus, and were exposed, without defence, to the implacable resentment of his master Galerius. Among the martyrs of Rome, Adauctus deserves the notice of posterity. He was of a noble family in Italy, and had raifed himfelf, through the fuccessive honours of the palace, to the important office of treasurer of the private demesnes. Adauctus is the more remarkable for being the only perfon of rank and diffinction who appears to have fuffered death, during the whole course of this general persecution 167.

under Max-

The revolt of Maxentius immediately restored peace to the churches of Italy and Africa; and the fame tyrant, who oppreffed every other class of his subjects, shewed himself just, humane, and even partial, towards the afflicted Christians. He depended on their gratitude and affection, and very naturally prefumed, that the injuries

<sup>167</sup> Eusebius, I. viii. c. 11. Gruter. In- taken the office of Adauctus as well as the feript. p. 1171. No. 18. Rufinus has mif- place of his martyrdom.

injuries which they had fuffered, and the dangers which they still CHAP. apprehended, from his most inveterate enemy, would secure the fidelity of a party already confiderable by their numbers and opulence 168. Even the conduct of Maxentius towards the bishops of Rome and Carthage, may be confidered as the proof of his toleration, fince it is probable that the most orthodox princes would adopt the fame measures with regard to their established clergy. Marcellus, the former of those prelates, had thrown the capital into confusion, by the fevere pennance which he imposed on a great number of Christians, who, during the late persecution, had renounced or diffembled their religion. The rage of faction broke out in frequent and violent feditions; the blood of the faithful was fhed by each other's hands, and the exile of Marcellus, whose prudence feems to have been less eminent than his zeal, was found to be the only measure capable of restoring peace to the distracted church of Rome 169. The behaviour of Menfurius, bishop of Carthage, appears to have been still more reprehensible. A deacon of that city had published a libel against the emperor. The offender took refuge in the epifcopal palace, and though it was fomewhat early to advance any claims of ecclefiaftical immunities, the bifhop refused to deliver him up to the officers of justice. For this treasonable refistance, Mensurius was summoned to court, and instead of 168 Eufebius, I. viii. c. 14. But as Maxentius was vanquithed by Conftantine, it fuited the purpose of Lactantius to place his death among those of the persecutors.

169 The epitaph of Marcellus is to be found in Gruter, Infeript. p. 1172. No. 3. and it contains all that we know of his hiltory. Marcellinus and Marcellus, whose names follow in the lift of popes, are supposed by many critics to be different persons; but the learned Abbé de Longuerue was convinced that they were one and the same.

Veridicus roder lapfis quia crimina flere Prædixit miferis, fuit omnibus hostis amarus.

Hinc furor, hinc odium; fequitur difcordia, lites,

Seditio, cades; folvuntur fædera pacis.

Crimen ob alterius, Christum qui in pace negavit

Finibus expulsus patriæ est feritate Tyranni. Hæc breviter Damasus voluit comperta referre:

Marcelli populus meritum cognoscere posset. We may observe that Damasus was made bishop of Rome, A.D. 366.

receiving

CHAP. receiving a legal fentence of death or banishment, he was permitted. after a fhort examination, to return to his diocese 170. was the happy condition of the Christian subjects of Maxentius, that whenever they were defirous of procuring for their own use any bodies of martyrs, they were obliged to purchase them from the most distant provinces of the East. A story is related of Aglae, a Roman lady, descended from a consular family, and possessed of fo ample an effate, that it required the management of feventy-three flewards. Among these, Boniface was the favourite of his mistress; and as Aglae mixed love with devotion, it is reported that he was admitted to share her bed. Her fortune enabled her to gratify the pious desire of obtaining some sacred relics from the East. intrusted Boniface with a confiderable fum of gold, and a large quantity of aromatics; and her lover, attended by twelve horsemen and three covered chariots, undertook a remote pilgrimage, as far as Tarfus in Cilicia '7'.

in Illyricum and the East under Galerius and Maximin.

The fanguinary temper of Galerius, the first and principal author of the perfecution, was formidable to those Christians, whom their misfortunes had placed within the limits of his dominions: and it may fairly be prefumed, that many perfons of a middle rank, who were not confined by the chains either of wealth or of poverty. very frequently deferted their native country, and fought a refuge in the milder climate of the West. As long as he commanded only the armies and provinces of Illyricum, he could with difficulty either find or make a confiderable number of martyrs, in a warlike country, which had entertained the missionaries of the gospel with more coldness and reluctance than any other part of the empire 172. But 170 Optatus contr. Donatift. 1. i. c. 17, 18. exift few traces of either bishops or bishoprics in the western Illyricum. It has been thought probable that the primate of Milan extended his jurisdiction over Sirmium, the capital of that great province. See the Geographia Sacra of Charles de St. Paul, p. 68 - 76, with when Galerius had obtained the fupreme power and the government of the East, he indulged in their fullest extent his zeal and cruelty, not only in the provinces of Thrace and Afia, which acknowledged his immediate jurisdiction; but in those of Syria, Palestine, and Egypt, where Maximin gratified his own inclination, by yielding a rigorous obedience to the stern commands of his benefactor 173. The frequent disappointments of his ambitious views, the experience of fix years of perfecution, and the falutary reflections which a lingering and painful distemper suggested to the mind of Galerius, at length convinced him that the most violent efforts of despotism are infufficient to extirpate a whole people, or to subdue their religious prejudices. Desirous of repairing the mischief that he had occasioned, he published in his own name, and in those of Licinius and Constantine, a general edict, which, after a pompous recital of the Imperial titles, proceeded in the following manner.

<sup>171</sup> The Acts of the Passion of St. Boniface, which abound in miracles and declamation, are published by Ruinart, (p. 283-291.) both in Greek and Latin, from the authority of very ancient manufcripts.

<sup>172</sup> During the four first centuries, there the observations of Lucas Holsterius.

" Among the important cares which have occupied our mind for Galerius "the utility and prefervation of the empire, it was our intention to publishes an edict of to-" correct and re-establish all things according to the ancient laws leration. " and public discipline of the Romans. We were particularly " defirous of reclaiming, into the way of reason and nature, the " deluded Christians who had renounced the religion and cere-" monies instituted by their fathers; and prefumptuously despising " the practice of antiquity, had invented extravagant laws and " opinions according to the dictates of their fancy, and had col-" lected a various fociety from the different provinces of our em-" pire. The edicts which we have published to enforce the wor-" fhip of the gods, having exposed many of the Christians to danger " and distress, many having suffered death, and many more, who

<sup>173</sup> The viith book of Eusebius, as well as mentations with which Lactantius opens the the fupplement concerning the martyrs of Pa- vth book of his Divine Inflitutions, allude to lestine, principally relate to the perfecution of their cruelty. Galerius and Maximin. The general la-

CHAP. " ftill perfift in their impious folly, being left destitute of any " public exercise of religion, we are disposed to extend to those " unhappy men the effects of our wonted elemency. We permit " them therefore freely to profess their private opinions, and " to assemble in their conventicles without fear or molestation. " provided always that they preserve a due respect to the established " laws and government. By another refeript we shall fignify our " intentions to the judges and magistrates; and we hope that our " indulgence will engage the Christians to offer up their prayers to " the deity whom they adore, for our fafety and prosperity, for " their own, and for that of the republic '74." It is not usually in the language of edicts and manifestos, that we should fearch for the real character or the fecret motives of princes; but as these were the words of a dying emperor, his fituation, perhaps, may be admitted as a pledge of his fincerity.

Peace of the

When Galerius subscribed this edict of toleration, he was well affured that Licinius would readily comply with the inclinations of his friend and benefactor, and that any measures in favour of the Christians, would obtain the approbation of Constantine. But the emperor would not venture to infert in the preamble the name of Maximin, whose confent was of the greatest importance, and who fucceeded a few days afterwards to the provinces of Afia. In the first fix months, however, of his new reign, Maximin affected to adopt the prudent counfels of his predeceffor; and though he never condefcended to fecure the tranquillity of the church by a public edict, Sabinus, his Prætorian præfect, addressed a circular letter to all the governors and magistrates of the provinces, expatiating on the Imperial elemency, acknowledging the invincible obstinacy of the

174 Eufebius (I. viii. c. 17.) has given us a collect how directly it contradicts whatever Greek version, and Lactantius (de M. P. c. they have just assirmed of the remorfe and re-34.), the Latin original, of this memorable pentance of Galerius. edict. Neither of these writers seem to re-

Christians.

Christians, and directing the officers of justice to cease their ineffectual C H A P. profecutions, and to connive at the fecret affemblies of those enthufialts. In confequence of these orders, great numbers of Christians were released from prison, or delivered from the mines. The confesfors, singing hymns of triumph, returned into their own countries; and those who had yielded to the violence of the tempest. folicited with tears of repentance their re-admission into the bosom of the church 175,

But this treacherous calm was of flort duration, nor could the Maximin Christians of the East place any confidence in the character of their prepares to fovereign. Cruelty and superstition were the ruling passions of the persecution. foul of Maximin. The former fuggested the means, the latter pointed out the objects, of perfecution. The emperor was devoted to the worship of the gods, to the study of magic, and to the belief of oracles. The prophets or philosophers, whom he revered as the favourites of heaven, were frequently raifed to the government of provinces, and admitted into his most fecret councils. eafily convinced him, that the Christians had been indebted for their victories to their regular discipline, and that the weakness of polytheifm had principally flowed from a want of union and fubordination among the ministers of religion. A fystem of government was therefore inflituted, which was evidently copied from the policy of the church. In all the great cities of the empire, the temples were repaired and beautified by the order of Maximin; and the officiating priests of the various deities were subjected to the authority of a superior pontiff, destined to oppose the bishop, and to promote the cause of paganism. These pontiffs acknowledged, in their turn, the supreme jurisdiction of the metropolitans or high-priests of the province, who acted as the immediate vicegerents of the emperor himself. A white robe was the ensign of their dignity; and 175 Eusebius, l. ix. c. 1. He inserts the epistle of the prafect.

C H A P. these new prelates were carefully selected from the most noble and opulent families. By the influence of the magistrates, and of the facerdotal order, a great number of dutiful addresses were obtained, particularly from the cities of Nicomedia, Antioch, and Tyre, which artfully represented the well known intentions of the court as the general fense of the people; solicited the emperor to consult the laws of justice rather than the dictates of his elemency; expressed their abhorrence of the Christians, and humbly prayed that those impious fecturies might at least be excluded from the limits of their respective territories. The answer of Maximin to the address which he obtained from the citizens of Tyre is still extant. He praises their zeal and devotion in terms of the highest satisfaction, descants on the obstinate impicty of the Christians, and betrays, by the readiness with which he confents to their banishment, that he considered himfelf as receiving, rather than as conferring, an obligation. The priefts as well as the magistrates were empowered to enforce the execution of his edicts, which were engraved on tables of brafs; and though it was recommended to them to avoid the effusion of blood, the most cruel and ignominious punishments were inflicted on the refractory Christians 176.

End of the perfecutions.

The Afiatic Christians had every thing to dread from the feverity of a bigotted monarch, who prepared his measures of violence with fuch deliberate policy. But a few months had fcarcely elapfed, before the edicts published by the two western emperors obliged Maximin to suspend the profecution of his designs: the civil war which he fo rashly undertook against Licinius employed all his attention; and the defeat and death of Maximin foon delivered the church from the last and most implacable of her enemies 177.

In

 176 See Eusebius, I. viii. c. 14. I. ix. c. several martyrs, while the latter expressly 2–8. La@antius de M. P. c. 36. These affirms, occidi servos Dei vetuit. writers agree in reprefenting the arts of Maximin: but the former relates the execution of lished a very ample edict of toleration, in which

699

XVI. Probable account of the fufferings of the martyrs and confes-

In this general view of the perfecution, which was first authorized by the edicts of Diocletian, I have purposely refrained from describing the particular fufferings and deaths of the Christian martyrs. It would have been an easy task, from the history of Eusebius, from the declamations of Lactantius, and from the most ancient acts, to collect a long feries of horrid and difguftful pictures, and to fill many pages with racks and fcourges, with iron hooks, and red hot beds, and with all the variety of tortures which fire and fteel, favage beafts and more favage executioners, could inflict on the human body. These melancholy scenes might be enlivened by a crowd of visions and miracles destined either to delay the death, to celebrate the triumph, or to discover the relics, of those canonized faints who fuffered for the name of Christ. But I cannot determine what I ought to transcribe, till I am fatisfied how much I ought to believe. The gravest of the ecclesiastical historians, Eusebius himself, indirectly confesses, that he has related whatever might redound to the glory, and that he has suppressed all that could tend to the disgrace, of religion 178. Such an acknowledgment will naturally excite a suspicion that a writer who has fo openly violated one of the fundamental laws of history, has not paid a very strict regard to the observance of the other: and the fuspicion will derive additional credit from the character of Eusebius, which was less tinctured with credulity, and more practifed in the arts of courts, than that of almost any of his contemporaries. On some particular occasions, when the magiffrates were exasperated by some personal motives of interest or refentment, when the zeal of the martyrs urged them to forget the markable passages in Eusebius, I. viii. c. 2. in his lifetime, and even in his presence, at and de Martyr. Palestin, c. 12. The pru- the council of Tyre. Se Fillen ont, M - which he imputes all the feverities which the character to censure and suspicion. It was Christians suffered to the judges and govern- well known that he himself had been thrown ors, who had mifunderflood his intentions, into prifon; and it was fuggested that he had purchased his deliverance by some dishonour-475 Such is the fair deduction from two re- able compliance. The represent was urged dence of the historian has exposed his own moires Ecclefialliques, com, viii, part i. p. 7.

See the Edict in Eufebius, I. ix. c. 10.

C H A P. rules of prudence and perhaps of decency, to overturn the altars, to pour out imprecations against the emperors, or to strike the judge as he fat on his tribunal, it may be prefumed that every mode of torture, which cruelty could invent or conftancy could endure, was exhausted on those devoted victims 179. Two circumstances, however, have been unwarily mentioned, which infinuate that the general treatment of the Christians who had been apprehended by the officers of juffice was less intolerable than it is usually imagined to have been. 1. The confessors who were condemned to work in the mines, were permitted, by the humanity or the negligence of their keepers, to build chapels, and freely to profess their religion in the midft of those dreary habitations 180. 2. The bishops were obliged to check and to censure the forward zeal of the Christians, who voluntarily threw themselves into the hands of the magistrates. Some of these were persons oppressed by poverty and debts, who blindly sought to terminate a miserable existence by a glorious death. Others were allured by the hope, that a fhort confinement would expiate the fins of a whole life; and others again were actuated by the lefs honourable motive of deriving a plentiful subsistence, and perhaps a considerable profit, from the alms which the charity of the faithful beflowed on the prisoners 181. After the church had triumphed over all her enemies, the interest as well as vanity of the captives prompted them to magnify the merit of their respective suffering. A convenient distance of time or place gave an ample scope to the progress of fiction; and the frequent inflances which might be alleged of holy martyrs, whose wounds had been inftantly healed, whose strength had C H A P. been renewed, and whose lost members had miraculously been reflored, were extremely convenient for the purpole of removing every difficulty, and of filencing every objection. The most extravagant legends, as they conduced to the honour of the church, were applauded by the credulous multitude, countenanced by the power of the clergy, and attested by the suspicious evidence of ecclesiastical history.

<sup>179</sup> The ancient, and perhaps authentic, Palestin. c. 5. account of the fufferings of Tarachus, and his companions (Acta Sincera Ruinart, p. 419-448), is filled with firong expressions of resentment and contempt, which could not fail of irritating the magistrate. The behaviour of versy with the Donatists has reslected some, Ædesius to Hierocles, præsect of Egypt, was though perhaps a partial, light on the history fill more extraordinary, yoyou TE MON ECYOIS TOP δικατην . . . ειριθαλαν. Eufeb. de Martyr.

<sup>180</sup> Eufeb. de Martyr. Paleftin. c. 13.

<sup>1 1</sup> Augustin, Collat, Carthagin, Dei, iii. c. 13. ap. Tillemont, Memoires Ecclefiaftiques, tom. v. part i. p. 46. The controof the African church.

martyrs.

The vague descriptions of exile and imprisonment, of pain and Number of torture, are fo eafily exaggerated or foftened by the pencil of an artful orator, that we are naturally induced to inquire into a fact of a more diffinct and stubborn kind; the number of persons who fuffered death in consequence of the edicts published by Diocletian, his affociates, and his fucceffors. The recent legendaries record whole armies and cities, which were at once fwept away by the undiffinguishing rage of perfecution. The more antient writers content themselves with pouring out a liberal effusion of loose and tragical invectives, without condescending to ascertain the precise number of those persons who were permitted to seal with their blood their belief of the gospel. From the history of Eusebius, it may however be collected, that only nine bishops were punished with death; and we are affured, by his particular enumeration of the martyrs of Palestine, that no more than ninety-two Christians were entitled to that honourable appellation 182. As we are unacquainted with the degree

of

these were the martyrdoms inflicted in Palestine, during the aubole course of the perfecution. The vth chapter of his viiith book, which relates to the province of Thebais in Egypt, may feem to contradict our moderate computation; but it will only lead us to admire the artful management of the historian.

1'2 Eusebius de Martyr. Palestin. c. 13. cruelty, the most remote and sequestered He closes his narration, by assuring us that country of the Roman empire, he relates; that in Thebais, from ten to one hundred persons had frequently suffered martyrdom in: the same day. But when he proceeds to mention his own journey into Egypt, his language infenfibly becomes more cautious and moderate. Instead of a large, but definite number, he speaks of many Christians ( DARR ) ; Chusing for the scene of the most exquisite and most artfully selects two ambiguous words

CHAP. of episcopal zeal and courage which prevailed at that time, it is not in our power to draw any useful inferences from the former of these facts: but the latter may ferve to justify a very important and probable conclusion. According to the distribution of Roman provinces, Palestine may be considered as the fixteenth part of the Eastern empire 183; and fince there were fome governors, who from a real or affected clemency had preferved their hands unstained with the blood of the faithful 184, it is reasonable to believe, that the country which had given birth to Christianity produced at least the fixteenth part of the martyrs who fuffered death within the dominions of Galerius and Maximin; the whole might confequently amount to about fifteen hundred, a number which, if it is equally divided between the ten years of the perfecution, will allow an annual confumption of one hundred and fifty martyrs. Allotting the fame proportion to the provinces of Italy, Africa, and perhaps Spain, where, at the end of two or three years, the rigour of the penal laws was either fuspended or abolished, the multitude of Christians in the Roman empire on whom a capital punishment was inflicted by a judicial fentence will be reduced to fomewhat lefs than two thousand persons. Since it cannot be doubted that the Christians were more numerous, and their enemies more exasperated, in the time of Diocletian than they had ever been in any former perfecution, this probable and > (150gnoaper, and υπομενανται) which may fignify either what he had feen, or what he had heard; either the expectation, or the execution, of the punishment. Having thus provided a secure evasion, he commits the equivocal paffage to his readers and translators; justly conceiving that their piety would induce them to prefer the most favourable sense. There was perhaps some malice in the remark of Theodorus Metochita, that all who, like Eusebius, had been conversant with the Egyptians, delighted in an obscure and in- Divin. v. 11. tricate ftyle. (See Valefius ad loc.)

- 183 When Palestine was divided into three, the præfecture of the east contained fortyeight provinces. As the ancient diffinctions of nations were long fince abolished, the Romans distributed the provinces, according to a general proportion of their extent and opulence.
- 1 4 Ut gloriari possint nullum se innocentium peremisse, nam et ipse audivi aliquos gloriantes, quia administratio sua, in hâc parte, fuerit incruenta. Lactant. Institut.

moderate

moderate computation may teach us to estimate the number of pri- C H A P. mitive faints and martyrs who facrificed their lives for the important purpose of introducing Christianity into the world.

We shall conclude this chapter by a melancholy truth, which ob- Conclusion. trudes itself on the reluctant mind; that even admitting, without hefitation or inquiry, all that history has recorded, or devotion has feigned, on the fubject of martyrdoms, it must still be acknowledged, that the Christians, in the course of their intestine dissensions, have inflicted far greater feverities on each other, than they had experienced from the zeal of infidels. During the ages of ignorance which followed the fubversion of the Roman empire in the West, the bishops of the Imperial city extended their dominion over the laity as well as clergy of the Latin church. The fabric of fuperflition which they had erected, and which might long have defied the feeble efforts of reason, was at length assaulted by a crowd of daring fanatics, who, from the twelfth to the fixteenth century, assumed the popular character of reformers. The church of Rome defended by violence the empire which she had acquired by fraud; a fystem of peace and benevolence was foon difgraced by profcriptions, wars, massacres, and the institution of the holy office. And as the reformers were animated by the love of civil, as well as of religious freedom, the Catholic princes connected their own interest with that of the clergy, and enforced by fire and the fword the terrors of spiritual censures. In the Netherlands alone, more than one hundred thousand of the subjects of Charles the Fifth are faid to have fuffered by the hand of the executioner; and this extraordinary number is attested by Grotius 185, a man of genius and learning, who preferved his moderation amidst the fury of contending fects, and who composed the annals of his own age and country, at a time when the invention of printing had facilitated the means

<sup>625</sup> Grot. Annal. de Rebus Belgicis, 1. i. p. 12. Edit. fol.

CHAP, of intelligence, and increased the danger of detection. If we are obliged to fubmit our belief to the authority of Grotius, it must be allowed, that the number of Protestants, who were executed in a fingle province and a fingle reign, far exceeded that of the primitive martyrs in the space of three centuries, and of the Roman empire. But if the improbability of the fact itself should prevail over the weight of evidence; if Grotius should be convicted of exaggerating the merit and fufferings of the Reformers 186; we shall be naturally led to inquire, what confidence can be placed in the doubtful and imperfect monuments of ancient credulity; what degree of credit can be affigned to a courtly bishop, and a passionate declaimer, who, under the protection of Constantine, enjoyed the exclusive privilege of recording the perfecutions, inflicted on the Christians by the vanquished rivals or difregarded predecessors of their gracious fovereign.

> 186 Fra-Paolo (Istoria del Concilio Tri- The priority of time gives fome advantage to dentino, 1. iii.) reduces the number of Belgic the evidence of the former, which he loses on martyrs to 50,000. In learning and mode- the other hand by the distance of Venice from ration, Fra Paolo was not inferior to Grotius. the Netherlands.

END OF THE FIRST VOLUME.

IN THE CUSTODY OF THE BOSTON PUBLIC LIBRARY.

SHELF Nº

